I am not the representative of the company and care nothing about it, but the citizens of my State, sir, find this Indian reservation in western New York, covering 40 miles of some of the best portions of our land. What it is assessed for to the Indians amounts to nothing. It is worth from forty to fifty and sixty dollars an acre; and it stands there as a block to civilization, ruled by a lot of these leaders, who, of course, want to keep up the tribal relations. Now, Mr. President, we must yield to-night, I suppose, to the Senator who moves this amendment to the amendment. There seems to be no other way. I hope the committee of conference will take care of it and strike that out. I do not think there is anything in the point of order. I am satisfied there is nothing in it, but we want to get home; it is Saturday evening. So let the amendment to the amendment go in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from South Dakota is accepted. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York as amended by the Senator from South Dakota.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I now present the paper to which I referred, a memorial of the Seneca Nation of New York Indians, remonstrating against the adoption of the proposed amendment to the Indian appropriation bill providing for the purchase from the so-called Ogden Land Company all right, title, or interest to lands within the Cattaraugus and Allegany Indian reservations in the State of New York. I ask that it be printed as a document.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8518) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

DEATH OF FREDERICK DOUGLASS.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish to offer a resolution and have it read for information. I shall ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration. If it is to be passed at all it must be passed now.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas in the person of the late Frederick Douglass death has borne away one of our most illustrious fellow-citizens, who served his country long, faithfully, and honorably as citizen, diplomat, and statesman: Therefore, Be it resolved, That out of respect to his memory his remains be permitted to lie in state in the rotunda of the National Capitol between the hours of 10 a. m. and 4 p. m. on to-morrow.

Mr. GORMAN. Let the resolution go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution goes over.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE SHAW.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, I ask that the resolutions recently received from the House of Representatives in reference to the death of Hon. George B. Shaw, late a Representative from Wisconsin, be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KYLE in the chair). The resolutions of the House of Representatives will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, January 13, 1896.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. George B. Shaw, late a Representative from the State of Wisconsin.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the business of the House be now suspended, that his associates may be able to pay proper tribute to his high character and distinguished service.

Resolved, That as an additional mark of respect the House shall at the conclusion of these ceremonies adjourn.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, I offer the resolutions which I send to the desk, and ask for their immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolutions will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with sincere sorrow the announcement of the death of the Hon. George B. Shaw, lately a Representative from the State of Wisconsin.

Resolved, That the business of the Senate be now suspended in order that suitable tribute may be paid to his character and memory.

The resolutions were considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, on the 27th of last August, as the long and trying second session of this Congress was drawing to its close, George B. Shaw, the esteemed Representative of the Seventh Wisconsin district, was called from the ranks of living men. Not long before, while at his post of duty, apparently in the full strength of mid-manhood, handsome in person, robust, vigorous, active, with every sign of promise for long and happy life about him, he had been stricken with a disorder which proved in its course to be mortal. During the weary weeks of the hot summer some subtle and malignant influence assailed and pervaded his system with deadly fever, and although, when fully discerned and realized, he hurried with instinctive yearning to his home, it was too late for a successful resistance.

The invigorating Northern airs, the assiduous care of family and friends, the best medical skill, all were unavailing to stay the progress of disease; he slowly sank to his final change, and from the arms of loving and beloved wife and children, from a circle of attached and cherished friends, from a community with which he had been one from boyhood, from station, success, and bright promise in life, the relentless summoner took him to open the life which begins in death.

He is sincerely mourned by the people of his city, by his many associates in the affairs with which he was connected, by all who knew him. The concourse of his fellow-men at the impressive and imposing obsequies, when his remains were consigned to earth, a throng unprecedented in the city of his residence, well attested the esteem and regard he had won in life, the sorrow his loss spread wide.

In the House of Representatives suitable and appropriate eulogies have been pronounced, and the resolutions of that body were a few days since laid before us. It is befitting, sir, that we suspend for a time the labors which devolve upon the Senate to contemplate—though necessity compels but briefly—the life and character of him who was but a short while since our esteemed associate and fellow-servant in these halls of public duty.

Though not born there, Mr. Shaw was essentially a Wisconsin man, his breeding, education, and all developing associations having been there enjoyed; for he was little more than two years of age when brought with his father's family to the city—then but a mere hamlet—of Eau Claire, where he lived and died. His birthplace was in New York, at Alma, in the county of Allegany; the day of his birth, the 12th of March, 1854.

He was the second son of Daniel Shaw, one of those enterprising, hardy, and long-headed sons of Maine, who penetrated at an early day the forests of northern Wisconsin, and by foresight, industry, and shrewd business sense assisted to distribute their benefits to the Southern and Western prairies and gathered fortunes in the trade.

Eau Claire was in 1856, when Daniel Shaw removed there, a remote settlement in the southern borders of the great woods which spread in almost continuous mass from the waters of Lake Huron over upper Michigan, Wisconsin, and Minnesota. I happened, four years after that date, in the summer of 1860, to be able to see it in its infancy, a business errand taking me there, and it then required a three-days' journey from Madison, the State capital. It was then and still more is now an interesting and beautiful place. The waters of the Chippewa and Eau Claire rivers, descending through long reaches of the dark forests, unite in the center of the town and divide it into three parts or "sides," each of which has come to be the seat of active business and pleasant homes.

In the early days of Mr. Shaw's boyhood it was as charming and picturesque a village as one could wish to see. The hunter, the woodsman, the Indian, with all their natural accompaniments so attractive to the eye and charming to the imagination of hardy youth, were at every hand, in the streets and all the places where affairs went on. Wild honey, venison, the meat of the bear, and game fowls were frequent viands of the table, and the speech of men in social converse turned constantly on adventures in the forest in pursuit of enticing sports or the wild and arduous business prosecuted in lumbering camps and upon the turbulent streams where the logs and rafts were "driven" to civilized use.

No railroad then ran nearer than a hundred and fifty miles, and trade communication was mainly by the Chippewa River, a stream descending to the Mississippi, but uncertain and somewhat perilous for navigation, at times raging with floods and again exposing its sand bars and shoals in summer's droughts.

The business of lumbering dominated every other, but it was a business which demanded of its managers the best qualities of manhood; requiring extensive knowledge both of the deep and distant forests above, with their available waters, and of the markets of the world below; requiring intelligent and shrewd judgment to foresee conditions and conduct operations, with the courage, skill, and manly qualities to govern to profitable advantage the irregular and somewhat wild human elements by which affairs must be carried on. Thus Eau Claire was a town of hope and promise, of activity and enterprise, by force of its location and natural industry; and, though not in easy communication with the outside world, still, not like many secluded towns, self-contained, dull, and plodding, but in sympathetic touch with affairs at large, and responding swiftly and intelligently to all favorable conditions in the developing South and West.

It was to have been expected of such a situation and circumstances that not only would there follow a thriving and prosperous community, where numbers would find gainful service and happy homes, but that there would be men conspicuous for leadership among men, fit to govern business affairs of magnitude, of strong individuality, vigorous personality, keen, clear-sighted, and successful; marked not more by resultant riches than by the characteristics of manhood that attract and control; and so it has been with that stirring, busy, rising town.

No community of equal numbers can surpass her in men of mark and character; few such match her. And among them Daniel Shaw, the father of the late Representative, held high place during life. Beginning with but moderate means he became one among the leading lumbermen, with extensive business relations, and enjoyed general respect and esteem for force of character, abilities, and excellence; one of those citizens whom the community come to regard as the anchorages of its order and prosperity.

Rooted in such circumstances, the character and acquirements of George Shaw grew naturally in keeping with them. The vocation of his father, with its captivations to an enterprising spirit, engaged his early aspirations; his associations with men fixed and confirmed the tendency; and the death of his father while he was yet in early manhood devolved upon him, of necessity, a great share of the government of the lumber-manufacturing business of which the estate was chiefly composed.

His education did not break through this environment, but answered to it. So far as the schools entered into it, his instruction was, as I understand, limited to such opportunities as were afforded by the public provision of Eau Claire—a good graded-school system—and by the more excellent schools at Chicago, whither he was sent for a time. But he enjoyed other sources of education which, if not regular, educating to certificates and diplomas, are exceedingly effective to draw forth and develop the natural gifts and intellectual strength of man for the practical utilities of life.

From early boyhood he had frequent companionship with a class of men in whom manliness rules as a passion—the men who penetrate the recesses of the forest world to sustain privations, to encounter perils, to endure isolation and often long solitude, in order to reach and possess the place of an industry in itself laborious, exacting, and wearing; the soldiers of the wilderness, the pioneer corps of civilization. Dwellers in towns, unfamiliar with these men and drawing conclusions from incidents of habit or individual eccentricities, often speak of them shudderingly as if little better than savages.

This fancy sticks in the bark of a rough exterior; rough as the trunk of the oak is rough, because cold and heat, storm and wind, all the wild elements play upon it. But within is the heart of oak; inspired and stout with courage, fortitude, will, devotion, intelligence, steadfast serenity of purpose, contempt of meanness, humanity, tenderness; the native nobility which will polish like the diamond, and which unpolished the wise man knows for the "gem of purest ray serene."

In occasional intercourse with such men George Shaw had education of character if not of intellect; educating and invigorating the native tendencies with which he was endowed, repressing and subduing, perhaps, some, if ever he had them, of the depravities of inclination which have punished man since his fall. And this education stood him in good stead while life lasted, as it would have done for a life doubly long; winning friends, esteem, confidence, and help; the guerdon of manly excellence and genial fellowship.

But other instruction, more intellectual in kind, came to him in the business counting room, in correspondence, in his reading, and in his intercourse with the best social circles, where he was ever welcome. He gave much study to what are called the practical sciences, or to the arts which growth of scientific knowledge has created. Especially he pursued the study of electricity until he obtained a recognized standing as an electrician.

So it came that, though not in the tone of higher scholarship, yet with clarity and often with force and feeling, Mr. Shaw was capable of excellent and agreeable expression, by tongue and pen; was intelligent in the affairs of the time, and ready in all the intercourse of life; going his way as an active, useful, and competent man of business, a citizen of recognized standing and rising promise, and a gentleman of certain acceptability in social companionship.

His business life was by no means confined to his inherited avocation. He shared in many of the undertakings of his city, occupying places of trust and managing well the affairs of various local corporations. While not great in affairs, or reaching to great accomplishments, he enjoyed a good standing and was accounted worthy of praise for his address, conciliatory temper, upright management, and the general success of his undertakings.

His geniality of temperament and love of companionship, together with the peculiar imaginative faculty which dwells on the ideas of chivalry, engaged him with great zest in the work of the order of the Knights of Pythias, and he devoted great labor during many years to the advancement of that organization, in which his success was deservedly conspicuous. He was of recognized value to the fraternity, pushing its growth, increasing its usefulness, perfecting its laws and methods, and became universally known and honored by its devotees.

During many years he enjoyed prominent positions in its higher councils, gradually rising in service and consideration until the estimation of his companions culminated in the bestowal of the highest honors possible in their gift. While yet but 36 years of age he was chosen supreme chancellor of the order, the head of their supreme lodge of the world, and during two years enjoyed in that capacity the respect, confidence, and obedience of all its disciples in every quarter of the globe to which its membership extends.

I am advised by those competent to speak of it that his service in that high station was reckoned of signal excellence and gave his name honored illustration in the annals of the order. He retired from that dignity upon his election to the Fifty-third Congress, but both retained active interest in its affairs and enjoyed the highest esteem of its members until the hour of his death; and none beyond his hearthstone's compass more profoundly mourn him now.

It was natural to such a man to feel the obligations of citizenship as compelling him to share in all the work which in a free government devolves upon the good and useful men of society. He could not be silent or passive when help to the common interest might come from his counsel or efforts. And he never was, but he always bore his part as he conceived it, zealously, sometimes aggressively, but without rancor. He was ambitious, loving distinction; but apparently because he both loved to be doing and rejoiced in the kind regard of his fellow-men. He was thus early engaged in local political struggles and the possession of political preferment.

He entered the common council of Eau Claire at but 23 years of age, and so approved his service as to receive continuing election for eleven years. He was twice chosen to the mayoralty of his town, in the years 1888 and 1890. In 1884 he was one of the delegates of his party to the national Republican convention which, at Chicago, placed in nomination Blaine and Logan. His honorable aspiration had been for some years directed toward the representation of his district in Congress, and in 1893 his party bestowed the honor of nomination upon him, which was ratified by the people.

He came here in the prime of manhood, in the fullness of vigor, animated by generous hopes and with a reasonable expectation of added honors to his career and name. A first-term service rarely develops the qualities of an able man or authorizes special prophecy for his future. Mr. Shaw's course and conduct during the brief period he was here bore no conspicuous mark, but were satisfactory to his associates in the House and his party at home. He was unanimously renominated and his election was a foregone certainty, when death cut him untimely off.

He had won, I believe I may speak with confidence, the personal esteem of the members on both sides, and with many a warm and affectionate regard. What or how great would have been his Congressional career must remain a matter of opinion. But it is certain it would have been faithful to his principles and honorable in his personal conduct.

In political associations he was a Republican, and always a steady, zealous, and ardent adherent of his party. Notwithstanding he never, so far as I know, qualified in the least his active efforts for his party's success, but, as was natural to his character, was constant and untiring to promote that object, he aroused comparatively small personal antagonism among political opponents. This was due in part to recognition of the fact that whatever cause he espoused he must be zealous in, and still more to his agreeable and kindly manners and the general absence of personal ill will, and largely also to the many associations he had in affairs nonpolitical with his fellows, especially through the Pythian order I have mentioned.

Mr. Shaw was of an unusually pleasing personality. Of fine, full habit, somewhat above medium height, with open, engaging countenance, animated, vivacious, sympathetic, the first impression was always winning, and continued intercourse only added to the effect. Not magnetic and commanding, but genial and companionable, his manners attracted and engaged and won him always the feeling of good fellowship. Frank, direct, affable, and true, he was a man fitted for the intercourse of friends, sure to have them in numbers, and to please continually. He was rewarded abundantly with the best and most satisfying gifts of life, the love of those within the circle of love, the warm, cordial, friendship pressing about that circle on every hand.

By the desolate hearthstone which till the sad event of his loss was so happy, upon which we may not intrude but to offer our tender and sincere sympathy, a stricken widow and two children, a lad of 10, a daughter of 5 years, lament their affliction. May they find the consolation and peace which no word of man can bestow.

Mr. President, how many times has man's yearning cried out to pierce the inscrutable mystery of death. We can not approach in thought, much less in years, the sharp brink over which life falls so utterly beyond our ken without that look, eager, straining, intense, which never sees!

Why goes first the vigorous man, equipped with experience, wisdom, and power, in the very beginning of the years of achievement, while lingering and helpless age totters slowly to its rest? Why break off the loveliest buds while the yellow leaf clings shivering, with sear and withered hold? Alas, how little we know; how small we are! How impressive is our utter dependence! How surely it bids us trust confidently in the Maker of heaven and earth, and turns us back with new consecration to contemplate here on earth the full measure of our knowledge, our power, and our duties, with assurance that to act well our part is all the liberty of man, and in that doing all his hope save that alone which is vouchsafed by Heaven.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. President, my acquaintance with George B. Shaw had not been lengthy, nor was it intimate. But it was pleasant and cordial. It began with the organization of the House of Representatives of the present Congress. We were then both members of that body. Prior to that time I had never met him. His home was in the far Northwest, mine in the far Southwest. But he was a man it was not difficult to learn to know and to esteem, when brought in contact with. There were no barriers of cold reserve to cross to reach his hand and heart; no prejudices of partisanship or sectionalism to overcome; no formality which avoided direct approach; no semblance of distrust holding him aloof from his fellow-men. His nature was warm, earnest, mellow, sympathetic.

It grew upon you, and it drew from you instinctively the homage of trust, esteem, admiration, friendship. He possessed to a great degree what the French phrase "bonhomie" so well describes. He loved his fellow-man and wanted to be loved in turn by them. He believed that life was too short to be wasted, or soured, or embittered by developing resentments, or worrying over them. His face was ever toward the sunshine of life. He loved to look on the bright side; he liked not its shadows or clouds; he shunned the austere and the somber.

He moved always in the open and sought the sunlight and fresh air of daily existence. He looked for the good in men; liked to bring out there better qualities in them and to keep back and cover the evil. The shades and shadows of character he would pull a veil over, but would turn a calcium light on that which commended men to the esteem and respect of their fellows.

He despised to harbor suspicions; was above little, petty, mean traits and actions. He was the opposite of the cunning, the sly, the intriguing. He was cast in a bigger mold. He liked to take a man's hand in a strong grip and look him full in the eye in open, hearty sincerity.

He was such a man as little children love and instinctively trust.

A stranger, Mr. President, though he might be to you, you would not ask that he be vouched for once you looked into his honest, open, deceitless face, and met the frank sincerity of his straight, manly gaze. His face, manner, look were his bond, so full of the truthful, the real, the honest were they.

He had the rare magnetism that accompanies, or rather issues from, the confident, hearty, cordial, buoyant nature such as his.

He was a man that men liked to have about them. He was congenial. He made things brighter, more cheerful, where he was. He had life, humor, good nature, the milk of human kindness. He always did his full part, and a little more, toward improving every occasion where he was present, in the way of making things pleasant and agreeable. It was part of his nature; he did it instinctively; it required no effort. He possessed the social art; it was born with him, and he required no training to make him pleasing to others. His accomplishments in this line were bestowed by the bountiful hand of Nature. Nature's magic wand touched him and he stood forth among his associates "a prince of good fellows."

He had ease and charm of manner, affability, a pleasing personality, a generous nature, a big heart, a ready wit.

He was possessed of the spirit of great fairness, and had such consideration for the views of others, even though opposed radically to them, that he always secured the respect and esteem of his antagonists. His disposition was to be conciliatory. He possessed rare tact and diplomacy. He had persuasion, knew how to manage, was a born organizer.

He had an enterprising, inquiring mind; liked to study, to explore, to find out for himself. He had a faculty for mastering large affairs.

He was progressive and public-spirited, full of life and energy, hope and accomplishment. He looked ahead and went ahead, and carried good humor, freshness, joyousness with him.

With him whatever was worth doing was not only worth doing well, but joyously, heartily, pleasantly, good-humoredly—not complainingly, grumblingly, petulantly, ill temperedly.

I did not know him, Mr. President, in the home life, but can well imagine that there his amiable qualities shone with special refulgence. He must have been the idol of father and mother, of brothers and sisters, and later of wife and children.

Such men as he, Mr. President, are additions to the world. The world is better and brighter because he lived in it.

In the great and mystical Beyond, to which his soul has flown, may he meet the reward of the righteous and of the just.

May the decree of Deity, sitting in merciful judgment on the earthly career of men, in his case be recorded thus: "Well done, good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, my acquaintance with the late George B. Shaw was not that of intimacy or close friendship. I knew him as we know most men in public life, casually rather than intimately. He impressed me as a man of strong convictions, high purposes, and unusual business capacity. He was a type of the men who stand as a conservative balance against the influence of the scholars, the lawyers, and the doctrinaires of political life. He was essentially a business man. He did things. To him theories were subordinate to practical results. He analyzed and tested everything by a strong and subtle common sense.

Others might indulge in speculation; he preferred to know. The touchstone of fact meant more to him than the labyrinths and mysteries of dream life. His intellectual alchemy was that of truth, knowledge, and experience. He preferred fact to fancy, and lived not in the clouds, but in the consciousness and enjoyment of the real, everyday things of life.

The senior Senator from Wisconsin and the Senator from Louisiana, who knew our deceased friend better than I knew him, have given vivid and eloquent sketches of his career, which was one of rare credit and honor. As private citizen, as manager of great business interests, as mayor of his city, as the official head of a great fraternal order, and as a Representative of his people in the Congress of the United States, Mr. Shaw displayed a high order of talent, and acquitted himself with signal ability and success. But at the very zenith of his triumph he was cut down, and we meet to-day to pay our tribute to his virtues and his memory.

Mr. President, human life at best is a mystery both profound and insoluble. We begin our earthly career with a cry and end it with a groan, and as Jeremy Taylor points out:

He that lives most happily, his life is checkered with black and white, and his days are not all sunshine, but some are cloudy and gloomy, and there is a worm at the root of all his joy that soon eats out the sap and heart of it, and the gourd in whose shade he now so much pleases himself by to-morrow will be withered and gone.

And this same good man points us to a better land, where, he says:

We shall be freed from this earthly and clothed with a heavenly and glorified body.

Concerning this better land Jeremy Taylor says:

At this distance we can not make any likely guesses or conjectures at the glory of that future state. Men make very imperfect descriptions of countries or cities that never were there themselves nor saw the places with their own eyes. It is not for any mortal creature to make a map of that Canaan that lies above. It is to all us that live here on the hither side of death an unknown country and an undiscovered land.

It may be some heavenly pilgrim that, with his holy thoughts and ardent desires, is continually traveling thitherward, arrives sometimes near the borders of the promised land and the suburbs of the new Jerusalem, and gets upon the top of Pisgah, and there he has an imperfect prospect of a brave country that lies a far way off, but he can not tell how to describe it; and all that he hath to say to satisfy the curious inquirer is only this: "If he would know the glories of it he must go and see it."

We may use figures and metaphors and allegories, and tell you of fruitful meads, and spacious fields, and winding rivers, and purling brooks, and chanting birds, and shady groves, and pleasant gardens, and lovely bowers, and noble seats, and stately palaces, and goodly people, and excellent laws, and sweet societies; but this is to frame little comparisons to please our childish fancies, and just such discourses as a blind man would make concerning colors; so do we talk of those things we never saw, and disparage the state while we would recommend it.

Indeed, it requires some saint or angel from heaven to discourse upon the subject; and yet that would not do either; for though they might be able to speak something of it, yet we should want ears to hear it. Neither can those things be declared but in the language of heaven, which would be little understood by us, the poor inhabitants of this lower world; they are, indeed, things too great to be brought within the compass of words. St. Paul, when he had been rapt up into the third heaven, saw "things unlawful, or impossible to be uttered;" and "eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, nor can it enter into the heart of man to conceive, what God hath prepared for them that love Him."

Mr. President, in these days of agnosticism and unbelief it is refreshing to turn back to the simple faith of the early writers on Christian themes. Surely this can not be the end of human aspirations and growth. Beyond this uncertain and unsatisfactory existence there must be a world free from the disappointments, the sorrows, and the pains of earthly life. At any rate I prefer to believe that and to feel that our friend who has gone to that bourne from whence no traveler returns is to-day happy in the wider vision and a larger interpretation of God's plans and purposes than is possible to us who are left behind. For him "life's fitful fever is ended;" and well may we adopt the words of one of America's tenderest and sweetest poets, and say:

When this farce of life is o'er,
Are we fretted any more?
Do they rest, I'd like to know,
Under grass or under snow,
Who have gone that quiet way
You and I must go some day?
If they do it seems to me
Happy were it thus to be Sleeping where the blackberries grow,
And the bramble roses blow,
And the sunshine pours its gold
On mossy rock and woodland old,
While gentle winds and clouds of fleeces
And rippling waters whisper—Peace!
Vain the fancy; nothing dies;
Falling water falls to rise;
Round and round the atoms fly;
Turf and stone and sea and sky,
Vapor drop and blood of man,
In the inexorable plan.
All is motion; nothing dies;
Mystery of mysteries.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. Mr. President, when George B. Shaw's head, after weeks of suffering, drooped in death upon his breast—a head filled but a short time before with thoughts of domestic happiness and of high public endeavor—a bright intellect went out, a genial spirit vanished from among us.

I was not one of Mr. Shaw's intimates. An occasional meeting on the streets—a cordial "How d'ye do?"—simply a glint of sunshine as I went my way—was the extent of my personal acquaintance with him. Nevertheless, I had come under his kindly influence, and I can sincerely say that I grieve to think that never again will he grasp me by the hand and greet me with his accustomed warmth.

Mr. Shaw's conspicuous traits of character were public spirit and a sympathetic humanity. Of the first, the city of Eau Claire stands a perpetual witness; to the last, the mighty order of the Knights of Pythias to a man will testify.

From early childhood Mr. Shaw had his home in the city of Eau Claire. All the energy of his maturer years was devoted to her well-being. Railroads, lighting, sanitation of the city—all things felt his quickening touch. Here his impress will remain indelibly.

Mr. Shaw joined the Knights of Pythias some twenty years ago. Under their banner, bearing the inscription "Friendship, charity, benevolence," he served right loyally from that time to the day of his death. His activity brought rapid promotion. In 1890 he was elected, by acclamation, supreme chancellor. At the Shaw memorial services of the order many were the expressions of sorrow. One of Wisconsin's most eloquent sons then said:

Standing beside his vacant chair, draped in sables and laden with the sweet emblems of everlasting hope, the gift of cherished friends, I cry to him beyond the tides of the shoreless sea to bless this hour devoted to his memory. He was great in all that makes true manhood. He was strong, but gentle; proud, but not arrogant; just, but merciful. He had all the grace of womanhood, but no one I have ever known was a more manly man.

As a representative of Wisconsin it became my duty to attend the funeral of our friend. To me it was an affecting scene. There stood his devoted wife under a stress of grief too strong for tears; his fair-faced children, all unconscious of their loss; a multitude of mourners gathered from far and near crowding the cemetery to its outer verge, while solemnly filed by a band of brother Pythians, dropping each one into his open grave a sprig of evergreen, symbol of that love which lives beyond the tomb.

On a wooded height, looking down upon a tranquil lake, with the waters of the Eau Claire shimmering in the distance, he laid him down to pleasant dreams.

Earth, that all too soon has bound him,
Gently wrap his clay;
Linger lovingly around him,
Light of dying day.

Mr. President, as a further mark of respect to the memory of our friend, Mr. Shaw, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, February 25, 1895, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 23, 1895.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. B. BAGBY.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CORE SOUND, NORTH CAROLINA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with letter of the Chief of Engineers, report of a preliminary examination of Core Sound, North Carolina; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

WITHERBY & GAFFNEY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a bill (H. R. 4507) for the relief of Witherby & Gaffney, with amendments of the Senate. Mr. CHICKERING. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. SAYERS. Let us have some explanation of this, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments. The Clerk proceeded to read the Senate amendments.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, is this a privileged matter?

The SPEAKER. This is a House bill with Senate amendments. The Chair has not examined the amendments and does not know whether they require consideration in Committee of the Whole or not. The Senate have struck out all after the enacting clause of the House bill and inserted another bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it. Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. If this is a privileged matter, of course I have nothing to say; but if not, I would like to call for the regular order.

Mr. CHICKERING. This will take but a moment. Mr. SAYERS. It will take more than a moment to dispose of this.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I suggest that the gentleman let the bill lie on the Speaker's table until Monday morning.

Mr. CHICKERING. I am willing to agree that the bill shall lie on the Speaker's table, without prejudice, until Monday.

The SPEAKER. In the mean time the Chair will examine it.

GOVERNMENT OF THE NAVY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a bill (H. R. 6323) to amend the Articles for the Government of the Navy relative to the punishment on conviction by court-martial, with an amendment, as follows:

Line 5, strike out "64" and insert "63;" so as to make it read "article 63."

Mr. GEISSENHAINER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Senate amendment be concurred in.

Mr. SAYERS. What is this?

Mr. GEISSENHAINER. Simply the correction of a number. The amendment was concurred in.

WILLIAM W. BUCKLEY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a bill (H. R. 8237) for the relief of William W. Buckley, late first lieutenant of the Ninety-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteers, with amendments of the Senate thereto, as follows:

Line 3, strike out "Secretary of War" and insert "President of the United States."

Line 4, strike out "and directed."

Line 7, after the word "to," insert "direct the Secretary of War to."

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I move to concur in the amendments of the Senate.

The amendments were concurred in.

SECTION 4400, TITLE LII, REVISED STATUTES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a bill (H. R. 2377) to amend "An act to amend section 4400 of Title LII of the Revised Statutes of the United States, concerning the regulation of steam vessels," approved August 7, 1882; and also to amend section 4414, Title LII, of the Revised Statutes, "Regulation of steam vessels," with amendments of the Senate thereto, and a request for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House nonconcur in the amendments of the Senate and agree to a conference.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. WISE, Mr. MALLORY, and Mr. STORER.

BATTERY PARK, BURLINGTON, VT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a joint resolution (S. R. 138) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to deliver unserviceable or condemned cannon to the mayor of Burlington, Vt., to be used in decorating Battery Park.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the consideration of that joint resolution.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Will not the gentleman let it go over until Monday?

Mr. POWERS. It will take but a moment to dispose of it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Well, Mr. Speaker, there are several other matters that are pressed for consideration, and while I hate to seem ungracious, I desire to be impartial.

Mr. POWERS. I assure the gentleman that this will not take half the time that we will if we quarrel over it. [Laughter.] I ask that the joint resolution be read, and I think there will be no objection to it.

The SPEAKER. It can be read only by unanimous consent. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont that this joint resolution be now read?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I hate to object, but we have so little time this morning for the consideration of the pending appropriation bill—

Mr. POWERS. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask that the joint resolution lie on the Speaker's table until Monday, retaining its position. There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

THE LATE SENATOR VANCE.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time for the memorial services set for 2 o'clock be postponed until 3 p. m., unless the deficiency bill shall be sooner disposed of.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

COMMITTEE REPORTS.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that gentlemen having reports to present be allowed to hand them to the Clerk.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

RELIEF OF MATHEW S. PRIEST.

Mr. PEARSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. When the House took a recess yesterday we were considering a bill that I desire to have disposed of, the bill (H. R. 1314) for the relief of Mathew S. Priest, and I wish to inquire what will be its status if the House now proceeds to other business.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the status of the bill referred to by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PEARSON] may be for Monday the same as it is this morning.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

NATIONAL GAS AND ELECTRIC LIGHT COMPANY.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to file the views of the minority on the bill (H. R. 7310) to incorporate the National Gas and Electric Light, Heat, and Power Company of the District of Columbia.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the general deficiency bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole (Mr. TARNSEY in the chair).

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the general deficiency bill, and the Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. There was an amendment pending when the committee rose—

The CHAIRMAN. There were several amendments pending, which the Chair understands went over by consent.

Mr. BYNUM. I wish to offer an amendment to follow line 28 on page 51, in the appropriation for the Government Printing Office.

The CHAIRMAN. That part of the bill has not yet been reached.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call up the pending amendment. Let us dispose of them in their order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I ask the Clerk to read the pending amendments offered by the committee.

On page 51, after line 23, insert:

"To pay Howard Gill for services as acting assistant foreman of the folding room from August 29 to December 3, 1894, inclusive, $240."

"To pay Howard Wiltberger for services rendered in the folding room from August 29 to December 3, inclusive, $240."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. There are several other paragraphs to the amendment, offered by instructions of the committee on yesterday; but as these two stand on a somewhat different footing from the rest I ask that the question be taken upon them first.

This, I will state, is not additional pay, but is payment for work already done.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment just read.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman from Kentucky please explain this amendment?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. These are cases where during the vacation the Doorkeeper came to the committee and asked that certain work might be done which was necessary in his department and that some provision be made to pay for it. It was found that the work was necessary, and hence this amendment is proposed to be inserted here to compensate for it. It is not additional compensation in any sense of the word, but payment for work for which these parties would get no pay in the event of the failure of this amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. Was this favorably reported upon by the Committee on Accounts?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Yes; and asked for by the Doorkeeper. I was instructed by the subcommittee to offer the amendment in connection with others, and now ask a vote upon it separately, as it stands upon a different footing from the other paragraphs of the amendment.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is there anyone left whose salary has not been increased or proposed to be increased? Have any of them escaped the attention of the committee?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. A great many have not been increased. I think the committee have rejected forty or fifty claims, and have allowed but a few.

Mr. DINGLEY. It seems that about everybody has been included.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Not at all. The number of infants slaughtered by Herod is much greater than the number that escaped. [Laughter.]

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next paragraph of the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay J. H. Van Buren, assistant index clerk of the House, his salary from October 1 to November 28, 1894, inclusive, and from November 4 to December 3, 1895, inclusive, at $9 per day, $534.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I ask a separate vote on that amendment also, for the reason that it stands on a different footing from the others.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman please explain the case?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. The case is simply this: Under the law the assistant index clerk is ordered to do certain work which must be done after the adjournment of Congress. The work has been done in accordance with the law, but his salary ends with the session. So this is pay for work which he has already done and will do in March after the adjournment of this Congress, which otherwise could not and would not be paid for.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. This is a session employee?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Yes; a session employee, but ordered to get out the index under the law, which takes three months and which extends beyond the termination of the short session. This is compensation for the work that he is required to do after the session terminates. By a mistake in the appropriation bill his compensation ends at the close of the session, although the work extends beyond it. This is not extra pay, but compensation for work actually done.

Mr. BERRY. Let me ask the gentleman from Kentucky why it is that action is not taken on the various amendments offered yesterday afternoon? There are others just as meritorious as these.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. If the gentleman will permit me, I called for the reading of the amendments in their order, and they are to be taken up in that way.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Is this employee paid by the year or the day?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. He is paid up to the last of the session; but under the law he must complete his work after the session terminates. He makes up the index, which is completed after the close of the session.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. And has no other pay?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. None whatever. It is, as I have said, for work actually done.

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

To pay George B. Parsons, enrolling clerk, and John Kelley, assistant enrolling clerk, for extra services, $300 each; in all, $600.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I am frank to state that this is additional pay. These are the clerks employed in the enrolling room, and the chairman of the Committee on Enrolled Bills, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PEARSON], has stated to the committee that they had to do this work probably on Sunday, frequently at night, and possibly at the tail end of the session they would have to be up all night. It is worthy of mention that there has not been a single mistake in the enrollments this session. I yield the floor to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. What is their pay now?

Mr. PEARSON. One gets $2,250 and the other $2,000. The Senate clerks doing the same work get $2,500 and $2,290 respectively.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Do these clerks perform as much duty now as before the enrollment was by printing?

Mr. PEARSON. They do.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Then what is the good of printing the enrollment?

Mr. PEARSON. If the gentleman will allow me, I will state that the clerks here specified are enrolling clerks, but not clerks to the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

It is their duty to prepare these bills for printing. It is their duty, after a bill has passed the Senate, to prepare it for printing.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. If the gentleman will allow me to get at the fact, does either of these gentlemen practice law or medicine now?

Mr. PEARSON. No, sir; not to my knowledge.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I move that the committee rise for a moment, for the purpose of swearing in a Representative-elect.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TARSNEY, chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the general deficiency bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the following certificate of election.

The Clerk read as follows:

We, the undersigned return judges Fifteenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, composed of the counties of Bradford, Susquehanna, Wayne, and Wyoming, appointed by the courts of common pleas of our respective counties, on Thursday, the 21st day of February, A. D. 1895, being the second day after the special election held in said district, held on Tuesday, the 19th day of February, A. D. 1895, for the purpose of electing a member of Congress from said district to fill the vacancy in the Fifty-third Congress caused by the death of Hon. M. B. Wright, to compute the returns of said election, do hereby certify, that we have attended to our duties at the time and place fixed by law, and after carefully adding together and computing the returns of votes as certified to us from the respective counties, it appeared that for member of Congress for the Fifteenth district of Pennsylvania, to fill the vacancy in the Fifty-third Congress caused by the death of M. B. Wright, Edwin J. Jorden had thirteen thousand four hundred and forty-five (13,445), Rhamanthus M. Stocker had six thousand six hundred and ninety (6,690) votes, Charles P. Shaw had seven hundred and twenty-eight (728) votes, Henry M. Champlain had ninety-three (93) votes, and that Edwin J. Jorden, having received a majority of the votes cast for said office, was duly elected to the same.

In testimony whereof, we have hereunto set our hands and seals this 22d day of February, A. D. 1895.

JOHN KUHBACH. [SEAL.]
F. H. GOOTBAUGH. [SEAL.]
HENRY T. GREY. [SEAL.]
WM. D. B. ANCEIF. [SEAL.]

The SPEAKER. This is not a certificate from the governor of Pennsylvania.

Mr. DALZELL. I presume this certificate has been sent because of lack of time for the governor's certificate to arrive. There is no doubt about the election, and I ask unanimous consent that the oath be administered to Mr. Jorden.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the gentleman will be sworn in.

The oath of office was then administered to Mr. Jorden.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 2798) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the erection of a Government building at Chicago, Ill.," approved February 30, 1895; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the engrossed joint resolution (H. Res. 277) in reference to the Free Zone along the northern frontier of Mexico and adjacent to the United States.

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 962) for the relief of Capt. Ceran St. Vrain's Company of New Mexico Mounted Volunteers.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution (S. R. 133) directing the Secretary of War to make an examination of the bridge to be constructed over the Delaware River between the States of New Jersey and Pennsylvania; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

The following reports of committees were handed in at the Clerk's desk, referred to their appropriate Calendars, and otherwise disposed of as indicated below:

AMERICAN REGISTER FOR THE STEAMER KAHULUI.

Mr. FITZHIAN, from the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8771) to provide an American register for the steamer Kahului; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. REILLY, from the Committee on the Pacific Railroads, reported back in lieu of House bill 7798 a bill (H. R. 8943) to amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and for other purposes," approved July 1, 1862, and to amend an act approved July 2, 1864, and also an act approved May 7, 1878, both in amendment of said first-mentioned act; and to provide for the settlement of claims growing out of the issue of bonds to aid in the construction of certain railroads, and to secure to the United States payment of all indebtedness of certain companies therein mentioned; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

Mr. ALDRICH submitted the views of the minority of the Committee on the District of Columbia on the bill (H. R. 7310) to incorporate the National Gas and Electric Light, Heat, and Power Company of the District of Columbia; which were ordered to be printed.

LAND-GRANT RAILROADS.

Mr. CAMINETTI, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back favorably House concurrent resolution to suspend action on all selections filed by land-grant railroads for land situated in the State of California until January 1, 1896; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

On February 20, 1895:

An act (H. R. 6792) to disapprove the treaty heretofore made with the Southern Ute Indians to be removed to the Territory of Utah, and providing for settling them down in severalty where they may so elect and are qualified, and to settle all those not electing to take lands in severalty on the west 40 miles of present reservation and in portions of New Mexico, and for other purposes, and to carry out the provisions of the treaty with said Indians June 15, 1880;

An act (H. R. 7731) for the relief of certain Winnebago Indians in Minnesota;

An act (H. R. 5377) granting a pension to Richard Knight; and

An act (H. R. 6131) to grant a pension to Sarah E. Roebuck.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. PEARSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 5218) to amend the Articles for the Government of the Navy;

A bill (H. R. 5234) for the relief of James Stewart;

A bill (H. R. 6323) to amend the Articles for the Government of the Navy relative to punishment on conviction by court-martial;

A bill (S. 305) granting a pension to Annie M. Greene;

A bill (S. 684) for the relief of Mrs. Evalyn N. Van Vliet;

A bill (S. 2733) to postpone the enforcement of the act of August 19, 1890, entitled "An act to adopt regulations for preventing collisions at sea;" and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 227) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to donate to the Oregon State Soldiers' Home, at Roseburg, Oreg., certain cannon, etc.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, the House again resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the general deficiency appropriation bill, with Mr. TARSNEY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay George B. Parsons, enrolling clerk, and John Kelley, assistant enrolling clerk, for extra services, $200 each.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. PEARSON. I simply desire to say for these men that they are not from the State of Ohio. I knew nothing about them personally until I became chairman of the Committee on Enrolled Bills. They are not in any way connected with the Committee on Enrolled Bills. They are the enrolling clerks, and I want to say for them that they are very efficient officers, and that they are required to work at night frequently, required to work on Sundays, in order to expedite the business of this House. I have no interest whatever in the matter, except a desire to see simple justice done to these very efficient employees.

Mr. DINGLEY. I have no desire to antagonize this particular increase of compensation, especially after the large number of increases already made, but it does seem to me as if this practice, increasing in this Congress to an extent that we have never before seen, has gone about far enough. We fix a salary for each of these officials. They know what their duty is and what their salary is to be when they accept their positions. This practice of taking it for granted that compensation is expected to be increased—for it is becoming a general idea until now nearly every employee of the House feels that he is not used quite right if his salary is not increased in some way—it seems to me is an objectionable one. I have no desire to antagonize this amendment, because it is undoubtedly even more meritorious than some that have already been provided; but I desire for one to enter my protest against this policy, which seems to be increasing.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire) there were—ayes 80, noes 22.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay Richard H. Dalton, for extra services rendered in the folding room, $300.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, let us have some explanation of this.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, in the folding room there are books kept, exactly as a bank account is kept, with each of the 360 Members and Delegates, showing their receipt of documents. One of these accounts is kept by Mr. George L. Brown, one by Mr. P. E. Cox, and one by Mr. Dalton. They have to be here during the whole of the recess, because books are taken out during vacation as well as any other time, and the House has for five sessions, I believe, paid extra compensation to two of the men. Mr. Dalton was left out because we were not aware of his being one of them, and this is simply offered upon the certificate of the Doorkeeper and of the Committee on Accounts, and the subcommittee have thought it just to put him in with the other two men who have done the same work.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Has this clerk any more to do than a bookkeeper of a bank would have to do with 356 active depositors?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I would say to the gentleman that these are very troublesome accounts. If the gentleman has ever gone and looked at the workings of that department he will have observed that the books are continually coming in and being sent out. The clerk has to attend at all times—during the vacation and also during the session; and these are very troublesome accounts.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. It seems to me that it is very plain bookkeeping.

Mr. SIMPSON. Is this for the performance of service after the adjournment?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. That would not be a fair statement of it. It is because they have to do service during the whole year. They are paid for work done during the session and during the vacation. The Committee on Accounts feel that this extra compensation ought to be given; and we examined the matter and have agreed with them.

Mr. SIMPSON. Are they paid by the year or by the session?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. The clerks doing this work are paid $100 a month; but this gentleman is only a messenger, and has been specially detailed to that work. These are the facts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To reimburse Walter H. French for moneys actually paid by him for clerical hire in rearranging the files of the House, including the consolidation of the papers in the reports of the Southern Claims Commission and the papers in the Indian depredation cases, and relettering the file boxes from the Forty-fourth to the Fifty-second Congress, inclusive, $750.

Mr. DINGLEY. I reserve the point of order on that amendment. This matter has gone far enough.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I do not know whether this is subject to the point of order; but the gentleman will reserve it, and allow me to state the facts. I would like the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. O'NEIL] to give his attention. The facts in this matter, as reported to the committee, are that Mr. French, the file clerk, having gone in there, he found everything in confusion, so that he could hardly find anything, as everything was in disorder.

Mr. DINGLEY. What place is that?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. That is the office of the file clerk. He went to work and rearranged the entire files from the Forty-fourth Congress down to the present time. He put everything in order, so that you can go there and he can put his hands on anything you want. This is a matter of great value, because there are a great many papers from the committees that are placed in his charge, and a great many of them it was difficult to find before this rearrangement.

Mr. DINGLEY. Then I understand this money was paid out for services?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. This is for money he actually paid out. He does not get a cent of it himself, I am assured; but it only repays him money that he has actually paid out.

Mr. DINGLEY. Then I withdraw the point of order, because that is on an entirely different basis from the others.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay Peter J. McDonald the difference between his salary as folder and that of acting assistant foreman of the folding room, at $1,300 per annum, from January 20, 1894, to January 20, 1895, inclusive, $300.

Mr. DOCKERY. I reserve the point of order on that.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. The gentleman will please reserve his point a moment, and let me make a statement. Mr. McDonald is a folder, or a clerk in charge of what is known as the annex to the folding room. He is acting assistant foreman in the annex. For the work that he has done they have been in the habit of paying a gentleman engaged in the building here the amount that is asked for him. The House has heretofore made this increase. He now receives $900, but everyone else who has done the same work that he has been doing has received $1,300; and this gives him the difference between his salary as a folder and that of assistant foreman. The committee have examined it. The Doorkeeper has asked for it, and it was not put in the original report of the committee because we were not personally familiar with the facts. I hope the gentleman from Missouri will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. DOCKERY. As all of the others have gone through, I will withdraw the point of order, and give notice that I will ask for a separate vote in the House on these amendments, as it seems to be impossible to defeat them in the committee.

Mr. PAYNE. Would it not be better to make a general increase of salary of about 10 per cent on all these included in these amendments?

Mr. DOCKERY. I think it would be justice to the others.

Mr. GROUT. And quite an economy in time.

Mr. DOCKERY. Yes. This proceeding is simply without precedent.

Mr. McETRICK. This is not an increase, as the gentlemen doing the same services have always had this extra allowance given to them.

Mr. DOCKERY. During the twelve years I have been a member of this House I have never known of such wholesale increases of salaries of House employees. I recognize the fact, as stated by the gentleman from Kentucky, that there are a few cases that are really meritorious. With reference to Mr. French, the amendment in his favor was, perhaps, meritorious. However, I want to notify the committee that I shall ask a separate vote on these increases of salaries in the House.

Mr. McETRICK. This is not an increase of salary. It is the regular salary.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I ask that the other pending amendments be recurred to. There are other amendments pending, Mr. Chairman, offered last night, and which, at my request, went over until to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now report the pending amendments.

Mr. SPRINGER. The one I offered was as an additional paragraph to the one offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The CHAIRMAN. That will be reached in its regular order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I would be glad to have these other amendments disposed of.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

Insert after line 14, page 49, the following:

"To pay Thomas M. Rogers for services rendered as acting clerk of the Committee on Railways and Canals from March 24, 1894, to May 17, 1894, inclusive, the difference in salary between that of clerk to a Congressman and session clerk of a committee, $149.50."

Mr. SAYERS. I raise a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. This is one of the cases that the committee examined into, and we think this extra amount ought not to be allowed. It is a case where a gentleman rendered service as clerk to a member until his committee was given a clerk, and then he rendered service as clerk to the committee.

Mr. COBB of Missouri. He acted as clerk of the committee up to the time the committee was allowed a clerk. He rendered the service, and this is to pay him for the time between his actually entering upon the service and his formal appointment as clerk.

Mr. SAYERS. I insist on the point of order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. This would seem to be simply an attempt to pay this man as clerk to the committee for a period prior to the time when the House had allowed the committee a clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that there is no law authorizing this allowance, and therefore sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read the next amendment, as follows:

Between lines 21 and 22, on page 49, insert the following:

"To pay T. F. Dennis for extra services rendered as assistant clerk of the Committee on Invalid Pensions on detail from the Pension Office during the third session of the Fifty-third Congress the sum of $200."

Mr. SAYERS. I raise a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I ask the gentleman to withhold the point for a few moments.

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I send to the Clerk's desk to be read a resolution unanimously adopted by the Committee on Invalid Pensions; and I invite the careful attention of members of the House to this resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, That the Committee on Appropriations be requested to place in the general deficiency bill the following item, to wit:

"To pay T. F. Dennis for extra services rendered as assistant clerk to the Committee on Invalid Pensions during the third session of the Fifty-third Congress the sum of $200."

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I suppose there is no member of the House of Representatives who is not acquainted with the nature and character of the services rendered by the gentleman in whose behalf I have offered this amendment. He is not one of my constituents.

Mr. DINGLEY. As I understand, he is a clerk in the classified service who is detailed to assist the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Yes, sir.

Mr. DINGLEY. A fourth-class clerk?

Mr. DOCKERY. He is receiving $2,000.

Mr. DINGLEY. He does not belong, then, to the classified service.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. He receives $2,000 a year.

Mr. DINGLEY. That takes him out of the classified service.

Mr. PAYNE. As I understand, he served during the first and second sessions of this Congress.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Yes, sir.

Mr. PAYNE. How much additional did he receive for his services during those sessions?

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Five hundred dollars for the first and second sessions.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think no member of this House who has had any business to do in connection with the Committee on Invalid Pensions can fail to know personally the amount of extra services rendered by this clerk. He is not an employee of this House. If the resolution granting a month's extra pay to employees of the House should pass it will not benefit him in the least. He has attended the sessions of this House night after night, and his services are invaluable.

Mr. LACEY. He has listened to all these Friday night speeches!

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. He has attended all the Friday night meetings of the House. In addition to that, let me say he has kept a record of every one of the 1,230 private pension bills introduced by members of the House and the 72 private pension bills coming from the Senate. As a result of his labors we have now a complete record of the facts in connection with each bill. These have been put into a bound volume, which will be found of invaluable service to Congress in the future. Inasmuch as it has been the custom for years and years to make an allowance to the clerk thus detailed from the Pension Office, we ought not to draw the line now on this clerk.

Mr. BROWN. Has he been required to perform any duty at the Pension Office during his detail for service in connection with the committee?

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. No, sir.

Mr. BROWN. And he has still drawn his $2,000 a year?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, in Holy Writ we sometimes read passages which are consoling and sometimes passages which are not so consoling. We read, for instance, "Ask, and it shall be given you;" "Knock, and it shall be opened unto you." Those passages are literal with reference to employees of this House. Every employee here is to receive a month's extra salary under a resolution which we shall adopt a little later on, and which in former Congresses, commencing in a Democratic Congress, was held in order time and again by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole. These little matters in the main that are coming in here now are something extra in addition to the month's salary so far as the House employees are concerned.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana rose.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I am coming to the case in which the gentleman from Indiana is interested.

Now, in this particular case the person interested is a clerk in the Pension Office, who has done duty as assistant clerk to the Committee on Invalid Pensions. I have no doubt he is a valuable man. But when we come to vote the extra month's salary it is not going to benefit him. So he can quote, unless this allowance of $200 goes through for him, that other passage of Scripture, which, if I recollect aright, runs in this way: In the last days "Two women shall be grinding at the mill; the one shall be taken, and the other left." This man is liable to be "left" unless he gets in now. [Laughter.] That is all I want to say.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I am addressing myself now to the Chair and also particularly to the gentleman from Texas, I ask that gentleman to withdraw his point of order, because there have been allowances made here for extra services to employees of this House, and this man is not an employee of the House. There have been thousands of questions put to this clerk by members of this House, upon many of which it was impossible for me at the time to give information, and this clerk has given the information when I could not. Let me say, in addition, that the qualifications of this clerk are of so high an order that he is really an expert.

I want to remind the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that the same sort of allowance here proposed was made in the Fifty-first Congress to another gentleman who was detailed from the Pension Office for similar service. An allowance of the same kind was made again in the Fifty-second Congress, and if there be any good reason why it should not be made now for services which are so valuable I should like to know that reason.

Mr. SAYERS. I insist on my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

After line 24, page 50, insert:

"To pay John H. Hogan the difference between the pay of a laborer and that of a messenger in the House post-office, during the sessions of the Fifty-third Congress, $300.73."

Mr. SAYERS. I make a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman state the point of order?

Mr. SAYERS. That there is no law, and no resolution of the House, authorizing the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

After the word "dollars," line 25, page 49, insert the following:

"To pay R. A. Rosenbaum, P. F. Perkins, and George Zerby the sum of $100 each for extra services rendered during the Fifty-third Congress in the folding room, House of Representatives."

Mr. SAYERS. I make a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

"Senate and House of Representatives: To enable the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay to the officers and employees of the Senate and House borne on the annual and session rolls on the 1st day of February, 1895, including the Capitol police and Official Reporters of the Senate and House, for extra services during the Fifty-third Congress, a sum equal to one month's pay, at the compensation then paid them by law, the same to be made immediately available."

Mr. SAYERS. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. I understood that this amendment was reserved until the bill should be completed. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. SAYERS. I am on the floor now to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], as the Chair understands, raises the point that this amendment by agreement was passed over until the rest of the bill should be completed.

Mr. SAYERS. I did not so understand.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. My understanding was that the amendment should be taken up at the completion of these paragraphs with reference to the House of Representatives.

Mr. SPRINGER. They are not completed yet. I do not want to be precluded from my right to offer an amendment.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by adding the proviso that no one for whom a special appropriation is made in this act shall be entitled to an extra month's pay.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman ought to modify that, because some of the special appropriations made in the bill may be less than a month's pay.

Mr. TRACEY. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will not press that amendment. The appropriation has been made by previous Congresses on these occasions in the form in which I have presented it, without any such proviso, and I do not think the proviso ought to be added in this case.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the amendment of Mr. TRACEY the following proviso:

"Provided, That no one for whom a special appropriation is made in this act shall be entitled to this extra pay."

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the gentleman ought to modify that, so as to apply only where a special appropriation is made for extra services.

Mr. SAYERS. I will accept the suggestion. Make it read: "a special appropriation for extra services."

Mr. SPRINGER. As I suggested before, the gentleman ought to modify his amendment further, because some of these special appropriations may be less than a month's pay, and he does not want to treat any of the employees unfairly in this matter.

Mr. SAYERS. I desire to do exactly what is involved in the amendment I have offered.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman might modify it so as to say that where the special appropriation is less than a month's pay the amount shall be deducted from the month's pay and the balance allowed.

Mr. SAYERS. No, sir. I ask the Clerk to report the amendment as it will stand as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add the following proviso:

"Provided, That no one for whom a special appropriation for extra services is made in this act shall be entitled to this extra pay."

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the amendment of the gentleman from New York as it will stand when amended by this proviso be now read.

Page 48, line 8, insert the following:

"Senate and House of Representatives: To enable the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay to the officers and employees of the Senate and House borne on the annual and session rolls on the 1st day of February, 1895, including the Capitol police and Official Reporters of the Senate and House, for extra services during the Fifty-third Congress, a sum equal to one month's pay, at the compensation then paid them by law, the same to be made immediately available: Provided, That no one for whom a special appropriation for extra services is made in this act shall be entitled to this extra pay."

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I understand that in making up the pay rolls under these extra month's pay allowances, the seven watchmen and the outside police are not included. That fact has just been brought to my attention by two of them. I do not know the men, but it seems to me that if this allowance is to be made these outside watchmen and policemen ought to be included, and I ask that the amendment be amended so as to include them after the Capitol police. I offer that amendment. I think there will be no objection to it.

The amendment was read, as follows:

After the words "Capitol police," insert the words "and seven watchmen."

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman whether the persons included in his amendment are employees either of the House or of the Senate.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. They are the outside watchmen.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I understand that they are not employees of either the House or the Senate.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. They are employees of the Interior Department.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I know nothing about that except what was stated to me outside the door.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. They are employees of the Interior Department; not of either the House or the Senate.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Well, if the gentleman knows that, I will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. TRACEY. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I offered giving the employees of the House and the Senate an extra month's pay has been adopted in a number of appropriation bills on previous occasions, and the pay has been allowed irrespective of any sums that may have been paid to individuals for extra work. I see no reason why a departure from that practice should be made in this case, or why my amendment should not be adopted in the form in which it has been adopted in years past.

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Chairman, it is a well-known fact that the employees of this House will change at the beginning of the next session of Congress. An amendment will then unquestionably be offered and adopted to give them an extra month's pay, upon the ground that they will be required to come here from their homes before the new Congress is organized, and will be obliged to go home shortly afterwards. While an appropriation like the pending one has been made at the close of some sessions of Congress, it does occur to me that it is a wasteful extravagance to appropriate two months' extra pay in a single year, and I therefore believe that this amendment ought to be voted down now, and that the appropriation, if it is to be made, ought to be made at the beginning of the next Congress. Another thing, Mr. Chairman, the Capitol police, who are included in this appropriation, do not stand upon the same footing as the employees of the House.

They are annual employees of the Government, are here constantly, and are not put to the extra expense of coming here and going away at the end of every session of Congress. That class of employees ought not to be included in this amendment, even if it is meritorious as to the remainder. Therefore that portion of the amendment, even if the remainder should pass, should be stricken out.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The question I want to ask the gentleman is this: If his objection is good as against the session employees? They will not be here at the opening of the next Congress.

Mr. BYNUM. That is true. The session employees are the only ones really that ought to have this appropriation.

Mr. COX. For what reason should anybody have it?

Mr. TRACEY. While this allowance was made in the extra session, it was not made in the long session, so it was not given twice in one year.

Mr. SPRINGER. What is the pending question?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] to the original amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let it be read, please.

The amendment was again read, as follows:

Provided, That no one for whom a special appropriation for extra services is made in this act shall be entitled to this extra month's pay.

Mr. SPRINGER. There are some appropriations that are only for $100, for extra services, and if this passes those employees will be deprived of a whole month's extra compensation, which would be more. I do not think this amendment is well digested. I am willing that there should be a credit of the amount, but I think the amendment ought to be voted down.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. It strikes me that this new proposition ought not to pass. This committee has been considering claims for extra services, and it has passed upon some of those claims. It has passed upon them after mature consideration. It has found that there was something in each claim that justified taking the person outside of the ordinary monthly appropriation for all employees of the House. In one instance that I called to the attention of the House the gentleman is upon the rolls as a messenger, but has been doing duty as a disbursing clerk, and doing extra duty, and therefore this committee, by a very large majority, concluded that he was entitled to have that amount, over and above his pay, and certainly over and above this proposition for an extra month's pay. We have never heretofore had this proposition come in. Now, because there happens at this time to be perhaps half a dozen more claims than heretofore, all resting upon merit, all standing before this committee upon statements of fact showing that the gentlemen were entitled to it, we should not go so far as to say, after we have voted that these gentlemen are entitled to extra compensation for extra labor, that they shall not have the extra compensation which is given to the whole body of employees of this House. Therefore I am opposed to this amendment to the amendment.

Mr. COX. I desire to make but one inquiry with regard to this matter. You have gone through a series of amendments here to add expense to the Government for compensation for extra work performed. Now, the next proposition you make is to add additional compensation for the employees of the House, whether there was any work performed or not. All I desire to say about it is that when I see these employees in the House duly compensated for their labor, I enter my protest against the paying of another dollar more.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add the following proviso:

"Provided, That no one for whom a special appropriation for extra services is made in this act shall be entitled to this extra month's pay."

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Insert after the word "House" the following, in line 3 of the amendment: "Including the session clerks to Representatives in Congress."

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, that is an amendment—

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I reserve a point of order against that.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. It is too late. I addressed the Chair. This is an amendment to the amendment, and it is proposed—

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I have made a point of order.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Will the Chair entertain the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will entertain the point of order.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I want to be heard upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to decide it now.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I wish to be heard upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not wish to hear argument on it; it is so manifestly out of order.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I want to be heard, anyway.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Then I appeal from the ruling of the Chair. If the Chair will not hear argument on the question of order when I have asked to be heard, I am compelled to take this course.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. As the amendment of the gentleman is drawn nobody could get a cent under it anyway. It would be entirely nugatory.

Mr. REED. Then let us pass it. [Laughter.] That would be a good solution of the question. There is a resolution at last that seems reasonable; the only sensible question presented.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. The argument of the gentleman from Maine may be good on the merits of the proposition, but does not go, however, to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I should like to have order on the floor for a few moments while I discuss the appeal.

The amendment I have offered is simply this: To provide that the session clerks of members shall have an extra month's salary with all of the other employees of the House and Senate. Now, for what purpose is the amendment offered? It is to enable the members of the Fifty-third Congress to distribute their pro rata share of more than a million of documents to be thrown on their hands within the next thirty days, and notice has been already given to us that they must be taken by the members of the Fifty-third Congress before the Fifty-fourth Congress organizes, or we will lose the documents altogether.

There is a resolution giving the employees of Congress an extra month's pay. Everybody connected with the House is to get it. And now the point of order is made that this amendment I have offered is not provided for by law.

Mr. Chairman, I want to submit this fact, and it is far above the ruling of a Chairman or a Speaker, or any rule that the House itself can make; it is a constitutional provision. You will find it on page 2, Article I, of the Constitution:

The House of Representatives shall choose a Speaker and other officers, and have the sole power of impeachment.

There is no law existing for fixing the salary of the employees of this House. There never was such a law. It is always fixed by the Appropriations Committee or the Committee of the Whole on an appropriation bill, and this House has the sole power to fix the salary of its own officers and employees at any time and at all times. There is no law either for or against it, and if the point of order is good to the amendment to the amendment it is good to the original amendment itself, and it will stand good against three-fourths of the entire bill to-day.

Now, it is a question whether the members of the Fifty-third Congress, before their time expires and when they are entitled to these documents, will take them and send them out to their constituents or not. There is nothing in the law to compel you to take them. It is for you to determine. But some provision should be made for distributing these valuable documents. There is nothing in the law to compel you to give an extra month's pay to the clerks, but there is nothing to forbid it, either, and no gentleman on this floor will dare cite a law either fixing the salaries of employees or authorizing it to be done.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. If these documents are not distributed by May 1, by members of the present House of Representatives, by whom will they be distributed?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. If they are not distributed by the members of this Congress in a given time, they will be credited to the members of the Fifty-fourth Congress.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The time, however, is the organization of the Fifty-fourth Congress, which may not be until December, not May 1.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Yes; but here comes the trouble: We are likely to have an extra session, and within thirty days. We are likely to have it at least in sixty days. That being the case, we would lose the entire pro rata share of the documents and get nothing.

I am ready now to vote on the appeal; let members vote as they please.

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Chairman, with the merits of the proposition pending to the bill I have nothing to do; I am opposed to it; but there is, it seems to me, a distinction to be drawn between an amendment to an amendment which is not in order and an amendment to the bill which would be entirely out of order.

Now, the original amendment, to which the gentleman in charge offered his amendment, is not in order under the rules; and therefore I maintain that if there is any science in parliamentary law or any reason or logic in it, it does not lie within the mouth of a member to raise a point of order against an amendment to the amendment because it is obnoxious to the rules of the House. If the amendment itself is not in order it is beyond the power of the committee to limit amendments to it because as original propositions they might not be in order. I insist the committee have waived the question of order to the original amendment; that any amendment to the same which is germane is in order. The committee can not first admit an improper amendment and then prevent its being perfected or amended by insisting upon the application and enforcement of the rules. You can add appropriations without limit and amendments without regard to the ordinary rules, because they stand on all fours with the provision sought to be made by the original amendment.

Now, an amendment—

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BYNUM. In a moment I will. An amendment to an amendment which is out of order, the original amendment being in order, is, of course, obnoxious to the point of order, because you could convert an amendment which was in order into an amendment out of order by adding amendments which would make the original amendment obnoxious to the rules, but to an amendment not in order in the committee the objection does not attach, and can not be raised, as it is within the power of the committee to pass upon any question which is germane to a pending proposition.

Mr. MOSES. Then a free-coinage bill could be added as an amendment.

Mr. TRACEY. That has been ruled out before.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The answers to that proposition are two. First, that the original proposition is in order, and has been held in order time and again by this House and by the committees of this House.

Mr. ALLEN. What is the distinction between the original proposition and the amendment?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. There are no such clerks as members' clerks.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Furthermore, no point of order was made to the original proposition, and it is just the same in the parliamentary status as if no point of order could have been made.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 68, noes 45.

Mr. HICKS. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will appoint the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. HICKS, to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 87, noes 94.

The CHAIRMAN. So the decision of the Chair is not sustained. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TRACEY].

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I desire to correct the language of that resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment.

Insert after the word "House," in line 5 of the amendment, "including clerks to members of the House of Representatives in Congress."

Mr. SPRINGER. I make the point of order that there is so much confusion we can not hear a word of what the Clerk is reading.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let us have the amendment read again, after there is order.

The CHAIRMAN. Conversation must cease on the floor.

The amendment as proposed to be amended was again reported.

Mr. TRACEY. The vote which has just been taken was on the question as to whether this amendment can be voted upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The question was upon an appeal from the decision of the Chair, in which the decision of the Chair was overruled by the committee declaring that this amendment was in order.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. What is the question before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I ask for order. We can not hear.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 5, after the word "House," insert the following: "including clerks to members of the House of Representatives in Congress," so as to read—

Mr. OUTHWAITE. We do not want to know how it is to read. Let us vote on the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I would like to understand what the amendment to the amendment is. I ask that the Clerk may continue to read.

The amendment and the amendment to the amendment were again reported.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I ask that the Clerk state the amendment that we are to vote upon, which is the amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a word. [Cries of "Vote!"] The object of that amendment, if I understand it correctly, is to pay a month's salary to clerks to members of this House.

Several MEMBERS. That is so.

Mr. SAYERS. That is correct, gentlemen say. Now, there are members of this House that do not pay out $25 a month for clerical services.

Several MEMBERS. Who are they?

Mr. SAYERS. There are several of them.

Mr. WALKER and others. Name one.

Mr. SAYERS. The gentlemen are here and can name themselves. I saw it stated in a paper that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER] had paid out only a few dollars for services, and then I understand that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLACK] has only paid out a few dollars.

Mr. WALKER. Then they need not take it if they do not want it.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, that amendment means simply this, and the gentleman from Texas has not stated the purpose at all. It is not to compensate Mr. BLACK, Mr. TURNER, Mr. Jones, or Mr. Smith. It is to give them a month's salary for their clerks when this House adjourns. I stated distinctly on the floor that the purpose of it was to enable the members of the Fifty-third Congress to distribute the immense amount and number of documents that will be apportioned to them under the new régime, and this is the only way by which they can get those documents.

There is another point that I want to bring to the attention of the committee. The amendment to the amendment controls in the Senate as well as in the House, and it will be an immense saving there if this amendment shall be adopted. They have been paying out money largely, and, as we think, very extravagantly at the Senate end, for this kind of work, but if this amendment is adopted it will bind them to the same rule that we are bound by at this end of the Capitol.

Mr. SIMPSON. Does this propose to pay the clerks $100 a month, or simply what members actually expend for clerk hire during the month?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. This amendment provides not $100 nor $50 nor any specific sum, but "a month's pay." Therefore, if a gentleman has been paying out $25 a month for that purpose, he can take $25.

Mr. ALLEN. And if he does not want it he need not take anything.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Or, as the gentleman from Mississippi suggests, if he does not want it, he need not take anything. This amendment neither increases nor decreases the amount that the member takes per month for clerk hire. It has nothing to do with the amount. It simply means that he can claim one month's more pay, but it neither increases nor decreases the amount.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Does not the gentleman's amendment give one month's full pay, whether the member certifies that he has paid or agreed to pay the amount for that month or not?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. It does not. The member must certify to it the same as to any other month's pay.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Suppose the member pays only $25 a month for clerical hire?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Then he gets but $25.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Does the amendment read that way?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I think it does, but you can amend it if you want it clearer. The amendment operates under the existing law, but I am willing to add a provision that the same shall be certified by the member.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia be reported in my time.

Insert after the word "House," in line 5 of the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TRACEY], the following: "Including clerks to members of the House of Representatives in Congress."

Mr. DOCKERY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to make this point, that under that amendment not a single dollar can be paid, or will be allowed to be paid by the Comptroller of the Treasury, to a member's clerk. The law does not recognize the clerks to members. It recognizes the members themselves—

Mr. LIVINGSTON. We will take care of that. If that is your view you ought to be in favor of the amendment.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I call the gentleman from Georgia to order. He has no right to interfere with the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The gentleman from Texas has no right to interfere either. [Laughter.]

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I repeat that the law deals only with the member. It authorizes the member to receive a hundred dollars for clerical service provided he certifies that he has paid or agreed to pay $100 for the month. Under that law the clerk to a member can not get $100 a month unless the member himself becomes the disbursing officer for the amount. This amendment, therefore, can not be effective unless it be so amended as to read that the members shall each be paid $100 extra, to be given to their clerks as an extra month's pay. Now, I ask members on both sides of this House whether they are willing to go on the record as voting for an amendment of that kind, which will put into their pockets as disbursing officers $100 a month for extra clerical hire; because if we are not, the clerks can not get the money in any other way.

Mr. Chairman, this is a mere gratuity which imposes a tax on the Treasury of about $35,000, without any warrant or excuse either in law or in equity. Many gentlemen, I believe, will vote for it under the idea that if adopted it will kill the proposition of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TRACEY], and if it should have that effect I do not know that I should lose very much sleep. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I voted against the amendment giving members annual clerks because I did not think that annual clerks were necessary for the transaction of the business of the House. I regarded the clerks to members as employees of the House of Representatives for the purpose of attending to the public business, and not to the private business of members. The same reason that led me to cast that vote leads me now to vote for an extra month's pay for these clerks to members for the purpose of carrying on the business of the House during the next month. Whether by law or not, in some way the custom has grown up of giving the employees of the House a month's extra pay. These clerks to members, if they have any raison d'être at all, have it in the fact that they serve the House of Representatives, and not in the fact that they serve individual members. Here is the new printing bill with a vast amount of documents to be sent to our constituents. As an individual member of this House I know that I can not possibly close up my business with my constituents in less than another month's time and that I will need the services of a clerk. If I get through with him in half a month I will certify to a half a month's pay. If I get through in ten days I will certify to ten days; if I am obliged to employ a clerk the whole month I will certify for a month's pay.

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The gentleman from Georgia has modified his amendment, I understand, by adding the words "the amount paid out to be certified by members as under existing law." This removes the objection stated by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], and I see no substantial reason, founded on fact or theory, against the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I say with pride that I do not stand here as one of the men who have put their fingers out to take money from the public Treasury wherever possible. I have sought to be guided by public not by individual interests. I say that if there is any reason at all for members having clerks it is to serve the House of Representatives as an entirety, not to serve each member as an individual. The House of Representatives as an entirety needs this service, and by analogy these men are employees of the House and should receive the same privileges as other employees. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, this appeal seems to be made and pressed in behalf of the clerks of members of this House. Those clerks are under no obligation to work one day after this session closes; and what is done by them after the close of the session will be done to assist men in many cases who are no longer members of the House, but simply private citizens.

A MEMBER. Some of them.

Another MEMBER. A majority of them.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Now, if we want to do this work, and if we want clerks to assist us, I say we ought to employ these clerks out of our own money; for, sir, they are not clerks of this House; they are simply clerks to members of Congress. The Congressional term expires on the 4th of March; and many who are now members have not been reelected; so that there is no ground for claiming that they are any longer entitled to clerks to be paid by the people of the United States. This is a work that we should do ourselves, and if we want assistance in it we should be willing to pay for the performance of work which is to assist us in sending out these documents—arrears of work that we have not performed during the session. I say this proposition can not be placed upon the ground that these clerks are employees of the House. The object of the original proposition allowing these clerical services was to enable members to be here while the House is in session, attending to the business of legislation. But after a term of Congress has closed this reason no longer exists.

Mr. TRACEY. I wish to call the attention of members to the fact that if the amendment to the amendment be carried this whole proposition will be reported to the House and voted upon as an entirety; and we all know how much difficulty there is in getting in a full House a vote in favor of such an expenditure. If the amendment to the amendment be adopted I very much fear that when the question is taken in the House the entire amendment will be lost.

Mr. SAYERS. Will the gentleman tell us why the amendment will be lost?

Mr. TRACEY. Because there will be a larger attendance than there is at present; that is one reason. [Laughter.] I hope, therefore, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment as originally offered by me will be adopted without change, and that the amendment to the amendment will be rejected.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I now call for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON] to the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TRACEY].

Mr. HULL. I understand that the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia has been modified. I ask that it be read.

The Clerk read the modified amendment of Mr. LIVINGSTON, as follows:

Insert after the word "House," in line 5 of the amendment offered by Mr. TRACEY, the following:

"Including clerks to members of the House of Representatives now in Congress, to be certified to by members as now prescribed by law."

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment of Mr. LIVINGSTON to the amendment, there were—ayes 97, noes 73.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BRECKINRIDGE and Mr. LIVINGSTON were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 111, noes 70.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TRACEY] as amended.

The question being taken, the amendment as amended was agreed to, there being on a division (called for by Mr. DOCKERY and others)—ayes 93, noes 61.

Mr. DOCKERY. I give notice that I shall call the yeas and nays on this amendment in the House.

Mr. SAYERS. I am afraid they will not give them to us.

The Clerk read the next amendment, as follows:

On page 51, amend by striking out, in line 9, the words "one hundred dollars" and inserting "three hundred dollars;" so as to read: "To pay M. M. Robinson for services rendered as assistant to the Sergeant-at-Arms, $300."

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, is this pending as an amendment to the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. SAYERS. I object to the adoption of the amendment. The extra services claimed to have been rendered by this man, and for which the extra allowance granted in the bill is to be increased from $100 to $300 at this short session of Congress, can not be shown; and besides this additional allowance he will receive the extra month's pay.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, when I was taken off the floor by the impetuosity of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [laughter] I was about to address myself to the remarks of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY].

I recognize, Mr. Chairman, the honesty of the gentlemen who are specially ordained and "consecrated" to care for the Treasury of the United States, and I am free to confess that when a man feels that special "consecration" absolutely stealing upon him I always look upon him as something that ought to be exempt even from my own assaults. [Laughter.]

But what I want to say to the gentleman from Missouri, and to the Committee on Appropriations, is this: We have rules for the governance of the House, rules of procedure well recognized on this floor, one of which is that when this bill, now under consideration, gets into the House of Representatives from the Committee of the Whole there may be a yea-and-nay vote on any item which has been added to it in the committee. It is, therefore, hardly consonant, it seems to me, with the dignity of this committee, for any gentleman, when a most decisive vote has already been taken, as there has been taken on the proposition to which the gentleman from Missouri refers, when that vote has been taken viva voce and then by tellers, and carried by an overwhelming majority, to menace the House, as though he had some special potency and authority directly environing him, with a vote in the House of Representatives. Why, anybody, the smallest member of this House, can make that demand. It does not take a man who is specially "consecrated" to secure that privilege in the House. [Laughter.] He does not even have to be a member of the Committee on Appropriations to enable him to shake his fist at the members of this House and say, "I am going to put you on record." [Laughter.] Is there anybody here who is afraid to go on record in support of his own acts?

Mr. DOCKERY. Apparently there were several the other day on other propositions.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I know that on some amendments heretofore gentlemen have seen fit to demand a record vote, as, for instance, the greater Navy. It strikes me, however, that on that occasion, if I remember correctly, the "consecrated" end of that contest came out rather the worse for it. [Laughter and applause.]

Let us go forward, then, with the business of this House in a businesslike way, and let everybody take care of himself on this and other questions and preserve his own record in the House of Representatives without menace from his fellow-members. [Applause.]

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Chairman, the amendment now before the House proposes to increase the compensation of the Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms, who is detailed from a roll carrying a salary of $900 a year, to the very inconsiderable sum of $1,200 a year. He is not hidden away in a committee room in the basement of this Capitol, where he may work or not as suits his own convenience or the necessities of the case. He is not in any quiet little nook, but is provided over there with a desk in the actual presence of the House, where every member of the House can see him during the entire sessions of the House and know the character of the work he does.

He sits at that desk day in and day out and assists the Sergeant-at-Arms of this body, keeping the pairs of the members and performing other duties of like character, that are really essential to the convenience of this body; and I do not think that there is a reasonable man on the floor of the House, outside of the Committee on Appropriations, who will not agree that he is entitled to a compensation of at least $100 a month.

I do not concede that the Committee on Appropriations own the Treasury of the United States. I know they stand here as the representatives of the Democratic party and try all they can to hold down the appropriations, but when I point out a man who is performing such work, a man who is doing perhaps as much work as any member of Congress does on the floor of the House, and in the face of the fact that last year in consequence of this additional work he was given $300 extra, and they object now to giving him $100 a month, after his eight years' experience, it does seem to me to be a little unreasonable and unjust to raise the question of the propriety of the proposed action and seek to prevent the committee from voting upon it.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. What was the original salary?

Mr. BERRY. Nine hundred dollars. He asks now only the salary of a messenger, the salary that we pay to the clerks of the members of this body. He sits here day after day performing all of the duties of the deputy of the Sergeant-at-Arms, and I appeal to the members of this committee, who know the duties he performs, to say whether this is more than a fair compensation. We have been voting away hundreds of millions of dollars in this Congress. I saw an appropriation the other day carrying some twenty-one or twenty-two millions, providing for the construction of three new battle ships and a certain number of torpedo boats, and I went so far as to vote for it myself; and yet when you come to pay a man for the duties performed here, duties that everybody sees and recognizes, objection is made. Now, I do not know what these men employed in the committee rooms do. I understand, though, that some of the committees meet once after the organization of the House and elect their clerk, who draws his salary for the session of Congress, and perhaps the committee never has another session. [Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I am not surprised that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] manifests some degree of pleasure in the fact that the total appropriations of this Congress seem to be dangerously near the billion-dollar limit. Since I have been on this side of the Chamber [the Republican side], and I frequently visit here—

Mr. GROSVENOR. I notice the gentleman has improved very much since he has done so.

Mr. DOCKERY. That may be; but since I have been on this side of the House I have heard suggestions from one or two gentlemen which seem to indicate a great deal of pleasure because the Committee of the Whole has uniformly sustained propositions increasing appropriations.

Mr. Chairman, this is not the first time since I have been connected with this body when the Committee of the Whole has been found supporting lavish appropriations. I remember very well the closing days of the Fifty-first Congress, when the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], then chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, appealed to his own side of the House to stay their riotous and relentless assaults on the Treasury. It was on the occasion of the consideration of the bill for the erection of the Philadelphia mint—

A MEMBER. Did it do any good?

Mr. DOCKERY. No; but he warned the Republican side of the House that if they continued to vote for augmenting and unnecessary appropriations, the expenditures of that Congress would exceed the billion-dollar limit, and the country would hold the Republican party to a strict accountability.

The warnings of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] were then unheeded by the Republican party. It remains to be seen whether the repeated warnings to the Democratic side of this House shall be disregarded and the Democratic party meet a like disaster with the one which overtook the Republican party in the election following the Fifty-first Congress.

I also desire to say, Mr. Chairman, that if a reasonable degree of judicious economy is observed this Congress can make ample appropriations for every branch of the public service and keep the total of the appropriations below the billion-dollar limit. If, however, lavish appropriations are to continue, if the House confirms the action of the Committee of the Whole, then this Congress as the result of the improvident action of a Democratic House and a Democratic Senate will take its place with the billion-dollar Congresses which have preceded.

I want to say further, in reply to the suggestions of the gentleman from Ohio, that I have no greater responsibility on this floor as a Representative than he has, but I shall not be deterred from the discharge of what I understand to be my official duties in respect to appropriations by the taunts of the Republican side or by sneers from Democrats who may privately ridicule economy here but who proclaim it on the "stump" when they appeal to the people. [Applause.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote on this proposition.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It seems to me that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] occupies a most unenviable position when he undertakes to lecture the House either on the Democratic side or on the Republican side. Only a few days ago the gentleman's Administration—the Administration for which he voted and behind which he stands, the Administration which he has voted to uphold and support in every issue that has been made upon the floor of this House—startled this country and startled the world by notifying Congress and notifying the people of the world that it had made a loan and issued bonds of the Government and put into the pockets of a foreign syndicate, inside of the first twenty-four hours after the conclusion of the contract, not less than $10,000,000 of the money of the people of the United States. And not only that, but they sold a bond of the United States Government at 104 that to-day is worth 116 to 120.

Several MEMBERS. One hundred and twenty.

Mr. GROSVENOR. And that is rapidly mounting to 120.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Worth it now.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes.

Mr. SPRINGER. Did not Mr. Secretary Sherman sell a 4 per cent bond at par which afterwards reached a premium of 126?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am wonderfully glad the gentleman made that statement; and now will he listen to the answer?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Twelve years after the close of a great war Mr. Secretary Sherman borrowed the money to bring about resumption. He borrowed it upon a bond which sold at par.

Mr. SPRINGER. At 4 per cent.

Mr. GROSVENOR. At 4 per cent interest, payable in "coin," and he put it into the contract that before that syndicate should have one dollar the people of the United States should have thirty days to subscribe to that loan, and take it all if they wanted it. [Applause on the Republican side.] And so rapidly, under a Republican Administration, did the credit of this Government rise that it is true that twelve years afterwards that bond became worth 120. But here is a bond, issued thirty years after the war, issued by a nation that had just been borrowing money at 2½ per cent, and this bond is sold at 104, and inside of twenty-four hours there is a profit of $10,000,000 put into the pockets of a foreign syndicate, and a miserable scheme brought in here to change our whole system, and to substitute "gold" for "coin," and in that way to depreciate our outstanding obligations more than $30,000,000 in a day.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. And it was a secret sale at that.

Mr. GROSVENOR. And it was a secret sale, and the money that is hoarded in the banks and savings institutions and everywhere throughout this country waiting and anxious for investment at 3 per cent was denied a participation in the profits.

That is the loan the gentleman is called upon to defend. The contrast is so great that no man could ask a better position to take than the position taken by Mr. Secretary Sherman.

And that is not all of it. Mr. Secretary Sherman put into the contract a provision that whenever the Treasury of the United States saw that a better loan could be made than that he reserved to the Government the right to put an end to that contract, and the Government did put an end to that contract. The contract entered into by the present Administration binds this Government until next October to give to that syndicate an option upon every bond that the United States shall issue. Look on this picture, then on that. I add an editorial from the Philadelphia Press of to-day:

SHERMAN AND CARLISLE.

A more deadly parallel for Secretary Carlisle could not have been suggested than has been urged by the New York Evening Post in declaring that Secretary Sherman's issue of bonds for the gold reserve before the resumption of specie payments in 1879 was open to the same objections as are made against Secretary Carlisle's costly contract now. Quoting Secretary Sherman's criticism in the Senate, the Post says: "If it is 'faulty and improvident' to sell a 3½ bond at 104, with the prospect of seeing it quoted at 118, what is it to sell a 4 per cent bond at 100 only to have it quoted in a few years at 138?"

This is nonsense. Secretary Sherman made his contract for gold with the Rothschilds after an open issue of bonds had failed. Secretary Carlisle made no attempt to sell on the open market. The 4 per cent bond rose while it was being placed on the market, but the advance was extended over weeks and months and never reached a fraction of the gap which separates Secretary Carlisle's bond price, 104, and the open market price, 116. The 4 per cent bonds sold by Secretary Sherman in 1878 at 100 reached 138 in eight years—in 1886. The bonds sold by Secretary Carlisle at 104 have reached 118 in two weeks.

Secretary Sherman carried out his refunding twelve years after the war, when the United States had outstanding a bonded debt thrice the size of that outstanding to-day and all but a fraction of it at 6 per cent interest. The population of the country was barely two-thirds of what it is to-day. The wealth of the country was $20,000,000,000 less. Secretary Sherman reduced the rate of interest paid by the Government one-third. Secretary Carlisle has increased it one-half and more. The appreciation of the bonds which Secretary Sherman sold took place over a term of years in the hands of investors and improved the credit of the United States. The appreciation of the bonds Secretary Carlisle has sold has taken place in a fortnight in the hands of the purchasing syndicate and has improved their profits.

No one blames Secretary Carlisle for selling bonds. It was his duty to protect the gold reserve. But he is open to blame for selling the bonds at 104 when the public of bankers was ready to take the same bonds at 112 and the public of investors at 116, and no defense of this action has yet been offered.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I ask that a vote be taken.

Mr. SPRINGER. I should like to have time to reply to the gentleman from Ohio. He has dragged into the debate something entirely foreign to it.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the amendment is limited.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I hope the gentleman will defer his remarks until a later time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I ask for a vote upon the amendment. If the gentleman from Illinois is to proceed, I ask that the debate close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman raise the point that debate on this amendment has been exhausted?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair will sustain that point.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Let us have a vote on the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. There is still another pending amendment to dispose of.

Amend by adding after line 23, on page 51, as a separate paragraph, the following:

"To pay to John W. Almarode, the father of Ernest Almarode, deceased, late an employee of the House of Representatives, a sum equal to six months of the salary being paid to him at the time of his death, and also to pay to him the amount of the expenses of the last illness and funeral of said Ernest Almarode, said expenses not to exceed $250, in all not to exceed $700."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I reserve the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to be heard upon that, if the gentleman will reserve his point of order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I will leave it pending until the gentleman can make a statement.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, on the 2d day of March, 1893, next to the last day before the preceding Congress adjourned, the Committee on Accounts of the House of Representatives reported this resolution:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House to John W. Almarode, the father of Ernest Almarode, deceased, late an employee of the House of Representatives, a sum equal to six months of the salary being paid to him at the time of his death; and that the Clerk be further directed to pay to the father of said Ernest Almarode out of the contingent fund of the House the expenses of his last illness and funeral, said expenses not to exceed $250.

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred the accompanying resolution, submitted by Mr. SPRINGER, of Illinois, have had the same under consideration and respectfully report that Ernest Almarode was employed as a page in the House of Representatives, and while filling that position died. It has been the custom for years past to allow to the families of the deceased in such cases six months' salary and funeral expenses; and your committee see no reason why it should not be allowed in this case. They therefore recommend the passage of the resolution.

That was the day before the last Congress adjourned, and it was too late in that Congress to bring the matter up. The point of order was made that it required consideration in the Committee of the Whole House, and the business was so pressing at that time that on a motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider it the yeas were 57 and the nays 62, so that the House refused to consider it at that time. That refusal, no doubt, was owing to the fact that the session was drawing to a close, only one day remaining for the House to consider its business. Now, this having been recommended by the Committee on Accounts, it comes here as a deficiency. I want to say to the members of this House that this is the only case since I have been a member of this House where a similar resolution has not been passed. It is the case of a page whose parents reside in this city and who was appointed a page of this House on my recommendation. Near the close of last Congress he sickened and died; and I ask, as a matter of justice to the parents of this page, to have the same done by him as has been done in five or six cases in this Congress and in other cases in preceding Congresses so far as I can remember; and especially when our Chaplain died, during the last Congress, we allowed his widow not only this, but a whole year's salary in addition. I ask the gentleman from Kentucky to withdraw the point of order; the account having been audited by the Committee on Accounts and it being in the nature of a deficiency, it comes under the head in this bill with all other accounts that have been audited by the Committee on Accounts. There is no other means by which this can be paid except on this deficiency bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I have nothing to say. I will leave the question of order with the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. As the gentleman insists, the Chair will be compelled to sustain the point of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I want the gentleman to withdraw the point of order on this ground. This account has been audited by the Committee on Accounts; and it does not lie, because it is expressly a case in that part of the bill which is devoted to the payment of accounts which have been audited and recommended by the Committee on Accounts. This has been audited by the Committee on Accounts and recommended by the Committee on Accounts; and, therefore, it is properly before the committee for consideration. If it is not allowed here there is no place where it can be allowed.

I appeal to the gentleman from Kentucky, and to this House, not to make a discrimination against one of the pages in a matter which has been allowed in all other cases.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I have no discretion in the matter. I represent the committee, and at a meeting of the committee I was instructed to raise the point of order on all matters which came within it. If this is not subject to the point of order, then that ends the matter.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask the gentleman to withdraw the point of order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. It seemed to us that this was a claim that ought to have been paid out of the contingent fund of the House, the Committee on Accounts having approved it; and it ought not to be put in the deficiency bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. This is the reason why that can not be done. It differs from any other application of the same kind which would be made to the Committee on Accounts in this: They will say that it did not occur during this Congress, and therefore it can not be paid out of the contingent fund of this Congress. Hence, it is a deficiency belonging to the last Congress, and it ought to be paid under this bill. If the gentleman insists upon the Chair ruling it out the committee will have made an unjust discrimination, and the only one that has been made by this House since I have been a member.

Mr. MOSES. The gentleman is mistaken about that. I remember that in the Fifty-second Congress two cases were cut out.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a ruling.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no discretion in this matter. This account is clearly not authorized by law and it is new legislation. The Chair must sustain the point of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I ask consent to offer it as a separate proposition.

Mr. SAYERS and Mr. SNODGRASS objected.

Mr. SPRINGER. I appeal to the House to allow this just claim to be adjudicated here. It is a matter which everybody knows comes within the rule of the House. I appeal for justice in this case. [Cries of "Regular order!"] I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Too late.

Mr. SPRINGER. I admit, Mr. Chairman, that the appeal comes too late, because I had asked consent to offer the matter as a separate proposition. I will not, therefore, take an appeal, but I want to remind this House that the gentlemen who have deprived this family of this allowance have done a great injustice.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

"To pay E. L. Phillips, chief page, for extra services as Department messenger from September 25 to October 24, 1893, $90.67."

Mr. HATCH. I ask that the communications from the Doorkeeper and the Committee on Accounts, which I send to the desk, be read in connection with the amendment.

The communications were read, as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., —, 1894.

DEAR SIR: I respectfully state that by direction of the Doorkeeper, in addition to my regular duties I acted in the place of Col. C. W. Coombs, Department messenger, during the period from September 25 to October 24, 1893, he being absent on account of sickness, as shown in the accompanying statement of the Doorkeeper, and I request that I be paid the difference between the salary received by me, $300 per annum, and that of the Department messenger, at $2,000 per annum, for the period mentioned, it being the sum of $90.67.

Very respectfully,

E. L. PHILLIPS,
Chief Page House of Representatives.

HON. HARRY WELLS RUSK,
Chairman Committee on Accounts.

OFFICE DOORKEEPER,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., August 7, 1894.

I hereby certify that E. L. Phillips performed the duties of Department messenger from September 25 to October 24, 1893, during the absence of Colonel Coombs, the Department messenger, on account of sickness.

Very respectfully,

A. B. HURT,
Doorkeeper House of Representatives.

COMMITTEE ON ACCOUNTS, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., December 30, 1894.

GENTLEMEN: The Committee on Accounts have duly considered the attached petition of E. L. Phillips, chief page House of Representatives, for services rendered as messenger during the illness of Col. C. W. Coombs, Department messenger, amount claimed being $90.67, and would respectfully recommend that provision be made for its payment in the general deficiency bill.

By order of the committee.

H. W. RUSK, Chairman.

To the honorable COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS,
House of Representatives.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. HATCH. These letters have been read in my time as part of my remarks, and it is too late to make the point of order on the amendment. The gentleman from Texas has had the papers in this case before him.

Mr. SAYERS. I never read them.

Mr. HATCH. Well, they went before your committee.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, I think I can explain this matter in a word. The messenger who goes from the House to the Departments was sick and absent. This young man is the chief page, for which service he receives a certain amount of pay. He did the work of Mr. Coombs, the Department messenger, during the absence of that gentleman, and he now asks to be allowed the difference between his own salary and the salary of the Department messenger for the period named in the amendment. The committee did not feel authorized to include it because there were so many other applications.

The amendment of Mr. HATCH was adopted.

Mr. SCRANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 48, where I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I hope there will be no objection to that.

There was no objection.

Mr. SCRANTON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

"For stationery for members of the House of Representatives, $125."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. That amendment ought to be adopted. A Representative from Pennsylvania was sworn in this morning, after all the estimates have been made, so that there is no appropriation out of which this stationery can be purchased. It is properly a deficiency that has to be provided for, and the necessity for it arose only since the House met to-day.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

"To pay F. C. Shell for services rendered as clerk to the Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics from January 1, 1894, during the second and third sessions of the Fifty-third Congress, $400."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, I stated to the gentleman yesterday that I would not object to that, but since then the committee has had a meeting and I have been directed to make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. SHELL. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics have directed me to present this amendment as a simple act of justice to the young man who has served as clerk to that committee for several months past. The Committee on Accounts have unanimously approved the account, and I think every member of the Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics joins in the recommendation. The services have been rendered, and I think the compensation asked for is not half the amount that the young man is really entitled to.

Mr. DINGLEY. Has that committee a per diem clerk?

Mr. SHELL. No, sir. This young man is the only clerk the committee has.

Mr. DINGLEY. That is all right.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I am bound to make the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BYNUM. Has this clerk received anything as clerk to a member?

Mr. SHELL. He has.

Mr. BYNUM. He has received $100 a month?

Mr. SHELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. BYNUM. And if he had been clerk to the committee the chairman of the committee would not have had a private clerk?

Mr. SHELL. That, I suppose, is correct.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, in arranging for committee clerks at the beginning of the session no clerk was allowed to the Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics, because ordinarily little work has been done by that committee; but there were such complaints coming from all over the House that the committee were obliged to take some action, and this young man has done the work of clerk to the committee.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, I know the facts, and this young man seems to be entitled to some compensation; but the House positively refused to give this committee a clerk, and under the direction I have received from the Committee on Appropriations I do not see my way clear to withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would inquire of the gentleman from South Carolina whether there is any law or any resolution of the House authorizing the employment and payment of this clerk?

Mr. SHELL. I think the precedent has been abundantly set here during yesterday in paying for similar services.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will bear in mind that the point of order was not made in those cases. The Chair must sustain the point of order.

Mr. SHELL. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. SAYERS. I desire to say a word on the appeal.

Mr. BRETZ. So do I. Mr. Chairman, a month or two ago a resolution passed this House authorizing a subcommittee of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to meet with the Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics for the purpose of making some investigation into the sanitary condition of this House. I happened to be one of the members detailed for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand that there is any question before the committee.

Mr. SHELL. I gave notice of an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was not aware of it.

Mr. SHELL. I insist on the appeal.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman states that he made the appeal in time—

Mr. SHELL. Oh, yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair accepts the statement of the gentleman, of course.

Mr. BRETZ. I want to say—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BRETZ] is addressing himself to the question of the appeal.

Mr. BRETZ. Yes, sir. Mr. Chairman, since my assignment to this duty I have been meeting with the committee regularly. There have been something like fifteen or twenty meetings. On the occasion of every meeting this young man has attended and performed all the duties of a regular clerk of the committee. To my certain knowledge he was requested time after time by members of the committee to go to different parts of the Capitol for the purpose of gathering information that the committee desired. He did this work on all occasions when requested. He received no pay, and I think he ought in justice to be paid the difference between the amount which he drew as clerk to a member and the compensation of a regular committee clerk. I think his services entitle him to that compensation. They were valuable services which were rendered for the benefit of the committee and this House. I think the appeal ought to be sustained.

Mr. BROWN. For what reason?

Mr. BRETZ. For the reason that this young man has simply earned all that he is asking for. I have no interest in this matter. I do not know anything about the young man except as I have met him in connection with the work of the committee.

Mr. MORSE. I should like to ask the gentleman what has come of the meetings of this joint committee?

Mr. BRETZ. I will say to the gentleman that the committee had a meeting this morning; and we are going to have more meetings.

Mr. MORSE. I hope there will be more meetings, and that something will come of them.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard a moment on this point. This is a very meritorious case, and I hope gentlemen of the House will pay attention to the statement of its merits. As the occupant of the chair will recollect, for some two months past a subcommittee of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has been meeting with the Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics, in accordance with an order of this House, and as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BRETZ] has stated, we have had some twenty or more meetings; and at those meetings this young man, Mr. Shell, has performed all the duties of clerk to the committee, and they have been onerous, varied, and exacting. We have met almost every other day. This young man has faithfully waited upon the committee, by notifying the members and keeping a record of our proceedings, and performing many other duties incident to the labors of a committee clerk. Up to this time no provision has been made to give him any compensation.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] was spoken to on this subject, and it was agreed yesterday that no point of order should be raised in this case on account of the special merit attaching to the services of this young man. I am surprised, therefore, that a point of order should be raised now, after what transpired yesterday. It was agreed that this young man should receive a fair compensation for his services, for which no provision has yet been made. It would be very unjust if he should be denied any compensation. I trust the gentleman from Kentucky will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Allow me to explain my attitude in reference to this matter. As gentlemen interested in this claim understand, it was before the subcommittee that prepared this bill and was rejected. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] came before us and made a statement, a perfectly clear statement; statements were made by others; but the claim was finally rejected because we thought that as the House had refused to give this committee a clerk it would not be right for us to come in and ask an allowance of this kind on our bill. Besides, we did not think from the testimony before us that this young man is entitled to the full amount of the difference between his salary as clerk of a member and the salary of a committee clerk. But I did say to the gentleman that personally I favored the payment of something to this young man for the services he had rendered. I understood an agreement was made at $500 with some member of the subcommittee, and I said, in view of that understanding, that I would be willing, if necessary, to allow $400.

Yesterday afternoon, when so many amendments were offered, when every gentleman on the floor seemed to have somebody—an officer of the House—in view and to speak for, the subcommittee had a meeting after the adjournment, and I was directed to reserve points of order. I am acting, therefore, now simply as the representative of the subcommittee. I would be perfectly willing to pay this young man some reasonable compensation for his services—

Mr. HICKS. If the gentleman will permit me, at the time the House of Representatives refused to give a clerk to this committee there was no special business before it; but the House itself, as the gentleman knows, by a resolution adopted, imposed a lot of extra work on the Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics, and it was impossible for the chairman of that committee to attend to the duties devolving upon him without the assistance of a clerk. He therefore called in his own clerk and employed him in that service. Now, certainly the House, after putting this extra work on the committee, will not refuse to pay the young man who was necessarily employed for the additional service rendered. The amount is reasonable, and, in view of the understanding which was reached in reference to this matter when it was talked over, I hope that the gentleman from Kentucky will withdraw the point he has made and see that the agreement is lived up to.

Mr. SAYERS. The gentleman from Pennsylvania does not refer to me as agreeing to anything?

Mr. HICKS. I will say for the gentleman from Texas, that when I went to him he referred me to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], with the understanding that any arrangement I could make with him would not receive his disapproval.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. HICKS. I want to be fair in the matter, and my only purpose, in the statement I have made, is to show that this young man who performed this work ought to be paid, and it was understood that he should be paid.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. STOCKDALE. I want to say a word on this question of order.

Mr. WALKER. I am a member of the committee, and have been trying for the last ten minutes to get the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman hereafter; but the gentleman from Mississippi rises to a question of order, and will state it.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I want to know something of the legal proposition involved here in the appeal. That I understand to be the question before the committee, and not a discussion of the merits of the proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi makes the point of order that gentlemen discussing this matter must confine themselves to the question of appeal.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, the matter is now a question on the merits of the case. A decision was made on the point of order and an appeal taken, and now the House has a right to know the facts on which the appeal is based. Personally I have no interest in the matter; all I want is justice done to this young man.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE (to Mr. HICKS). What does the gentleman ask in this proposition?

Mr. HICKS. Four hundred dollars.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. The gentleman made the impression on my mind—I will not say he said so in so many words, for I was very busy at the time when he came and leaned over my desk and talked to me; but the impression was made upon my mind that the proposition here was $500, and that that amount ought to be given. I declined that and said I was not willing to yield to it. Afterwards I was asked if I would agree to $400, with the understanding that an arrangement had been made with other members of the subcommittee at $400. I said yes, if that is satisfactory. I subsequently understood that I was laboring under a misapprehension or a mistake—

Mr. HICKS. I gave the gentleman no misinformation and said nothing that could cause such a misunderstanding.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I do not mean to say that the gentleman did, but as I have said I was very busy at the time and the impression made upon me was that $500 had been agreed to by some members of the subcommittee.

Mr. SAYERS. I did not agree to anything.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. After that conversation, however, as I have said, the subcommittee had a meeting and directed me to raise points of order.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I desire the House to understand exactly the facts here. It would certainly be unfair as well as unjust, if the House, under the circumstances, would refuse to pay this young man a fair equivalent for the services he has rendered. He rendered these services faithfully and carefully. The House ordered the work to be done, and the committee of course could not do it without the service of a clerk. If the services are worth only $300, pay it; but I should prefer that he receive $400, which amount Colonel BRECKINRIDGE said he would agree to.

Mr. WALKER. I want to appeal to the gentleman in charge of this bill to see if I can not arrange this question of order. I understand that there are 14 clerks provided for in our appropriations that have not been assigned. Now, if no clerk was assigned to this committee, for it was supposed it would have no practical duties to perform—but if the appropriation is made for 14 clerks, why can not the money be paid out of the appropriations for the other clerks not assigned and withdraw the point of order? That is the condition now. We do not ask even for the making up of the difference that this clerk ought to get between the pay of a member's clerk and the pay of a regular clerk to the committee. We ask only $400, and I hope the gentleman from Kentucky will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I will say this: I feel that a misapprehension has existed for which I may possibly have been partly to blame, although I take this gratuitously upon myself, and will withdraw the point of order, and move to insert $300 instead of $400 in the amendment.

Mr. SHELL. I will accept that.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. REILLY). The Chair would say that he has grave doubts as to whether the point of order was well taken, because under the act of 1894 provision was made for clerks to twenty-six of the committees of the House; but later, by action of the House, on a resolution to assign them, the House refused to concur in the resolution. So the Chair has some grave doubt in his mind whether, there being in existence this law authorizing the employment of clerks, the amendment would not be properly in order. But, in harmony with the rulings of the gentleman presiding in Committee of the Whole, the Chair felt bound to sustain the point of order.

The question now is on the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky to the pending amendment, to strike out "four hundred" and insert "three hundred."

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE] is recognized.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Chairman, I would vote for this appropriation or the expenses of the Committee on Acoustics and Ventilation with a good deal better grace if I could see some results; and see that something had come of the joint meetings of that committee with the subcommittee of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. Chairman, the mortality and sickness among the members of Congress is appalling—fourteen members of the Fifty-first Congress died and a similar number of the Fifty-second. Eleven members of this Congress have died, and four members of the Pennsylvania delegation alone.

Mr. Chairman, we have mortuary honors to some deceased member almost every week, and twice this week, Thursday afternoon and again this afternoon. The serious illness of members of Congress is appalling. Mr. Chairman, there must be some cause for this in the conditions which surround us here. What is it? I believe it is the smoke and vile, filthy air we have to breathe in this Chamber, and I want the Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics to hurry up and invent some way to get fresh air in this Hall except through a spittoon, which is the use made of the floor ventilators at present. Why, Mr. Chairman, it is only a difference in degrees of filth in all parts of this building. If there is anything in the germ theory of disease, then it is easy for us to get diphtheria, catarrh, and consumption out of these ventilators into which the members expectorate.

Mr. BRETZ. I should like to state to the gentleman that the committee is now almost ready to make its report.

Mr. WALKER. And sitting every day.

Mr. BRETZ. And sitting every day, and we will make that report next week, as soon as we can get the facts together.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Chairman, one word more and I have done. This is the only hall in the United States I ever heard of where they took in fresh air through a spittoon. Why, Mr. Chairman, this place smells like a barroom to me every time I go out and come in.

A MEMBER. How do you know? [Laughter.]

Mr. MORSE. Gentlemen think I do not know how a barroom smells. I do, for I have walked by them and smelled them from the outside. [Laughter.]

By all means let the Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics secure, if possible, some improved method of ventilating this Hall at once.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment, offered by the gentleman from Kentucky. The Clerk will report the amendment and the amendment to the amendment.

On page 51, at the end of line 23, insert:

"To pay F. C. Shell, for services rendered as clerk to the Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics, from January 4, 1894, during the second and third sessions of the Fifty-third Congress, $400."

The amendment to the amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out the word "four" and insert the word "three."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BYNUM. I desire to offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk. The amendment should properly, in an orderly arrangement of the bill, come in on page 48, at line 12, instead of at the end of the paragraph, and I ask unanimous consent that it be considered as offered at that point.

Mr. DINGLEY. Let it be reported first.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Let the amendment be read. I wish to make a point of order on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will first be reported, subject to the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Speaker of the House of Representatives is hereby directed to certify, and the Sergeant-at-Arms to pay, the Representatives the amounts respectively deducted and withheld from their monthly payments of salary on account of absence.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I reserve a point of order upon that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that this be considered as offered at line 12, page 48.

Mr. BYNUM. I am willing that the point of order shall be reserved, but let it be considered as offered at that place.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I have no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. BLACK. I object.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. This is simply a question as to where the amendment shall come in. It does not affect the merits of it at all.

Mr. BLACK. Then I withdraw the objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment, then, will be considered as offered to come in after line 12, on page 48, and the point of order is reserved on it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. It is absolutely clear that we can not get through this bill by 3 o'clock. There is another matter pending. I suggest that this remain pending, and let the Clerk read the bill through as to all matters about which there is no dispute.

Mr. BYNUM. I am perfectly willing to let this be pending until all the bill has been read.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. With the point of order pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the reading of the bill may proceed to its conclusion, and that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana may be considered as pending. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I ask unanimous consent now that the Clerk be authorized to change the footings in the bill to correspond with the changes that have been necessitated by the various amendments that have been made.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the Clerk be authorized to correct the computations or footings, showing the totals of the amounts appropriated in the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Public Printer to comply with the provisions of the law granting thirty days' annual leave to the employees of the Government Printing Office, $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I want to offer an amendment to come in after line 23, page 52.

On page 52, at the end of line 23, after the word "necessary," insert the following:

"And the Public Printer is authorized to pay pro rata leave of absence to any former employees of the Government Printing Office who have during the present fiscal year resigned, died, or otherwise severed his or her connection with the office, notwithstanding the fact that thirty days' leave of absence, with pay, may have been granted to such employee during the fiscal year on account of service rendered in a previous fiscal year.

"Hereafter the Public Printer is authorized to pay pro rata leave of absence out of any appropriations for leaves of absence to employees of the Government Printing Office in any fiscal year, notwithstanding the fact that thirty days' leave of absence, with pay, may have been granted to such employee in that fiscal year on account of service rendered in a previous fiscal year."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I desire simply to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the Public Printer showing the necessity for this amendment.

Mr. DINGLEY. I reserve the point of order for the moment. I do not understand what is to be accomplished by this.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. This is exactly the same thing that we agreed to in a former bill. It is for the purpose of allowing the Public Printer to pay for such parts of a year as were in another year. He has not the right to do that now.

Mr. DINGLEY. That is right.

Mr. SAYERS. If the leaves had been granted in the same year he could pay it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The letter above referred to is as follows:

OFFICE OF THE PUBLIC PRINTER,
Washington, D. C., February 18, 1895.

DEAR SIR: I desire to call your attention to the fact that section 23 of Public Act No. 15, "An act providing for the public printing and binding, and the distribution of public documents," as approved January 12 last, in these words, "The employees of the Government Printing Office, whether employed by the piece or otherwise, shall be allowed leave of absence with pay, to the extent of not exceeding thirty days for one fiscal year," repealed that portion of Public Act No. 90, approved June 19, 1894, which reads as follows:

"Hereafter the Public Printer is authorized to pay pro rata leave of absence out of any appropriation for leaves of absence to employees of the Government Printing Office in any fiscal year, notwithstanding the fact that thirty days' leave of absence, with pay, may have been granted to such employees in that fiscal year on account of service rendered in the previous fiscal year."

I ask that you reenact the repealed section to the extent that I may be permitted to settle the pro rata leave account found to be due any employee of this office who may have severed his or her connection with the office by death, resignation, or otherwise, at any time, notwithstanding the fact that such parties may have received thirty days' leave of absence during the fiscal year for a prior year's service.

Under authority of statute, employees are credited with the leave earned by service in the office, and it is just, at the time of severing their connection with the office, that their claims should be met and their book account balanced.

Without statutory authority I seek, Congress will be asked at intervals, as in the past, for deficiency appropriations for this purpose. No additional appropriations will be needed, as the sum of $50,000, as placed in the deficiency bill by your committee for leaves of absence, will be sufficient, in my judgment, to discharge all such obligations, including regular leaves of the present fiscal year.

Respectfully,

HON. JOSEPH D. SAYERS,
House of Representatives.

TH. E. BENEDICT, Public Printer.

The Clerk read as follows:

JUDGMENTS IN INDIAN DEPREDAATION CLAIMS.

For payment of the judgment of the Court of Claims in favor of John S. Friend for $807, after the deductions required to be made under the provisions of section 6 of the act approved March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for the adjustment and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations," shall have been ascertained and duly certified by the Secretary of the Interior to the Secretary of the Treasury, which certification shall be made as soon as practicable after the passage of this act, and such deductions shall be made according to the discretion of Secretary of the Interior, having due regard to the educational and other necessary requirements of the tribe or tribes affected; and the amounts paid shall be reimbursed to the United States at such times and in such proportions as the Secretary of the Interior may decide to be for the interests of the Indian service.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment there.

The Clerk read as follows:

On pages 53 and 54 strike out all of lines 24 and 25 and lines 1 to 15, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof:

"For payment of judgments of the Court of Claims in Indian depredation cases in the order in which they are certified to Congress in Senate Executive Document No. 7, parts 1 and 2, Nos. 82 and 123, and Senate Miscellaneous Document No. 249 of the Fifty-third Congress, second session, and House Executive Document No. 143 and Senate Executive Document No. 86 of this session, $200,000 or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay and discharge such judgments as have been rendered against the United States, after the deductions required to be made under the provisions of section 6 of the act approved March 3, 1891, entitled 'An act to provide for the adjustment and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations,' shall have been ascertained and duly certified by the Secretary of the Interior to the Secretary of the Treasury, which certification shall be made as soon as practicable after the passage of this act, and such deductions shall be made according to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, having due regard to the educational and other necessary requirements of the tribe or tribes affected; and the amounts paid shall be reimbursed to the United States at such times and in such proportions as the Secretary of the Interior may decide to be for the interests of the Indian service: Provided, That no one of the said judgments shall be paid until the Attorney-General shall have certified to the Secretary of the Treasury that he has caused to be examined the evidence heretofore presented to the Court of Claims in support of said judgment and such other pertinent evidence as he shall be able to procure as to whether fraud, wrong, or injustice has been done to the United States or whether exorbitant sums have been allowed, and finds upon such evidence no grounds sufficient in his opinion to support a new trial of said case; or until there shall have been filed with said Secretary a duly certified transcript of the proceedings of the Court of Claims denying the motion made by the Attorney-General for a new trial in any one of said judgments: Provided further, That any and all judgments included in said documents which the present Attorney-General has already examined, and is willing to certify under the provisions of this act, and any and all judgments rendered during his term of office which he shall be willing to certify under the provisions of this act may be certified notwithstanding the order of payment herein specified."

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I desire to ask a question there.

Mr. DINGLEY. I reserve the question of order against that amendment.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I rise to make an inquiry. Is this a proposition to strike out lines 23 and 24, on page 53, and to line 15, on page 54, under the head of "Indian depredations?"

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. It strikes out that section and puts this amendment under the head of "Indian depredation claims."

Mr. BAILEY. I have conferred with the gentleman from Kentucky in charge of the bill, and also with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and they both agree that this is a just and proper amendment. If the gentleman from Maine will permit me to anticipate the point of order, I would suggest to him—

Mr. DINGLEY. I simply reserved it until I could hear what it was.

Mr. BAILEY. I would suggest to him that this is in exact accordance with the present law, which, indeed, would require double this appropriation.

Mr. SAYERS. I will explain to the gentleman from Maine and to the gentleman from Illinois. They will probably remember that at the last session, when the general deficiency bill was up, there was a controversy between the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN] and myself and others in regard to the adoption of an amendment looking to the payment of judgments that had already been rendered. Inasmuch as it had been rumored that many of those judgments had been obtained by collusion or through inadvertence and inattention on the part of the officers of the Government, we finally agreed to an appropriation with that clause attached, which is the law now. My colleague from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] and also the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN] have spoken to me on the subject at this session, and I have agreed that if the same provision should be made in this bill I would agree to an appropriation, leaving still about three hundred and fifty or four hundred thousand dollars of these judgments unprovided for. But inasmuch as those judgments are being investigated, and probably will have been fully investigated and reported upon by the time Congress next meets, I thought it only right that the appropriation should be allowed.

Mr. HERMANN. What amount does the gentleman mean?

Mr. SAYERS. Two hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. DINGLEY. Are these judgments certified to Congress within the time provided by law?

Mr. SAYERS. They were certified to the last Congress.

Mr. DINGLEY. And the proviso preserves all rights?

Mr. SAYERS. Yes. It is identically the same that was put in the last general deficiency bill.

Mr. DINGLEY. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I desire to ask unanimous consent to put in the RECORD a letter from the Attorney-General giving a list of judgments that have been certified since the last list was sent down.

Mr. HERMANN. It is a list of judgments as to which no payments have yet been made. I understand.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Yes, sir.

The letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., February 21, 1895.

SIR: I have to acknowledge the receipt of your telegram of this date requesting a list of all judgments in Indian depredation claims to which the United States have no further defense or against which the United States can take no further steps, and in reply to transmit herewith a list of all such judgments rendered since August 23, 1894.

All judgments rendered prior to that date have heretofore been reported to Congress, and were appropriated for, provisionally, by an act approved on that day; and the cases which have been certified to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment under that act were reported to Congress, as therein provided, on January 19, 1895, and may be found in House Executive Document No. 245 of the present session.

The final judgments for which no appropriation has been made are as follows:

In whose favor rendered.	Amount claimed.	Amount of judgment.	Date of judgment.
James Wilcox	$10,315.00	$3,825.00	Dec. 24, 1894.
Wyllis K. Morris	125.00	125.00	Do.
James M. Whitmore, administrator	30,290.00	22,370.00	Do.
Faustin Vigil	425.00	240.00	Jan. 23, 1895.
Juan Montes Vigil, administrator	300.00	100.00	Feb. 4, 1895.
Teodora Trujillo de Gomes, administratrix	500.00	100.00	Do.
William Carl, jr.	625.00	360.00	Do.
Antonio A. Vigil and José C. Vigil, administrators	825.00	575.00	Feb. 11, 1895.
George W. Thompson and Lonny Horn, surviving partners	2,580.00	2,445.00	Feb. 15, 1895.

Respectfully,

RICHARD OLNEY,
Attorney-General.

Hon. W. C. P. BRECKINRIDGE,
House of Representatives.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. This amendment appropriates how much?

Mr. BAILEY. Two hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Two hundred thousand dollars with all these safeguards, to pay judgments that are certified by the Attorney-General as the law provides. It seems to me that that is proper, but I want to ask the gentleman from Texas whether it is not true that there are about $300,000 or more of these claims in the same position?

Mr. BAILEY. Hardly $300,000, though there is quite a number of judgments; but this amendment stipulates that the judgments shall be paid in their order. I believe that it would be right and proper to appropriate a sum sufficient to pay all of these judgments under the safeguards provided in this amendment.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. But the safeguard is now in the bill, is it not?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes, sir. This amendment contains it.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Then why not increase this amount to three or four or five hundred thousand, because, as this provides that the judgments shall be paid in the order in which they are rendered, you make fish of one and fowl of another.

Mr. SAYERS. I suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that it is very probable that of these judgments, aggregating about $750,000, all will not have to be paid, so that there is no necessity for appropriating the full amount now.

Mr. BAILEY. I will say frankly to the gentleman from Illinois that I would vote to appropriate every dollar that is necessary to pay any judgment, but we have agreed now to take two hundred thousand.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I will ask my friend, for he has investigated the matter, does he believe that there will be certified under this provision, between now and the 1st of December, $300,000 of these judgments?

Mr. BAILEY. I do not. I say so because the Attorney-General has filed motions for new trials in a great many cases, and does not seem to be disposed to press a determination of those motions.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. You think, then, that the $200,000 will pay the judgments for the coming fiscal year?

Mr. BAILEY. I think it will.

Mr. HERMANN. I am glad that the gentleman from Texas has made that qualification—that the Attorney-General does not seem to be disposed to try those motions for new trials.

Mr. BAILEY. I think it is a just criticism.

Mr. HERMANN. It is, and I am ready to unite with the gentleman in the criticism.

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. I offer an amendment to come in after line 4, page 58.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

After line 4, page 58, insert the following:

"To pay Bate Martin $77.80, the amount allowed by the Third Auditor of the Treasury Department, under the act of July 4, 1864."

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. What is this about?

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. It is a claim allowed by the Treasury Department, and certified—

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. What for?

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. For supplies furnished during the war.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Where?

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. Near Pilot Knob, Mo. They were furnished to Gen. Thomas C. Fletcher's troops. His adjutant neglected to furnish a voucher at the time, the proof being afterwards furnished. It was allowed by the Treasury Department, and is embraced in the report made by the Secretary of the Treasury April 30, 1892.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Has the gentleman that report?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. This is a very small claim, but it properly belongs in what is known as the "4th of July bill;" it would be entirely proper in that bill, but it is not proper on this.

Mr. SAYERS. I trust the gentleman from Missouri will not insist on this amendment. He knows that every time this proposition has come up in the committee it has been defeated.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. I do not think, upon a small matter like this, any quibble should be raised in regard to the committee to which it should be referred, and thereby prevent exact justice from being accomplished. This claim has waited a long time. It has been certified to by the Treasury Department as a proper account, and why not allow it? The only objection seems to be that it is almost too small a matter to be brought before Congress.

A MEMBER. How much?

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. Seventy-seven dollars and eighty cents.

A MEMBER. Why not pay it out of your own pocket?

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. I would do so if there were not a surplus in the Treasury. [Laughter.] I hope that the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. SIMPSON. Is this claim payable in "coin?"—Will silver be accepted?

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. This is a deficiency and has been certified to by the proper officer of the Government. How can it be subject to a point of order?

Mr. SAYERS. If we admit this, there are several hundred thousand dollars of claims of the same kind yet to be paid.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Very much more than that—millions.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. I do not see how this claim stands on different footing from the Indian depredation claims which the gentlemen of the Committee on Appropriations have just allowed to be put on this bill, amounting to several hundred thousand dollars. This House is sometimes very generous; it ought to be just.

Mr. SIMPSON. Will this claimant take his pay in silver?

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. He will take anything he can get. Yes; he will take silver.

Mr. SIMPSON. Then I am for your proposition. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Kentucky please state the grounds on which he raises the point of order?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. The ground of objection is that this is a claim which, whatever may be its merits, should go under the rules of the House to the Committee on Claims, and is not proper as an appropriation upon a deficiency bill. There are claims amounting to millions and millions of dollars which have been audited by particular officers and which remain unpaid, but which do not belong to a deficiency bill and would not be proper on such a bill.

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. Allow me to correct my colleague. The gentleman speaks of these claims amounting to "millions." There are only about $2,200 of them.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. What class of claims does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. "Fourth of July claims," which have been allowed.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I do not confine my remarks to "4th of July claims;" I am referring generally to claims against the Government which have been passed by the auditing officers. There are over $100,000 of such claims for barracks and supplies—

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. They are not claims like this.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. They may not be like this in a strict sense of the term; but they are like this in the sense that they are claims and not deficiencies. That is the point.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] insist that the payment of this claim is not authorized by existing law—

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I know nothing about that.

The CHAIRMAN. Or that the allowance of this claim would change existing law?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I do not know anything about that.

Mr. SAYERS. I suggest that this is merely a claim; such matters have always been treated simply as claims—

The CHAIRMAN. That is not the point.

Mr. SAYERS. And they have no place on a deficiency bill.

The CHAIRMAN. A claim might have a right to be placed on a deficiency bill if it were a claim accruing against the Government under existing law in force at the time it accrued.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. This is not a deficiency under the rules of the House. This is a claim and should go to the Committee on Claims. The Committee on Appropriations would have no jurisdiction of such a claim. If we should attempt to take it up, it would be rejected by the committee, not because it necessarily lacks merit as a claim, but because it does not come within our jurisdiction. Such claims are never sent to our committee. Certain claims are sent to the Committee on Claims; certain claims to the Committee on War Claims; certain claims to the Committee on Private Land Claims; certain claims to the Committee on Invalid Pensions; certain claims to the Committee on Pensions; certain claims to the Committee on Foreign Affairs; and so on.

Now, under the rules of the House each bill carries its own appropriations; and a deficiency bill is only for those things which are really deficiencies. This is not a deficiency in any sense of the word.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. What is the difference between these claims and claims certified from the Second Auditor's Office?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Because they are sent down, under the law, to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. But I mean as an exact matter of justice, what is the difference?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. It is a matter of law; the rules provide for it. Certain claims are sent to our committee, under the rules, to make provision for them.

Mr. DINGLEY. They are deficiencies for current expenditures.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Yes, as my colleague suggests, they are deficiencies for the current expenditures of the Government. They are certified under certain acts of Congress and sent to our Committee on Appropriations, and then we have jurisdiction. Of the others we have not jurisdiction. The whole question is simply this: Can you turn this bill into a general claims bill and put on it every claim or gratuity which it may be alleged the Government of the United States owes?

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. Permit me a moment.

This matter comes to the House from the Treasury Department, certified by the Secretary of the Treasury, and is embraced in a small lot of claims sent on the 13th of April, 1892, in reference to which the Auditor states that "they are in pursuance of the second section of the act of June 16, 1871, and include claims examined and allowed under the provisions of the act of July 4, 1864." Now, after this claim has been considered and approved by the Department, recognized as a just claim, I do not see why it should stand upon a different footing from the claims to which the gentleman from Kentucky refers. It looks strange to me, after the House has voted thousands and thousands of dollars as a gratuity, providing for large payments, that the moment a claimant comes here with an honest claim, allowed by the proper Department, the point of order is made against it.

Mr. SIMPSON. And after voting twenty-three millions for battle ships.

A MEMBER. The gentleman from Missouri voted for that himself. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is unable to determine what particular rule this amendment is obnoxious to—

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. There is no particular rule.

The CHAIRMAN. And not being clear as to the existence of such rule, and none having been pointed out—

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. None can be pointed out.

Mr. SAYERS. If the Chair will allow me a moment, this comes under what are known as the 4th of July claims. You may take the history of our deficiency bills for ten or fifteen years, certainly eight years to my personal knowledge, and you will find that this class of claims has always been sent to the Committee on War Claims under the rules of the House and has never been appropriated for on a general deficiency bill. They are never sent to the Committee on Appropriations and there has never been a single one of them allowed as a part of this bill. We have uniformly had rulings of Chairmen of Committee of the Whole when the bill has been under consideration against this very proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. Can the gentleman cite the Chair to such a ruling?

Mr. SAYERS. I think I can, if the Chair will allow a little time. I think I can find where there was a ruling against this very claim, and it was held out of order.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I call the attention of the Chair to this fact: That there is nothing in this Congress to give any committee, under its rules, any jurisdiction in this matter without reference to when or where it originated.

This seems to be an executive document forwarded in 1892. I presume it had a proper reference in the Fifty-first Congress, but there is nothing in the President's message or any other document from any other Department or any certificate that gives any committee jurisdiction. Perhaps it has been paid. Perchance the Auditor has reversed himself; I do not know. I merely suggest this for the consideration of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection this matter will be temporarily passed over.

Mr. SAYERS. It has, I believe, been ruled on heretofore. The gentleman himself, if I recollect aright, has tried to get it upon the bill before now.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. But it might have been ruled out on wrong grounds. Give him another chance.

The CHAIRMAN. The matter will be passed over for the present, and the Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

CLAIMS REPORTED BY THE AUDITOR FOR THE WAR DEPARTMENT.

For pay, etc., of the Army, $1,531.61.
For subsistence of the Army, $224.58.
For regular supplies, Quartermaster's Department, $113.70.
For incidental expenses, Quartermaster's Department, $2,058.73.
For transportation of the Army and its supplies, $1,139.37.

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

On page 59, after line 17, insert:
"For payment on account of transportation of the Army for 1881 and prior years, the following numbered Treasury settlements, heretofore allowed and certified by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury under appropriations the balances of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund, and enumerated and described in Executive Documents Nos. 55 and 153, Forty-eighth Congress, first and second sessions, and House Miscellaneous Document No. 56, Fifty-third Congress, third session, namely: Nos. 174, 161, 176, 331, 162, 210, 333, 332, 543, 544, 701, 711, 805, 944, 1206, 1536, 1538, 1715, 990—amounting to the sum of $37,313.44."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I make the point of order against that amendment. Those are rejected claims.

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut. If it is the pleasure of the gentleman that the remainder of the bill be read, I am willing to let this amendment go over.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I wish to discuss the point of order when it is taken up. I wish simply to say to the gentleman from Kentucky, now, that they are not disallowed claims.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I thought they were claims that had been rejected by Mr. Maynard and Mr. Blackburn, after having been once allowed, some of them, by Mr. Upton.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. They have been allowed by Mr. Upton. They were disallowed by Mr. Maynard, but they have been reallocated since by Mr. Mansur. They were never rejected, in the proper sense. There was a review. They have been reviewed again and allowed by Mr. Mansur, the present assistant.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Let them go over, and we will examine them between now and Monday. Let the point of order be reserved.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

CLAIMS REPORTED BY THE AUDITOR FOR THE WAR DEPARTMENT.

For horses for cavalry and artillery, $521.43.
Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Between lines 21 and 22, on page 59, insert the following:
"For barracks and quarters, $39,592.62."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I should like to inquire of the gentleman why that item has been omitted.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Has the gentleman examined the report of the committee?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I have not.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I suggest to the gentleman that he read the report of the committee.

Mr. SAYERS. I think he will then withdraw his amendment.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Let this go over the same as the others, with the point of order reserved.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the amendment will lie over temporarily.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, there is a question raised by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON] which we might take up and dispose of before 3 o'clock. I see the gentleman from Georgia is here. There is a question of order pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 48, after line 8, insert:
"To pay the claims of Charles Morgan, C. B. Payne, and the Southern Steamship Company, audited and reported to the Forty-sixth Congress; the claims of Charles Morgan and M. C. Mordecai, audited and reported to the Forty-eighth Congress; being for allowance for one month's extra pay as United States mail contractors, $17,510.63, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I want to ask if there is a point of order pending on that amendment?

Mr. SAYERS. There is.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I understood that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH], who was in the chair yesterday at the time this amendment was offered, overruled the point of order.

Mr. SAYERS. Not at all; he did not overrule it.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I will let the RECORD decide that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the RECORD.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. While that is being looked up, I desire to ask unanimous consent to put into the RECORD a letter from Mr. Carroll D. Wright giving fuller information about the census matter concerning which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HEPBURN] questioned me yesterday.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the letter will be inserted in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, CENSUS OFFICE,
Washington, February 23, 1895.

MY DEAR SIR: I note that an inquiry was made yesterday as to the publication of the final reports of the Eleventh Census.

The whole number of final volumes is 25. This number does not include the Compendium or Abstract. Of the 25 final volumes, 5 have already been issued; 3 will be issued in a very few days; 10 more are nearly ready, and have been out of the control of the Census for a long time. There are but a few pages more to go to the printer. I see no reason why the whole 25 volumes should not be out during the present calendar year, which will close the Census publications nearly three years earlier than they were closed for the Tenth Census. In addition to the final volumes already issued, parts 1 and 2 of the Compendium are out, while the third is waiting for final results in a few directions. Nearly all of the material facts of the census have long been before the public in the form of bulletins, so the final volumes cause no delay in the publication of such information.

I send you these memoranda in case further inquiries should be made relative to the completion of the census.

I am, very respectfully,

CARROLL D. WRIGHT,
Commissioner of Labor in Charge.

HON. W. C. P. BRECKINRIDGE,
Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

Mr. SAYERS. I ask for the reading of the RECORD, to show what was done yesterday when the amendment referred to by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON] was offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the RECORD on the point involved.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I offer an amendment on page 48, after line 8.

"On page 48, after line 8, insert:

"To pay the claims of Charles Morgan, C. B. Payne, and the Southern Steamship Company, audited and reported to the Forty-sixth Congress; the claims of Charles Morgan and M. C. Mordecai, audited and reported to the Forty-eighth Congress; being for allowance for one month's extra pay as United States mail contractors, $17,510.83, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. While I am in favor of paying these claims, if subject to the point of order I feel it my duty to make the point of order.

Mr. SAYERS. I am opposed to paying these claims.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to hear the gentleman on the point of order. I want to know where it is.

Mr. DINGLEY. Has the amendment been read?

Mr. DOCKERY. Reserve every point of order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I make the point of order that there is no law under which they can be paid.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Why, in answer to that, Mr. Chairman, I have the law here.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is the point of order reserved? I have not heard it read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky makes the point of order.

Mr. DOCKERY. I make the point of order under clause 2 of Rule XXI. I want to make every point of order that may be made.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I understand that these gentlemen are catching at a straw. I will show them what it is before I get through.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. There is no necessity for reading the whole of that. Go to the conclusion, where it was carried over.

Mr. SAYERS. If the Clerk will turn to page 2576, in the first column, he will find where the gentleman from Georgia said:

I will consent that this shall go over until the other parts of the bill are acted upon.

Mr. DOCKERY. With the point of order pending.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The point of order made against the amendment was upon the ground that there was no law authorizing the payment of these claims. I regret that the present occupant was not in the chair when the argument was made and the letters read from the Auditor. I refer the Chair most respectfully to those letters, in which the Auditor most distinctly states that under the act of 1878, in the Revised Statutes, these claims were audited and sent to the House.

The act of 1874, Mr. Chairman, in substance was this, that when these unpaid claims were left over for the length of two years the money was covered back into the Treasury. The act of 1878 amended the act of 1874 to the extent that these claims unpaid that had been covered back into the Treasury need not be reappropriated for, but certified directly to the House for payment; and the Auditor, whose letters are now on the desk and which I had read, states emphatically under the law of 1878 these claims have been certified to the House; and I refer the Chair to the act of 1878 and the Auditor's letters to show that there is not only a law but a positive law. In the first place, the Revised Statutes state that the Postmaster-General shall have power when he discontinues a contract at his own will, for any cause whatever, to give a month's extra pay to the contractor. He discontinued these contracts. He granted the month's pay; the money was appropriated; but before being paid, under the act of 1874, it lapsed and went into the Treasury. Now, the act of 1878 takes it out, and from that year down, in the Forty-sixth, the Forty-seventh, and the Forty-eighth Congresses, these claims have been certified to by the Auditor and sent to this House.

I desire to say further, Mr. Chairman, they are not only in conformity with law but expressly in conformity with the usage of the Postmaster-General for more than thirty years under the law.

More than that. The letter of the Auditor states emphatically that these are the only four claims of this class unpaid and unsettled, and that they are in conformity with the law; and he expressly shows in his letter that there is no legal hindrance or let against the payment of these claims. They are legally and properly just under the law.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman in this connection have read the letter of the Auditor of February 13, 1895? The letter that was read was the first letter, and I believe the gentleman has addressed a subsequent communication to the Auditor. I wish he would have the second letter read.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I have another letter; I will have it read. It is a letter addressed to me on June 12, 1894.

Mr. DOCKERY. That was read before.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Here is the letter you want read. The letter that you want read has been read. Here is a former letter. I will have that read also if you wish it.

Mr. DOCKERY. The letter I refer to is the letter of February 13, 1895.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That has been read.

The CHAIRMAN. The letter of June 12 was read yesterday.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Here is the letter of June 12.

The CHAIRMAN. It was read.

Mr. DOCKERY. If I am not mistaken, and I spoke to the Auditor—

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I have no objection to this letter being read, and we will put them all in. Here is the letter. Let that be read first. That is what the gentleman wants.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF AUDITOR FOR THE POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., February 13, 1895.

SIR: I have the honor to invite your attention to a letter from this Office (copy inclosed) addressed to you June 12, 1894, relative to certain ante-bellum claims. In making answer in that letter to your inquiry whether or not "these claims have been paid in whole or in part by the Confederate States," the fact that the evidence on file in this Office of the payment or nonpayment by the Confederate States Government is incomplete was inadvertently omitted.

As this fact of incomplete records has subsequently been considered and reported on by this office in the case of other ante-bellum claims, and as this class of claims seem to stand upon the same footing as to merit, it is believed that the same information should be furnished you in the cases reported upon in said letter of June 12, 1894, as has been furnished other claims of like character.

Very respectfully,

GEO. A. HOWARD, Auditor.

HON. L. F. LIVINGSTON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. DOCKERY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman in charge of the bill desires, under some arrangement, to move that the committee rise; so that we will let this matter go over.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. There will be eulogies on the late Senator Vance at 3 o'clock, and as we can not conclude this argument by 3 o'clock I move now that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TARSNEY, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration a bill (H. R. 8892), the general deficiency bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that, for the purpose of proceeding with the consideration of the general deficiency bill, the House meet at 11 o'clock on Monday.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I ask unanimous consent that such gentlemen as have spoken or may desire to speak upon the matters embraced in the bill may have permission to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

THE LATE SENATOR VANCE.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the special order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Saturday, the 23d day of February next, beginning at 3 o'clock p. m., be set apart for eulogies on the life and services of the late Zebulon B. Vance, late a Senator from the State of North Carolina.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I offer the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The resolutions were read, as follows:

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended that opportunity may be given for tribute to the memory of Hon. Zebulon B. Vance, late a Senator from the State of North Carolina.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased and in recognition of his eminent ability and illustrious public services, the House, at the conclusion of these memorial services, shall adjourn.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.
Resolved, That the Clerk be instructed to send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

The resolutions were adopted.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, Zebulon Baird Vance was born in Buncombe County, N. C., May 13, 1830, and died in the city of Washington, D. C., April 14, 1894, being almost 64 years old. He received a thorough English education. He first entered Washington College, Tennessee, and afterwards went to the University of North Carolina, where he remained one year; studied law and was admitted to the bar in January, 1853, commencing the practice at Asheville, the county site of his native county. In the same year he was elected county attorney of Buncombe County; was elected a member of the State house of commons in 1854; was elected a Representative to the Thirty-fifth Congress in 1858 as a State Rights American, succeeding to the vacancy created by the resignation of the Hon. Thomas L. Clingman upon the latter's election to the United States Senate; was also a Representative in the Thirty-sixth Congress.

His service in Congress began December 7, 1858, and ended March 3, 1861. He entered the Confederate army as captain in May, 1861, and became colonel of the Twenty-sixth Regiment North Carolina Infantry, in August, 1861. He was elected governor of North Carolina in August, 1862, and reelected in August, 1864. At the close of the war he was arrested by a company of Federal troops and confined in the Old Capitol Prison for a few weeks. Shortly after the war he removed to Charlotte and entered upon the active practice of the law; was elected to the United States Senate in November, 1870, but, being denied admission upon the ground that his political disabilities had not been removed, he resigned in January, 1872. In the same year he was again the Democratic nominee for United States Senator, but was not elected by the general assembly; was elected governor of North Carolina for the third time in 1876, and in January, 1879, was elected to the United States Senate; was reelected in January, 1885, and again reelected in January, 1891. He died in peace and in the full possession of all his faculties, at his residence in the city of Washington, 1627 Massachusetts avenue, on April 14, 1894.

Of him it may be said as King David said unto his servants when announcing the death of Abner:

There is . . . a great man fallen . . . in Israel.

He was indeed great intellectually and morally, and I do not believe there was ever a time during the whole period of his career when he was not conscious of his own great powers and qualities; but he was entirely free from any peculiar egotism or individual self-esteem. He was one of the most lovable of men, and if he was never at a loss to hold decided opinions of his own and to express them clearly and courageously he always did so with humility and modesty. He had a giant's strength, but the softness, simplicity, and heart of a child. At school and at college he was recognized by teachers and students alike as one who had the promise of a brilliant future.

He was a ready, humorous, and fluent speaker, and a bright and witty conversationalist; and before he left college he acquired a reputation for genius and originality. His popularity everywhere and at all times was a matter of course and something phenomenal, in school, in college, in the legislature, in the army, as governor of the State, as a private citizen, and in Congress. Like the Chevalier Bayard, he may be said to have been, in most phases of his character, a man "without fear and without reproach." Before the war began in 1861 he had served one term in the State legislature and two terms in the United States House of Representatives, and in both of these assemblies he achieved distinction and took high rank. Although a strong believer in State rights he did not originally favor the withdrawal of the Southern States from the Union.

When war was inevitable he cast his lot with his State and went to the front in defense of the people of North Carolina and of the Southern States; and the Confederate States never had a more faithful or loyal friend and supporter. It was not his fortune to serve long in the army, but he was a brave officer and soldier, and at the battle of Newbern he displayed skill and capacity as an officer and was conspicuous for his gallantry and courageous conduct on the field, and for services in that battle he was highly commended by his superiors in command.

During the four years of the war—the times that tried men's souls—he was equal to every occasion and emergency. Until he was elected governor of the State in 1862 he served in the field, sharing all the privations of the soldiers of his command with the same endurance, courage, and patience which pertained to the lot of the private soldier and with an alacrity and hopefulness born of true devotion to the Confederate cause. As governor of the State he showed himself at his best, and no American Commonwealth during the exciting and troublous period of the war had a wiser, more successful, or more capable executive. He built up and husbanded in a remarkable and most skillful way all the resources of the State. No State furnished as many soldiers in proportion to population to the Confederate cause as North Carolina, and no soldiers of any State were better, braver, or more patriotic.

Governor Vance was a splendid organizer. His blockade runners enabled him to export cotton and other products of the State to Liverpool and other European ports and to receive in exchange many necessary supplies for the use of the soldiers and people of North Carolina. There was dire distress in the State. Not only was there suffering among the soldiers, but starvation threatened many a household at home. The widows and orphans were provided for, and, as far as was possible, all who were in distress. Governor Vance did everything in his power to make comfortable provision for the Federal prisoners confined at Salisbury. In every county in the State relief committees were organized to help and succor the poor and needy. The noble women of North Carolina, with patriotic devotion and genuine enthusiasm, responded to his every appeal. They ministered to the necessities of the sick and suffering, the wounded and dying. They clothed and fed the soldiers of the army and the destitute at home. If doing good is the great way of enriching character, how great must their reward be! Their works do follow them! These good and lovely women did not expect payment in this world for their deeds of kindness and charity. Their citizenship and reward is in heaven beyond the skies! "Heaven-born charity," it has been beautifully said, "is the sovereign antidote for all the ills of womanhood."

At the close of the war the name of Vance was very dear to the people of North Carolina, and their love and esteem for him continued to the very last. Men, women, and children all admired and revered him, and the people of the State gave the most genuine proofs of their attachment and love for him. In 1876 they elected him governor for the third time, and the general assembly four times elected him United States Senator. I had the honor and privilege, as a member of the State senate, to vote for Governor Vance for United States Senator at the time of his election by the general assembly in January, 1879.

If Senator Vance was not distinguished as a lawyer, it was because he did not practice long enough to build up a great reputation, but he was certainly an accomplished forensic speaker and a splendid advocate at the bar. Until after he entered the Senate he had no reputation as a student. His Senatorial career commenced March 4, 1879, and thereafter he became a constant and faithful student of the tariff, of finance, and other economic questions, and he wrote and spoke much on all these subjects. He was a good writer and a charming speaker. On the hustings he had few equals anywhere, and in the Senate he was always heard with attention and respect. He was a great debater, and had an easy command of the English language. At times he was eloquent, and he was always humorous, instructive, and entertaining. He had an interesting and inexhaustible fund of anecdote, and when he could not demolish his antagonist by argument he effectively turned upon him the weapons of irony, invective, and ridicule. He did not indulge in the flowers of oratory, but very few men excelled him in accuracy of speech or in strength of expression.

His Senatorial colleagues admired and esteemed him greatly; and the tributes recently paid to his memory in the other House are marvels of eloquence and accuracy of judgment, and indicate a very keen insight into his character. Senator BLACKBURN, of Kentucky, said that "never in all his life did he hear the virtues, the merits, and worth of a man more eloquently portrayed, more fairly and truthfully put" than by Senator RANSOM in the Senate. Senator Vance was a statesman of spotless integrity, and no country ever had a truer patriot. He was the friend of education, religion, and learning. Among his contemporaries he held a foremost rank in fame and merit. He was ever the friend of the people, especially the humble, the needy, and the oppressed.

Like Daniel Webster, he believed the Government of the United States to be the people's Government, made for the people, made by the people, and answerable to the people. And I say it reverently, "The common people heard him gladly." And while it may be truthfully said of him, as has been said of another great man, that "he was absolutely without fear, as he was above self-seeking and corruption," it must nevertheless be admitted that Senator Vance was sometimes timid when he found the wishes of any large number of his constituents to be in opposition to his own views. He was loath to oppose a great popular movement. He thought the popular judgment to be oftener right than wrong. He therefore deferred to the wishes of the people until he was convinced that they were wrong. He considered it the duty of every public man to endeavor "to keep in touch with the people." We have a great country, but who made it great but the people? Trained and reared in another school of politics, Senator Vance became by choice, study, and conviction, before he reached the middle of life, a Jeffersonian Democrat, and thenceforward he adhered to and upheld with ever-increasing sincerity and devotion what he believed to be the ancient creeds and true principles of the Democratic party.

He knew he was not, and he did not believe any man was, great enough to be above his party. He loved the applause of the public and he was sincerely grateful for the honors that the people showered upon him. If it be true—and who doubts it?—that—he had indeed that blessing, for no man appreciated more or felt any more thankful for the favors of the people than himself. And that is one reason why his memory is so fragrant and his name so full of good cheer to the people of his State, who loved him so well. Their memory and meditation of him shall indeed be sweet!

The heavenliest lot that earthly natures know
Is to be affluent in gratitude—

Senator Vance was truthful and sincere, open and candid to friend and foe alike. He knew full well that the people in trusting him did so because they had the utmost faith and confidence in his integrity and uprightness, and because they knew that the principles which guided him in his conduct through life would make him be to them a sincere and trustworthy counselor and friend. I can not find words better fitted to describe Senator Vance's character than in the following extract from the writings of Dean Stanley:

Give us a man, young or old, high or low, on whom we know we can thoroughly depend—who will stand firm when others fall—the friend, faithful and true; the adviser, honest and fearless; the adversary, just and chivalrous.

Senator Vance was twice married. When a young man he was united in holy matrimony to Miss Harriet Newell Espey, of North Carolina, a lady of many intellectual gifts, of intense religious faith and convictions, a lovely Christian character, devoutly given to all good works. They lived very happily together. Her influence over her husband was remarkable and permanent. They had four children; all sons, three of whom are still living. Her name is written in the book of life!

Senator Vance had an abiding faith and a genuine belief in the truths of the Christian religion, but he was not the slave of education or prejudice. His views allowed for a wide latitude of theological opinion and individual liberty and tolerance. It is hard to admit the world inside a sacred precinct of the heart. The little tender traits of beauty, which we can not always expect the world to appreciate, are usually kept back and withheld. I had a conversation with him a number of years ago in regard to some controverted points of Christian faith and practice. He told me that he thought all Christians of whatever name were agreed upon the essential articles and creeds, and that too much stress was laid upon their theological differences, many of which were either unimportant, immaterial, or at least not vital. He impressed me at the time as one who had universal charity and tolerance toward those differing from him in religious opinions. He would have been perfectly consistent in saying of all faithful Christian people:

They are brothers and comrades; they stand side by side.
Their faith and their hope is the same.

It is reported that he once said to a dear friend of his: You believe in the doctrine of falling from grace but never fall, while I do not believe in that doctrine and am always falling.

One of the most popular and brilliant lectures he ever wrote was upon "The Scattered Nation"—God's ancient and chosen people. He delivered it many times; and I suppose that no other Christian man in America was ever as much loved and admired by the children of Israel as Senator Vance. They gave him their heart, their confidence and friendship, and he had an ever-ready welcome to their homes. The name of Vance is exceedingly precious to every Jew and is a household word in every Jewish circle in the United States.

Senator Vance was not without his faults. He was subject to human infirmities and frailties, for there is no man, not a just man upon earth, that doeth good and sinneth not, but this is no reason why his friends should not praise his goodness and virtues and seek to follow his good example.

"Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."

"If he sows poppies, he will get gaudy flowers; but what will he do when the harvest comes and he is hungry for bread?"

Senator Vance was married, in June, 1890, to Mrs. Florence Steele Martin, of Kentucky, a lady of rare personal attractions, elegant in manners, lively and brilliant in conversation, exceedingly graceful, attractive, and intelligent, with literary talents and tastes of a high order; a refined, devoutly religious, and highly cultured woman. She was to her husband not only a devoted, dutiful wife, but a faithful friend and companion. She was the solace and comfort of his declining years. One of the best women I ever knew—she is now at rest—once told me that to know Mrs. Vance intimately and to associate with her often in her own home was equal to a liberal education.

Comparisons are said to be odious, and I will not undertake to say that Senator Vance was greater than any of his contemporaries. History will do him justice and will faithfully portray his character and life's work. His name will assuredly fill an enviable space on the historic page of his State and country. His character was unique and original. He was a man of genius, with extraordinary abilities and talents. In many respects he was without a peer. No man ever lived who was nearer and dearer to the hearts of the people of North Carolina. He was taken away at the very moment when his State and his country needed him most, and when he might have been expected to enter upon a greatly enlarged sphere of usefulness and honor. Mr. Gladstone had been elected to Parliament before Senator Vance was born, and that great statesman is still living in the full possession of all his powers and influence. What a reminder of the shortness, variability, and uncertainty of human life! None of us can be made to realize this sufficiently. We are constantly reminded, and especially on these solemn occasions, that "man that is born of a woman hath a short time to live, and is full of misery," and that "in the midst of life we are in death."

Great men die, the land mourns, and for a short time death is a reality to us, but we go on in our course as if we expected an exception to be made in some way in our own favor. Friends die, and, in a certain sense, we realize the hollowness of all things earthly, but we unconsciously ask ourselves whether a time shall really come when in a few years at most we ourselves must join the innumerable hosts of those who live beyond the grave. Knowing our own littleness and weakness, the shortness of life and the certainty of death, it needs no argument and requires no effort for us to conclude that the greatest man who ever lived on earth is in comparison with God as a "vain shadow," and that "every man living is altogether vanity." A great French preacher once expressed this feeling when preaching the funeral sermon over "the Grand Monarch of France." Looking round the church, which was draped in black for the solemn occasion, and then down on the corpse which was lying in state, Massillon commenced his sermon in these words: "God alone is great." Eternity, then, must be our final refuge and resting place.

O Great Eternity!
Our little life is but a gust
Which bends the branches of thy tree,
And trails its blossoms in the dust.

We must therefore learn to labor now, in this transitory life, before all our days are gone, bearing and forbearing, doing and suffering, for when a "few years are come," after life's short journey is over and we bring our years to an end, we "shall sleep a perpetual sleep, and not wake" again in this world.

Death! the unknown sea of rest! Who knows what hidden harmonies lie there to wrap us in softness, in eternal peace; and in death, not sooner or otherwise, all the hot longings of the soul are to be satisfied and stilled.

God alone can satisfy the desires and aspirations of the human heart. True greatness, then, is the eternal reward given for a life of moral and spiritual excellence.

"Oh, God," says Augustine, "Thou hast made the heart of man for Thyself, and it is restless until it rests in Thee."

Senator Vance received countless tokens of good will in his life from all sorts and conditions of men. Nearly everyone who knew him spoke well of him, and his friends rejoiced to have it so. And that it should have been so does honor to those who gave him honor. Neither he nor his friends knew, however, how deep-seated and universal was the love and admiration for him of the people of his native State until after death had laid its hand upon him. The news of his decease was received everywhere throughout the State of North Carolina with the most heartfelt expressions of sorrow and sympathy. The whole population, without distinction of party, race, or sect, vied with each other in their expressions of regret for his death and in showing respect for his memory. Women and children shed tears, and strong men wept. His loss is an irreparable one to his family, his party, and his State, and his name will ever be remembered with gratitude and honor by the people of his State, whom he served so well. Zebulon Baird Vance has departed hence in peace.

All undaunted he died
In the might of his pride.

May we not humbly hope and believe that he is now in that unseen world, "where the spirits and souls of the faithful, after they are delivered from the burden of the flesh, are in joy and felicity?"

The Lord grant unto him that he may find mercy of the Lord in the last great day! And give unto him eternal rest, and let light perpetual shine upon him!

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, as one who was in the Union Army, standing by the grave of one who was in the Confederate army, I approach a new experience, but not with any hesitation or feelings other than my best judgment and my whole heart can commend, and I bear witness to-day to the character of a departed statesman, and, though brief and limited my acquaintance, I can truthfully say, a respected and honored friend.

I find pleasure, as I study the life of the departed statesman, in calling attention to his wonderful power, as his keen vision swept over the horizon when he stood in 1861 contemplating the future of his country. He was a strong and ardent lover of this Union, and here let me quote a distinguished witness. His own colleague, Senator RANSOM, speaking of him in another place after his death said:

He had always been opposed to the secession of the Southern States, did everything possible to avert it, and was one of the very last Southern men to declare his love and devotion to the Union.

I will not content myself with this single witness, but will quote also, on the same theme, the venerable and exalted statesman, Senator MORRILL. They served together on this floor, and Senator MORRILL says:

In an era when our whole country appeared to be rumbling with invisible earthquakes and hissing with the oratorical skyrockets of secession, he served for four years, or until 1861, and, so far as I remember, contributed nothing to our, or to the national, unpleasantness.

I will quote still another distinguished witness on this subject. The venerable Senator SHERMAN says:

There can be no doubt that at the beginning of the civil war Governor Vance was conspicuous at home, as well as here, as an ardent outspoken Union man, but he also loved his State and his people among whom he had been born and bred, and when they were swept away by the torrent of opinion in the belief that it was their duty to secede from the Union, he went with them.

Looking over this record and speaking to-day by his fresh-made grave, I would not occupy the mean position of being generous; I only ask for light and manliness to be just. This man came of revolutionary blood. The inspiration that followed the flag of Washington never ceased to permeate his great and mighty heart, and in 1861 he stood like a bulwark against the waves that were beating against his country. Who will rise and criticise him when he yielded to the press of public opinion that was around him?

He can not be a just man who will not fairly interpret the mental conditions then existing throughout the South, and he would be an unwise and an unjust one who would condemn the impetuous youth who finally yielded to the wave of sentiment and enrolled himself under the flag of secession. But through that whole experience—for he was captain, colonel, and governor of his State during that period—he not only proved himself to be brave and able, but his big heart never ceased to throb for his fellow-man.

Qualified witnesses tell us that when Union prisoners were suffering in Salisbury, this war governor of North Carolina appealed to the Southern Confederacy to send relief to those prisoners, and when that appeal was unheard he turned to the citizens of his own State and asked North Carolina to come to their aid. At the close of the war, that wonderful war, Secretary Stanton sent orders to the general commanding North Carolina to arrest Governor Vance and bring him to Washington with all his papers. It was done. Copybooks containing every letter he had written as governor during the war were spread before the great Stanton, one whose heart did not quiver when duty called him to be severe. The record was examined, and here is the testimony which I present upon the authority of Senator BLACKBURN:

When he did read that record and saw what this man had done, how persistent his efforts had been to ameliorate the condition of the Federal prisoners and to assuage the horrors of war, that great Secretary said to him: "Upon your record you stand acquitted; you are at liberty to go where you please."

It is an honor to point, with a few brief words, this lesson to my fellow-countrymen. He had that greatness which can not be dimmed by any clouds or any revolutions.

He was a great orator. But, Mr. Speaker, his greatest oratorical power spoke through his gentle and noble life. In his pathway as a public man and as a citizen he delivered orations which, in House or Senate, his lips never equalled. As an orator he had the wonderful gift of making everything that he spoke of so plain and simple that all around him understood every thought. He did not send his thoughts above the masses who listened to him. He had the genius of Lincoln in that regard, of simplifying. And so it was in his life and conduct with his fellow-men. He was so approachable that he was constantly in close contact with the masses and drew the inspirations which alone can come from what Mr. Lincoln called "the common people." No man feared to approach Senator Vance with his troubles or his joys or his ambitions, and he listened to them all so attentively and kindly that he arrived at the full status of the man's mind and affairs, and was thus equipped to serve him.

Promotion never warped his genius or destroyed his power. Ah! how often do we see a man in private life free and easy with his fellow-man, stopping to speak with the man carrying the dinner-pail or with the humblest citizen, laughing and talking and shaking hands as one of the people, and then, when subsequently promoted to power, he buttons up his coat, wears a "heaven-erected face," as Burns would put it, and fancies that God has dropped a peculiar ointment upon him to lift him and make him better than his fellow-men.

These men fail in their usefulness in public life. They do not hear the heart-beat or the sigh of sorrow. This distinguished man never made that mistake. In his every-day walks of life he was as simple as a Senator as he was a private citizen or a member of his State legislature.

He was a wit. He carried that sharp and dangerous blade; but he seldom unsheathed it, indulging rather in the warm glow of humor, which turns even enemies into friends.

I met him first, to take his hand, when we were attending a meeting of the Sons of the Revolution in this city. And when he sat down after describing and eloquently touching on some of the scenes of the past, he sat down with me as his brother and his friend. The thought flashed through my mind, if this was a Confederate soldier, the Confederacy is truly gone and we are sure of a permanent, loved, and indissoluble Union.

He was brave, honest, kind, true; and above all, he was faithful to his friends. He did not accept the hard toil and devotion of friends and then, when elevated to power, seek to dicker with his enemies at the expense of his friends. He was true to friendship, and at the same time true to his highest duty as a public man.

Weighted, not with years, but with many honors, cares, and duties well done, he has passed away. No noble heart rejoices over this grave; but sorrow springs up in every generous soul because this great and good man has passed from our midst.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. It was my privilege, and my honor too, to call Senator Vance my friend and to know him with a great deal of intimacy, springing up during our Congressional services. And while I have not written an address for this occasion I was gratified when one of the members of the North Carolina delegation came to me and said they desired that I should say something on this occasion.

It has become a thing almost to be regretted that eulogies upon members of the Congress of the United States, whether they belong to the Senate or the House, are not delivered immediately after the demise of the member; but as they are designed rather for posterity than for ourselves, and to put upon record a lasting impression of the opinions of those who have served with the deceased, and to commit to the printing press the power of perpetuating that record forever, it is probably not altogether improper that some time and some reflection should be given to what is to be said. So, as I am prompted rather by my heart than my head to speak on this occasion in memory of the friend whom I so honored while he lived, and whom the country so honored while he lived, I must apologize for the want of that thorough presentation of Senator Vance's historical record which will come more appropriately from the members from his own loved State of North Carolina.

Senator Vance was born in Buncombe County, N. C., on the 13th of May, 1830. He was born in a region of country marked for its geographical beauty, its magnificence, and its sublimity. It borders upon my own native State of South Carolina; and of all the mountain scenery of our country, whether in the Blue Ridge or the Alleghanies or the Rockies or the Sierra Nevada looking out upon the Pacific, there is no sublimer scenery in our land than that in the midst of which Zebulon B. Vance was born. I have always held to the idea that men partake somewhat of the region of country in which their eyes first look upon the light; and those of us who have seen that beautiful country and stood in its valleys with carpets made by the hand of the Master and have looked up into those lofty mountains, sometimes glassed in sunshine, sometimes covered with shadow, and sometimes the home of the storm god, will cease to wonder that a land so favored by nature should have produced heroes among her men and heroines among her women.

It is of all favored portions of our country probably the grandest and most beautiful. And it was here, amidst that rural population, that Vance was reared and he took his first impressions. He grew up amongst a simple-hearted Scotch and Irish ancestry, who coming to this country found the quiet nooks of the mountains analogous to their own native soil, and therefore made in that region their settlement. He grew up with that wonderful veneration for the Divinity which belongs to those Scotch-Irish people. Simple in their habits, unostentatious in their manners, they grew up amidst those mountains, cherishing the virtues of the country from which they came and lending a hand promptly in the Revolutionary war to give permanency to the liberties of their people. When that war closed a material development as remarkable as that of the countries from which they came marked the regions of North Carolina in which his revolutionary ancestry lived.

Senator Vance was early distinguished in the history of his own State, being elected twice to its legislature and twice to this House before the war, and after the war he was elected to the Senate of the United States in 1870. He came here at that time; but, unfortunately for him, what were called his "civil disabilities" had not been removed by an act of Congress of the United States, and he was therefore denied admission to his seat as a Senator. He returned to the State of North Carolina, and thinking it probable that he might not be admitted to his seat, he resigned his commission as a United States Senator in 1873, and went back to live among the people whom he loved so well and who were so delighted to honor him. But it was not the fate of such a man, with such a mind and heart, to be left to follow the quiet walks of private life.

He was soon returned again to the Senate of the United States, his civil disabilities having been in the mean time removed, and was admitted to the Senate. When he took his position in that body as a Senator there were giants there—men of great minds, of long and large experience. Yet this gifted son of North Carolina took his place from the first in the front rank of the debaters of that great debating body of the world. His distinguished abilities being promptly recognized, he was assigned to important committees; and he performed his Senatorial functions in such a way as to challenge the admiration of his associates on all sides of that Chamber.

It was gratifying to me, in looking over the record of his obsequies in that body, to find that it was not alone from his own people that he received words of commendation. His gifted colleague, that man of splendid talent and magnificent oratory, that cavalier of the South, whether on the field of battle or in the halls of Congress—his gifted colleague, Senator RANSOM, said one thing of him which almost summarized the history of his life. In delivering the eulogy upon his gifted colleague, Senator RANSOM said:

He was bold, brave, open, candid, and without reserve. He desired all the world to know his opinions and positions, and never hesitated to avow them.

Alongside of him sat that able and venerable Senator from Vermont, JUSTIN S. MORRILL, the oldest surviving Senator of the United States when I first came to Congress, and the oldest living Senator now. His tribute was magnificent. Side by side with him there sat that splendid statesman of intellect and thorough knowledge of political questions, of astute powers of investigation, who himself has made a great name for himself, JOHN SHERMAN, the senior Senator from Ohio, who delivered a eulogy on that occasion of which any man or any State might well be proud. I mention these, Mr. Speaker, because of the differences of political opinion existing between them and the deceased Senator.

Senator Vance was again elected to the Senate of the United States, as I have said, and died while occupying the honored position to which his people delighted to assign him. It has been remarked by my distinguished friend from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON], who has just addressed the House in commemoration of Senator Vance, that he was a Union man at the outbreak of the war and was opposed to the secession of the States. That, Mr. Speaker, is true. He took his position in the early discussions of this question side by side with such men as William L. Sharkey, of my own State, who opposed secession because he believed that the differences between the States could be better settled by arbitration, by prudence, by judgment, and by forbearance rather than by resorting to the last great final arbiter among men, the sword. And he defended that position with an earnestness and zeal and truthfulness—for he always avowed what he thought fearlessly—that the remedies of the Southern States and the Southern people were within the Union and under the Constitution. But when his State of North Carolina seceded from the Union, believing his duty was to go with her, with that patriotism and devotion to his people which always characterized him, he at once raised a company of troops, was elected as captain, and within a short time afterwards was chosen colonel of the Twenty-sixth Regiment of North Carolina troops. On every field of battle where he was present he earned for himself the reputation not only of a sagacious, intelligent, and brave soldier, but the character of one who knew how to care for the troops under his command.

But he was a man of too large ability in civil life to be permitted to spend his time during the war in battle; and it was during the war that he was elected governor of his own State of North Carolina, and reelected a second time while the war was still progressing; and it was in this capacity that his great executive ability and wonderful devotion to the troops that entered the service of the Confederacy became manifested. When he had called again and again upon the Confederate Government for arms and supplies, food and clothing to supply the troops that he had called out in the field from his own State, and by his own proclamations, and found he could not rely upon them to furnish those things so necessary for their comfort, he equipped a small fleet of vessels, sent them down the river, out into the ocean and to the River Clyde, and there procured a suitable outfit for the Confederate troops from the State of North Carolina.

That flotilla of small vessels came back, and, successfully running the blockade of the Federal ships, not only provided for the wants of the North Carolina troops, but many of the other troops in the service of the Confederacy, thus showing that he felt it to be his duty, after he called the men into active service, to see that they were not only properly armed and equipped, but properly fed and clothed as well.

It was in this capacity, Mr. Speaker, that he won for himself the title which has been yielded to no other man in the history of the Confederacy, that he was the "war governor" of the State of North Carolina, and not only the war governor of that State, but the great war governor of the South. He served in this capacity three times, and was thence transferred to the Senate of the United States, as I have already said. When any question came up for discussion in that body, and usually no question referring to the subject of taxation and the tariff laws was presented that he did not speak upon, he evinced a clearness of thought, a soundness of judgment, and a thoroughness of investigation that challenged admiration on all sides of the Chamber.

His character was distinguished from the very start in his public life, and it is a remarkable fact that there was no error at any time committed by him that the historian can point to in his career as a governor, as a Senator, as a soldier, or as a citizen. As a governor he was without a peer; as a citizen no one stood higher than he; and as a soldier he won great fame and honor on the battlefield. But it was in the walks of private life that the character of the man shone most brightly. First he was wedded to a lady of his own State, and his children survive him to receive the rich heritage of the high reputation of character and honor won for himself in every avocation of life.

After the death of his first wife, in later life he married a lady with whom the citizens of Washington and people who come here from every portion of the country are not unfamiliar. She was the solace of his life from the time of his marriage until he passed away. She has been the ornament of the society in which he dwelt and moved during his lifetime. She, too, survives him. But in all the acts he has done, whether in the field or as the executive of the State of North Carolina or as the well-equipped Senator from one of the sovereign States of the Union, coming as its ambassador to the halls of Congress to speak its sentiments, whatever position he filled, he has won fame, honor, and the good will of all men who held rank with him. Justly may his State and family be proud of the heritage they have received from his hands. In no position did he fail to discharge his duty to his country, to his fellow-citizens, and to the God whom he revered.

It is said that one of the most remarkable discourses he ever delivered was in a lecture where he paid a wonderful tribute to that great nation of Israelites, who in modern times it has been the custom to speak of in such terms of disparagement. Speaking of the scattered nations he depicts that great nation that had Isaiah for its poet and the Maccabees for generals. He might well have said of it that there were no people more remarkable than that wonderful nation.

He delivered many other lectures, and at last, in the Senate of the United States, he consecrated his services to his country by leaving in every speech that he made specimens of oratory, of humor, of wit. He seldom indulged in sarcasm, because he had too much heart for it, but he has left prominently upon the records of the Senate specimens of oratory, of humor, of wit, that will make him rank with the greatest men of the olden times. He will take his position in line with the great men from his own State—and they have been great—from the earliest days. He will take his position side by side with that venerable trio that passed away long ago, of whom we are in the habit of speaking when the Senate is named, Calhoun, Clay, and Webster. He will take his position as one of the great orators and statesmen of the land in which he lived.

From his earliest service to his country, when he was first put into public position as governor, from the time he was first attorney of one of the districts of the State of North Carolina, down to the time when he finally closed his eyes, every act of his life, every thought of his mind, every conception of his heart, was for his country and his whole country. He might well be pardoned if, in the closing hours of his life, looking back to the memorable events in which he had been so prominent an actor, he had imitated the modesty of the great poet of the olden days who, when he contemplated the wonderful epic of his own production, exclaimed in his closing lines, as Vance could have exclaimed in his closing hours:

Nec poterit ferrum, nec edax abolere vetustas.*

Mr. DANIELS. Mr. Speaker, I take part with the gentlemen who have been assigned to express their tribute of regard for the life and memory of this distinguished man from the circumstance that I was one of those who were selected on the part of the House to carry his remains to their last and final resting place. During my early life, however, my attention had been called to the character and career of Mr. Vance. He soon rose upon the political and national horizon so high as to attract the attention and respect of the country. A public career was before him which was improved by his abilities and his fidelity to his country's interests that continued him in public life and the service of his State. He soon became known to the Union and to all the localities in which patriotism and ability were held in respect and esteem; and he was known to be a man who in all the walks of public life certainly fulfilled the expectations of his State and of his country.

But one period arose which subjected him in any respect to criticism, and that has been referred to upon this occasion by other gentlemen addressing the House. That was the part which he took in the conflict that was brought on between the people of the different sections of the country in their struggle, either for the maintenance, as it finally turned out, or the overthrow of the system of human slavery. It was considered, in a large section of the country, to be entirely incompatible with the free system of our Government, while on the other hand it was regarded and maintained as a peculiar institution of the other section. But it had become oppressive there, as well as the subject of condemnation from other portions of the land, and it was one of those developments which it has been the fate of humanity to settle only by the arbitrament of arms. The knot was to be cut by the sword, and by no other means whatever. Negotiations and compromise had come to an end, and therefore this conflict was brought about by the apparent force of circumstances.

The system was placed in the balances, and the deceased Senator took the side of his own section, and manfully and fearlessly maintained what he believed to be right. But in this conflict this institution was extinguished, and has disappeared from the face of the country, and from its identity with its prominent institutions, and at this time we have reached certainly a point where the mantle of oblivion should be spread over the act, and the lives and the conduct of those persons who, under the impulse of their own localities, took part in this serious and deadly conflict. The result has been an advantage to the country, to the section even in which this institution had existed and became oppressive, and now all the States and all the population of the States are in a condition to march forward in the progress of industrial success, of intellectual accomplishment, and of the highest patriotism that may be known to free and independent citizens.

This man under all circumstances where he was employed on behalf of the public, whether in one capacity or another, fulfilled entirely the expectations that were entertained of him, and as such certainly was not only entitled to, but has generally received the commendation and approval of the people of the United States, whether in his own locality, or in others where his renown had extended, and his character was esteemed and respected.

But it is not in reference to his public character that I desire so much to call the attention of the House upon this occasion as it is to the private character of the man. Although I had not a personal acquaintance with the deceased Senator, yet from the circumstances that occurred during the transit of his remains from here to the place of his burial, evidences were presented from the population of the State of which he was a member that indicated the high esteem in which his private character and his private virtues were held by the communities through which his remains were taken.

I may say here, Mr. Speaker, that while the public men of our country and other countries may be commended, may be approved and extolled by general expressions of sentiment as to their public career and the discharge of their public duties, there is no greater evidence of the worth and character of the individual than that which is secured from the expressions of respect and regard by the masses of the people. When this man's remains were taken to the capital of his State and laid there in the statehouse for the observation of the people of that city, they not only assembled and passed in silent respect the bier where these remains laid, but in addition to that the poor and lowly, the masses, especially, were greatly among the throng that passed by the remains upon this occasion; and from the silent evidences of sorrow, respect, and regret that those persons gave as they passed by the remains of this distinguished man it was apparent that his hold on the mind and affections of the common people had reached through the community.

They were the persons who passed silently by, indicating the great sorrow and the great attachment that had grown up in their hearts from the life and experience that they had had of this man and of his qualities and his conduct as a prominent man and member of their State. It was a tribute that could not be otherwise given to any public person than from a deep sense that had impressed itself upon the minds of these people of his virtues, of his forbearance, of his assistance to the lowly and laboring classes of the community. It was not only among the masses of the white people that these tributes of respect and these tributes of feeling were given to him, but among the black people as well. All seemed to cherish and revere him as their friend; as a person upon whom they had depended, and from whom they had received assistance.

It was a gratifying circumstance to see these evidences of feeling and of sympathy upon the part of these people, the "plain people," as Mr. Lincoln designated them, flowing out upon this occasion for the memory of a man who had been so long in their service and the service of their State.

When the remains were taken from this place toward the city where they were to be consigned to the tomb, they remained upon the cars of the railway at Durham for the period of an hour, and during the time the train remained there this class of people again thronged the train and passed through for the purpose of paying tribute to the man for whom they entertained this great degree of respect; and the crowd was so large that it seemed as though all the working classes of that town and city had gathered together to render the deceased this tribute of their sincerity and of their great respect.

When, in the progress of the journey, the train passed through Greensboro, the same manifestations of feeling and respect from the masses of the people were again renewed, and while the train remained there those people, although in the evening time of the day, thronged about the platform and passed through the car for the purpose of taking a last look at the man whom they had lived to admire, to respect, and to love.

We passed from there to the city where his residence had been; and there he was laid before the people in the same condition of state. There he received the attention, the commendation, the respect, and the love of the individuals composing those classes of the community, as he had at the other places through which the remains had been taken. When the time arrived to take him to the beautiful cemetery adjacent to the city of Asheville, where his remains were to be laid in quietude, he was followed by this class of people, as well as by the intelligent, the business, and the wealthy of that city, to the cemetery upon the hillside where he was laid in the tomb.

These evidences of respect, these evidences of attention, these tributes and marks of affection on the part of these people, show what the character of this man had been during his life. They show what he had earned in the way of commendation from the people of his own locality, as well as generally from the people of the United States. He was taken to this spot and there buried, with these people surrounding him, giving him the last evidences of respect and affection that they were capable of giving him, and there he was left to sleep in the slope of this beautiful cemetery, almost at the foot of which was the river that flowed from the mountains down to the sea. He has passed, as this river passed, to the ocean of eternity, and there his remains were left in the hope, of course, on the part of all, in the promise of a final and blissful resurrection.

But these attributes which were exhibited in the manifestations of the people could not but impress every person with the conviction that he was a man who, in his life, in his conduct, in his relations to others, had secured the approval not only of the wealthy, the intelligent, the prosperous members of the community, but also that he was upon a line of entire affinity with the working people, the poor people of the locality where he lived and of his great State, and that they entertained for him a deep measure of respect and affection, as indicated by the expressions of sorrow that attended his demise. It was an honor to his memory, an honor to the man, an honor to the State, a manifestation that could not have originated from any other source than the grandeur, the sincerity, and the kindness of his character, and these evidences will, no doubt, long live, to characterize, to preserve, and to secure his memory in the minds and hearts of all classes of the people of his State as well as of the country at large.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, Senator Vance, probably more than any other man of this generation, possessed qualities which peculiarly fitted him for a public servant in a Republic like ours. He combined great ability, profound learning, intuitive knowledge of human nature, and an ability to present his views with great power and clearness. In any attitude or position in life, Senator Vance would have been a leader and would have achieved great distinction. His character seems to have abounded in those qualities which people of all classes and conditions love and admire.

He was honest and sincere in every phase and interpretation of those words. He was generous in all his dealings. To the weak he was tender and magnanimous. His whole life was an exemplification of love and devotion to the people whom he served. To this was largely due the bounteous outpouring of love from his people to their idolized leader.

At the age of 24 Senator Vance became distinguished as a member of the legislature of North Carolina; at 26 he was prominent as an eloquent and able Representative in the Congress of the United States. At 31 he had organized one of the finest regiments in the Confederate army, had become greatly distinguished as its leader, and had received the highest commendation for his coolness, courage, and soldierly conduct in battle. A year later, when but 33 years of age, he was elected governor of North Carolina, and in 1864 was reelected to that exalted position. His administration of affairs as chief executive of his State earned for him the approval, support, and confidence of the people. He perfected arrangements by which the resources of the State were availed of to clothe, feed, and care for the soldiers in the field, and at the same time to give protection to their families and their homes.

I first met Senator Vance in April, 1865. It was inevitable that the next day the Federal army under General Sherman would occupy the State capital. It is a historical fact, that appalled as they were by the strength of the Federal army, and the inability of the Confederates to resist the overpowering forces under General Sherman, many prominent men advised that North Carolina should make the best possible terms with the Federal Government.

Senator Vance was too great a man to be led from his plain line of duty into negotiations of such a character, and he determined that the honor and best interests of North Carolina and her brave soldiers, who had won imperishable renown, demanded that she should share the fate of her sister Southern States. Preferring, in case he fell into the hands of the Federals, to be in the attitude of a military rather than a political prisoner, and desiring to remain as close to his capital as possible, and to obtain the earliest information as to the condition of the Confederates as well as the movements of the Federal army, Governor Vance was appointed an aide-de-camp upon my staff, with the rank of colonel, and for some days I had the honor and pleasure of an intimate association with this distinguished war governor. I was forcibly impressed with his wisdom and foresight. Surrounded as we were by what seemed to most people inextricable uncertainties, Governor Vance appeared to fully comprehend our future.

His distinguished career since the war is fully known to our country. Few Southern Senators have been so fortunate in exercising influences for the benefit of the States they represent as Senator Vance.

I shall leave it to those of his own State to speak more in detail of the career of this eminent man. The exalted position which he held for more than the third of a century places him high in rank as a man of national usefulness and prominence.

He enjoyed the respect of the entire country. The brave soldiers he so gallantly led love and admire him for his courage in battle, the hearts of the people of his State go out with feelings of love and gratitude for the fidelity with which he executed the trusts confided to him, and the people of the South will always honor and revere his memory.

By the side of the ever-running streams and the eternal hills of the historic State of North Carolina, the State which gave him birth and lavished honors upon him, the mortal remains of Senator Vance have been laid to rest.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I wish in a few words, to add my testimony to the great merits of our departed statesman, Senator Vance.

He was a member of the Senate; I a member of the House. Yet we were frequently thrown together, both socially and officially. I was, probably, brought closer to him because like myself he believed that the restoration of the free coinage of silver was necessary to the financial welfare of the country. Bimetallism had no abler advocate in either House of Congress than Senator Vance.

In the coming battles for this cause we will miss his wise counsels and deplore the loss of his eloquent pleas for the success of this great issue.

When I understood that Senator Vance had the floor in the Senate on the silver question I always took pleasure in going over to hear him.

His eloquent words in opposition to the repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman law rang out in warning against the repeal, and his prophecies that the promised prosperity consequent on the repeal would never come, but on the contrary predicted that the country would suffer on account of such legislation, have proven to be true.

Senator Vance was one of the most striking personages in public life. There was a magnetic charm about his smiling face. His evident good nature, coupled with his strength of character, at once photographed itself upon the memory.

I can see him now as he appeared in all the strength and power of a great man, for he was truly great.

In debate he was strong and forceful. Always in earnest, intensely sincere, yet withal he had a pleasing manner, so that while vanquishing his opponents he awoke no spirit of revenge.

Mr. Speaker, if Death sought from among us a man who in all his nature was a sympathizer and friend of struggling humanity, if the fell Destroyer was determined to strike down one of the most conspicuous champions and ablest defenders of the interest of the plain people, then, indeed, was the doom of Senator Vance inevitable. But Death spares no man, however great and useful he may be. Truly life is but a span. When we live out our allotted "three-score and ten" we look back to the days of childhood, youth, and mature age; we compress all these years of joy and sorrow, of success and failure, in a moment of intense thought. Yea, the mind goes back through the dim vista of ages past. We see the peoples who for thousands of years have come and gone. We confuse and confound until all mankind since the world began appear as our contemporaries. Dying, we join them as youthful companions in eternity.

Death is the great commoner. He lays the heads of the great and powerful as low as the humblest. But death can not rob the great Senator of his just renown. His memory will live. His life and character will be pointed to as an example of what honesty and energy may accomplish.

His name and fame are secure.

As we love and revere his memory, so also we trust his spirit is at peace with his God.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, one of the strongest and best beloved sons of the Southland and patriots of the whole land is gone. We come to-day to place in the records of this House our humble tribute to his many virtues.

Senator Vance was born in 1830, in North Carolina, and finished his education, so far as schools were concerned, about the time he reached manhood. But his period of study did not end here, for to the day of his death he was not only a thoughtful man, but devoted much time to studying the writings and sayings of others.

One of the British essayists has defined genius to be the possession in combination of "a quick perception, a strong understanding, and a high sense of the ludicrous." All of these our deceased friend possessed in a very high degree. In truth, he was a very rare and remarkable combination. He possessed native brilliancy without it diminishing his disposition to study; he had the finest wit and humor without impairing his reputation for serious thought and stern action. These were used only as aids in impressing solemn truths and serious matters. His speeches, both written and extemporary, abound in humorous thought, witty expression, and in anecdote; but I defy the most careful critic of his public utterances to point to any of these ever used except to illustrate a weighty matter.

From his first entrance into public life to the close of his long and eventful career the most signal success marked the course of this wonderful man. For a third of a century he participated in the great conflicts of our intense American life. Step by step, and with remarkable rapidity, he rose from station to station till he had served his State as its attorney, in its legislature, in its army, and the House of Representatives here, as its governor, and as its four-times-elected United States Senator. He saw the slavery question rise and culminate. He saw the Union divided and our whole people rush to the tented field, and was a participant in the mightiest civil war of all the ages. So prominent was he as Congressman, as officer in the Army of Virginia, as war governor, as Senator, then as governor in the trying period that succeeded our war, that it would be no exaggeration to say that he was one of those upon whom all eyes were fixed. Yet it can be truly said that never for an hour, never for a moment, either North or South, was his courage, his honesty, his patriotism, or his self-sacrificing devotion to principle questioned.

Nor were his admirable qualities confined to the field of public duty. He was as lovable in his home life as he was admirable in public station. I know now and knew before he wed her the noble woman who stood by his deathbed at the last sad hour. And I know that whilst his country suffered much by his departure, his sweet and hospitable home can never again be lighted as his genial smile illumined it.

Mr. Speaker, Senator Vance not only had the virtues I have enumerated, but he loved the God who gave him being, with his "whole soul, mind, and strength," and yielded himself to His service. He was able to pass through the valley of the shadow of death with the same freedom from fear that had characterized his journey through life. The blaze of Christianity illumined his way, and no fear caused him to falter when he came to "tread the wine press alone."

Sir, honored by his great State as few men ever are, loved by all who knew him, respected and admired by the people of all the States, he has been taken from the country he loved so much and served so well. From the shores of the Atlantic to the summit of North Carolina's beautiful mountains there is not a patriotic son or daughter of the glorious North State whose heart is not bowed down with grief on account of their and our country's loss. His whole people, whether residing on mountain or in valley, in mansion, in cottage, or in cabin, feel that they have lost a great champion, and the country a great defender.

May the God whom he loved and served bless the family left to mourn him, and inspire those of us who survive him with that love of country and devotion to duty and principle which are shining characteristics of his glorious life.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I will not speak of all the positions of honor held by the distinguished Senator whose memory we are commemorating on this occasion, nor of all his great virtues. Others better acquainted with his long and honorable career than I am have already given the details of his life work, and have recounted the many acts of his illustrious and eventful history. He served as a member of this House in two Congresses before the war, was three times governor of his State, and was four times elected a Senator in Congress, but was not seated under his first election. He died in the middle of his third term of Senatorial service. He held many offices of honor and trust in his State, and served for a short time in the Confederate army. In all the positions held by him he acquitted himself with marked distinction.

He was a man of commanding presence. In any assembly or company of people he would have been "the observed of all observers" on account of his fine physique, his dignified bearing, and his intellectual features. I did not know him in his youth, but in his maturer years he was in appearance an ideal governor, a model Senator.

He was of a most cheerful disposition. One could not come into his presence without feeling a sense of cheerfulness at once. It was impossible to be with him without forgetting all cares and vexations of life. He possessed an inexhaustible fund of information on all public questions, and never was at a loss to emphasize his narrations of personal and historical reminiscences with amusing anecdotes. He possessed in a high degree a sense of humor, and enjoyed telling and listening to others tell amusing incidents in everyday life. Few persons whom I have known could tell a story in a better vein of humor or in a manner more impressive than he could do. In this respect he was very much like Abraham Lincoln. They both made their popular addresses exceedingly attractive to their hearers by an occasional humorous illustration, which never failed to call forth demonstrations of applause and to rivet the attention of the audience upon the more solid and instructive portions of their discourses.

Senator Vance enjoyed in a most remarkable degree the affections of the people of his State, and in fact of the whole country. He was a gentleman of the old school, honorable and just in all the relations of life. His integrity was far above all suspicion, and he maintained at all times a steadfast adherence to his convictions, and upheld the right regardless of consequences. He was a statesman in the broadest sense, a devoted friend of the common people, and a fearless advocate of the equal rights of all before the law.

He so lived during this mortal life that he approached the life to come with calm resignation, and even cheerfulness in anticipation of a brighter and better existence beyond the tomb. And why not?

There is no death! What seems so is transition;
This life of mortal breath
Is but a suburb of the life elysian.

Our departed friend so regarded it and did not fear the change. His death is an irreparable loss to his family, to his State, and to his country. But their loss was his gain. He sleeps the sleep of the just and will receive the reward of the faithful servant.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Speaker, I do not rise to deliver a studied or elaborate eulogy upon the distinguished Senator. That has been so well and eloquently done that I can add nothing to what has been said. I only rise to place upon his grave in behalf of myself and people a modest chaplet of love and esteem.

The people of no section heard with more profound regret and sorrow the death of the late distinguished Senator from North Carolina than those whom I have the honor to represent upon this floor. No people loved him more than we loved him; none admired him more than we admired him; none have experienced more than we his kind offices and generous aid. When to subserve partisan purposes the Senate of the United States, by a pretended investigation, inaugurated by a recreant Senator from Virginia, sought to blacken the fair name and asperse the character of the good people of Danville and my district, we found in Senator Vance our brave champion and our valiant defender. That gratitude which is the richest and rarest flower that sheds its perfume on the human heart will ever insure him our highest regard; encircle his name with garlands of deepest love and devotion. We feel toward him that deep personal affection and pride which animate the people of his own State. I wish I had the power this afternoon of voicing the tender love and admiration that my people entertain for this man. I wish my power of speech was commensurate with and could do full justice to his splendid qualities of mind and heart.

Senator Vance was a man whom to know was both to love and to admire. Affable, joyous, warm-hearted, kind, and generous, he was "the very schoolboy of the heart." He possessed a genial flow of spirits, a witchery of wit and humor that was irresistible. His presence was sunshine. Vance always impressed me like the great State he represented. North Carolina is largely composed of rich, broad, fertile fields and plains, and is decorated here and there with a wild picturesqueness and beauty of scenery unsurpassed. So with her great son; he was endowed with a strong, broad, masculine mind and heart, sparkling with all the fascinations of wit and humor and glittering with all the condescensions of eloquence, pathos, and genius.

Mr. Speaker, the greatest of all English novelists, in his masterpiece, Vanity Fair, has truly said that the world is a looking-glass and casts back to each man the reflection of his own face. If he smiles upon the world it smiles upon him. If he frowns upon it, it frowns upon him. If he hates it, it hates him. If he loves it, it loves him. How profoundly is this truth illustrated in the magnificent career of the late distinguished Senator. He smiled upon the world with a tender smile, and it received him with open, loving arms. He loved humanity and the world, and he died the idol of his people. He trusted the people, and with implicit confidence his people, in their hours of trial and gloom, placed with loving faith their hands in his and followed his leadership and guidance to sunshine and prosperity.

His people showered upon him every trust, every honor which it was in their power to bestow. What a splendid career does his life present. Prosecuting attorney of his county at 22; member of the legislature at 24; Representative in the United States Congress at 28; a brave, distinguished soldier at 31; elected governor of his State at 32, to guide her through the storms and tempests of war; reelected at 34 with the reputation as the most distinguished and efficient of all the noted war governors. In 1870 elected to the United States Senate, but was refused admission. He returned to his State and successfully engaged in the practice of law until 1876, when, by the universal call of his party, he again offered for governor, and in the memorable campaign of that year redeemed his State from the corrupt and miserable government which reconstruction had placed upon her. In 1878 he was elected to the United States Senate, and from that time to his death he served as one of the most beloved, talented, and distinguished members of that body.

Few public men, few statesmen have experienced a life so crowded with great and grave responsibilities, so resplendent with success and honors. His public career, extending from prosecuting attorney to United States Senator, each year exhibited a broadening in reputation, in power, and usefulness.

Mr. Speaker, Carlyle, in his splendid essay on Voltaire, has truly said that the life of every man is as the wellspring of a stream, whose small beginnings are indeed plain to all, whose ultimate course and destination, as it winds through the expanse of infinite years, only the Omniscient can discern. Will it mingle with the neighboring rivulets as a tributary or receive them as their sovereign? Is it to be a nameless brook, and will its tiny waters among millions of other brooks and rills increase the current of some world-famed river? Or is it to be itself a Rhine, a Danube, an Amazon, whose goings forth are to the uttermost land, its floods an everlasting boundary line on the globe itself, the bulwark and highway of whole kingdoms and continents.

As to which a man's life shall be—whether a tiny stream or a magnificent river—depends largely upon one's talents, but more than all, his own efforts and ambition. Vance, possessed of high qualities of mind and splendid talents, aspiring and ambitious, chose to make and did make the stream of his life, as it ran with its pure waters to the great eternal ocean, a large and majestic river, known far and wide, fertilizing broad fields, enriching States, and carrying on its bosom rich treasures for his country and mankind.

Mr. CARUTH. Mr. Speaker, scarcely had the echo of the last gun of our fratricidal war died out in the land, hardly had the smoke risen from the last battle plain, blood-smeared Bellona had but just fled and white-winged Peace returned from her banishment to reign in her stead, when it entered the patriotic minds of some of the residents of the city of my home to bring together on Kentucky soil representative men of the North and of the South, who had so recently doffed the blue or the gray, to mingle together, to "shake hands across the bloody chasm," and to renew their vows of allegiance to the Union of the States under the victorious Stars and Stripes.

It was appropriate that such a gathering should be held on Kentucky soil, for that State stood on the border land, tried to avert the threatened conflict, spoke the words of conciliation and of peace. Her efforts were useless, her voice was unheeded, and from her blue-grass fields and her mountain fastnesses her brave sons rushed to the aid of the cause they had loved. Eighty thousand of her people enlisted on either side in that deadly conflict. Principle divided her people, dissension entered every household and separated father and son and brother and brother. She loved the Union as she loved the South. What better mediator for peace than she? What hand could more appropriately reach forth to bring together in peaceful unity the men of the North and the South than the hand of Kentucky?

Animated by a desire to accomplish this great work, the patriotic people of Louisville brought to their hospitable homes representative men of the North, men of importance and influence in the South. In this notable gathering who could more appropriately mingle than Hon. Zebulon B. Vance, of North Carolina? A lover of his country, his influence had been exerted, his eloquent voice had been raised against the dismemberment of the Union, and it was only after his efforts failed that he, with the greatest reluctance and the deepest sorrow, followed his beloved North Carolina into the Southern Confederacy. It is needless to say that on the occasion referred to no voice pleaded with more potent eloquence for the restoration of the Union on the principles of the Constitution than that of Governor Vance. Although I knew this dignified man by reputation it was not until this occasion that I had the pleasure of personally meeting him, and from that time I admired and respected him. I was destined, however, to know him better, not only from the official intercourse which a member of the House necessarily has with a member of the Senate, but because also it was to Kentucky and to the county of my home that Governor Vance afterwards came to select his life companion. It was a fortunate selection for him, for she was one of the fairest, brightest, most gifted daughters of Kentucky. She became indeed his helpmate—a wife devoted to her husband.

Ever on the watch to borrow
Mirth of his mirth, and sorrow of his sorrow

From the fact of this union, Kentucky has claimed a deep interest in this distinguished man, and watched his career with affectionate pride. In the hour of mourning, sorrowing over the affliction which has come to the heart and home of her gifted daughter, Kentucky claims the right to mingle her tears with those of bereaved North Carolina.

What could I say of Zebulon B. Vance that all America does not know? Shall I speak of his patriotism? His devotion to his country and his State is part of the history of the trying period of the civil war. Reluctantly he left this House to enter the army of his native State, and became a colonel in the Confederate army.

ice. He laid down the sword to assume executive control of the affairs of his State. He was North Carolina's war governor, sustained throughout this fierce conflict the supremacy of the civil over the military law, and when the end came his voice was raised in behalf of peace and a restored Union. All this the world knows.

Shall I speak of him as a statesman? Do not all the people of the United States know the story of his work in the halls of legislation in behalf of his State and his country? Twice a Representative in this House, thrice governor of his native State, four times chosen Senator. Whose civic career is more distinguished than this?

Shall I speak of him as an orator? What words of mine could do justice to his fame? He was, indeed, gifted with eloquence. On the hustings his voice rang out with persuasive power and molded "the thoughts of many into one," and in the legislative halls "listening senates hung upon his tongue." In modern times there has appeared in the Republic no more thoroughly equipped or better prepared debater and orator than Zebulon B. Vance.

Shall I speak of him as a man? Those who knew him best have borne the strongest testimony to his worth. Born in the Old North State, with his ashes buried in her soil, North Carolina says to the world: "He was my beloved son; I twice sent him to the National House of Representatives. I then made him my governor, and four times I elected him a Senator in Congress. Never did I before so honor one of my citizens; he was always true, always worthy. I honored myself in honoring him."

Let me borrow in this connection the very eloquent language of his colleague, Senator RANSOM, who, in speaking of him on a similar occasion to this in the Senate, said:

What Tell was to Switzerland, what Bruce was to Scotland, what William of Orange was to Holland, I had almost said what Moses was to Israel, Vance was to North Carolina. I can give you but a faint idea of the deep, fervid, exalted sentiment which our people cherished for their greatest tribune. He was of them. He was one of them. He was with them. His thoughts, his feelings, his words were theirs. He was their shepherd, their champion, their friend, their guide, blood of their blood, great, good, noble, true, human like they were in all respects, no better, but wiser, abler, with higher knowledge and profounder learning.

Nor was this unsurpassed devotion unreasonable or without just foundation. For more than the third of a century, for upward of thirty years, in peace and in war, in prosperity and in adversity, in joy and in sorrow, he had stood by them like a brother—a defender, a preserver, a deliverer. He was their martyr and had suffered for their acts. He was their shield and had protected them from evil and from peril. He had been with them—he had been with them and their sons and brothers on the march—by the camp fires, in the burning light of battle; beside the wounded and the dying; in their darkest hours, amid hunger and cold and famine and pestilences, his watchful care had brought them comfort and shelter and protection.

In defeat, amid tumult, amid ruin, humiliation, and the loss of all they had, he had been their adviser, he had guided them through the wilderness of their woes and brought them safely back to their rights and all their hopes. He had been to them like the north star to the storm-tossed and despairing mariner. He had been greater than Ulysses to the Greeks. He had preserved their priceless honor, had saved their homes, and was the defender of their liberties. He was their benefactor. Every object around them reminded them of his care, every memory recalled, every thought suggested his usefulness and their gratitude.

The labors of his useful, brilliant life are over, the triumphs of earth are ended in death, but the memory of his deeds, the story of his career, will not only live in history, but tradition will hand them down from sire to son to the remotest generations of our people. His fame is immortal.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, we are called upon on these occasions to speak of the virtues of many different types of men. Sometimes one is taken from us who has spent the most of his days in private business and has come to these Halls to crown with public honors a busy life. Sometimes we are called to mourn a man taken from us in the very beginning of his career, and consider what he might have accomplished had he lived. But it is seldom that, in either of these Halls, we find a man whose life was so completely given to public service as was the life of Senator Vance. He began his public career when he was a young man, barely of age, and he was a public servant from that time, almost without a pause, until his earthly life was ended. In the history of our country I think we shall find few men as remarkable. When a man is elected once or twice and disappears, we may attribute his success to circumstances; but when a man begins, as Mr. Vance began, a young man, and retains the confidence of those whom he served for a generation, we must conclude that his success is due to something more than chance or accident.

Senator Vance was "a leader among men." Few in our day or in our history even have better earned that designation than Zebulon Vance. He was a leader among men—and naturally so. He had those characteristics which could not fail to make him a leader, not self-appointed, but chosen by common consent. He was a wise man. He was able to estimate causes and calculate effects. He was able to foresee what would come to pass, because he understood men—that is necessary in a leader. We rely upon the infinite because we are finite. We feel the limitations of our own knowledge and we long to find someone who knows more and can see farther than we. Among men, we naturally turn to the one who can foresee events, as a child turns to a parent for advice. It was not the experience of age which he possessed, it was a sort of intuitive judgment, an instinct for truth, that made him see in advance what others only found out afterwards.

It has been mentioned here to-day that when the late civil war was about to break out, he was able to survey the whole ground and to see what would be the necessary result, and that he told his people what that result would be. He did this, too, when a young man, a man younger than any of us who are on this floor to-day, and time proved his wisdom. So, coming on down, as each new crisis arose, as each new force began its work upon society, he seemed to be able to calculate what was coming, and every time his judgment was justified by events his hold upon popular confidence increased.

When the Fifty-third Congress was convened in extra session in August, 1893, no man in this country more clearly foresaw the course of events and more clearly predicted the results of the proposed financial policy. He talked with his associates; he wrote to his people; he told them just what the effect would be upon the party with which he was identified and whose name he loved.

Not only was he a wise man but he was a courageous man. And that is a characteristic, too, that is essential in the man who is to be a leader of men. He had the courage to assume responsibility. He shirked no duty. What he believed he said, and he was willing to stand or fall by the correctness of his conclusions. Jefferson, in speaking of some man, said that he had not learned the sublime truth that a bold, unequivocal virtue is the best handmaid even unto ambition. Zebulon Vance had learned that sublime truth. He knew that a bold unequivocal virtue is the best handmaid unto ambition, and that, while trimming one's sails to catch a passing breeze may help temporarily, there is nothing which is permanently of aid to a public man except standing by his convictions. I have no doubt he had ambition; but from what I have been able to read and learn of him it was an ambition which is laudable, an ambition which every man in this country may well possess, an ambition to do his duty everywhere, an ambition to deserve well, to have what he deserved and nothing more.

He had more than wisdom and courage; he had that without which wisdom and courage would have been of no avail. He loved the people whom he would lead. And it was no condescending love, either. It was no stooping down to someone beneath him. He really believed in the equality of men and that those among whom he associated were his brethren. He shared their hopes, their aims, and their ambitions. He felt their woes and he knew their joys. He was one of them, and the people loved him because they knew that he loved them. They trusted him because they knew that he trusted them. And in building upon the affections of the people he built upon the only sure foundation.

It has been said that the most sincere tribute that can be paid to a man is that which is paid at his grave. Some may fear a man while he lives, and therefore show him attention; or others may want to court his favor. When we see apparent friendship for the great we do not always know what motive may be behind it. But when a man is dead and is impotent longer to injure or to aid, when men gather around his grave and manifest their love, then we know that their affection is disinterested. And I believe it can be said that no man in this country ever enjoyed the sincere affection of a larger proportion of the people whom he served than Mr. Vance.

But he was not only a leader of men, he was an orator of great influence. Not that on dress parade he was the best man to put up for a public speech, but he was one of the great orators because he possessed two of the characteristics of the orator; he knew what he was talking about when he talked, and he believed what he said. He who believes what he says will move others; and he who knows what he is talking about will convince others. Not only did he impart knowledge surcharged with earnestness, but he possessed rare ability in making the truth pleasant to receive.

He was a statesman as well as a leader of men and an orator. As a statesman he was devoted to his work. As a statesman he was prepared to make every sacrifice for which his position called. As a statesman he was ready to give to every call that conscientious response which duty required. As a statesman he was peculiarly honest. There is nothing in the life of Mr. Vance that I prize more than the fact that with all his ability, with all his knowledge, with all his influence, no person can say that he ever sold his influence, his ability, or his support for money. No person can say that on any occasion he ever surrendered the interests of the people as he understood those interests for hope of gain.

Sometimes people speak sneeringly of legislators. Sometimes they speak as if there were no such thing as honesty among legislators. Some people talk as if every man has his price, as if all that is necessary is to offer enough money and the influence of any man who is serving in official position can be purchased. I do not believe that the worst enemy that Mr. Vance ever had would say of him that any amount of money, however great, could have purchased his vote, his voice, or his influence. And that a man with his commanding ability, whose official life began at the very dawn of manhood and continued through all the conspicuous positions within the gift of his countrymen, should successfully resist all pecuniary temptations and die poor is, I think, one of the proudest of his achievements.

Mr. Speaker, there are things in this life more valuable than money. The wise man said three thousand years ago, "A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches, and loving favor rather than silver and gold." We struggle, we sacrifice, and we toil in order to leave to our children a fortune; but I believe that Senator Vance has left to his widow and to his children a greater, a more valuable heritage than he could possibly have left had he given to them all the money which one man ever accumulated in this world. When he left to them a name untarnished, when he left to them a reputation such as he earned and bore, he left to them that which no wealth can purchase and that which no one who possesses it would part with for money. I am not skilled in the use of obituary adjectives, and did not rise to give a review of his life, but I beg to place on record my tribute of profound respect for a public servant who at the close of his career was able to say to the people for whom he toiled, "I have lived in your presence for a lifetime; I have received all my honors at your hands; I stand before you without fear that anyone can charge against me an official wrong." I say, to such a man I pay my tribute of respect.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Speaker, it has fallen to others, sir, to speak of Senator Vance from the standpoint of long association and intimate personal acquaintance. In the brief tribute which I shall pay to his memory I shall speak rather for those who watched his career from afar, and who had learned to trust in him as one of the standard bearers of the cause in which as private citizens they cast their ballots year after year.

It was in the troublous days of reconstruction, sir, that we of the North first knew him. We then heard of him as one of those extraordinary young men of whom North Carolina has had so many. District attorney of his county as soon as he became of age; elected member of his State house of commons before his term as district attorney was over; elected to Congress at 26, and kept there until he entered the Confederate army; made colonel at 31, in three months after his enlistment, and elected governor of his State a year later, at the age of 33; sent to the Senate in 1870, but refused admission there, we had learned to consider Governor Vance as the incarnation of North Carolina and North Carolina as the State of Governor Vance; and we were confirmed in this when, after being elected a third time governor, he was again sent to the Senate, this time taking his seat.

And it was but a short time, sir, before we began to know him as one of the chosen few upon whom we could always depend to fight the fight and keep the faith of the great national party he so long and so well served. We of the North counted every year more and more on Senator Vance, and every year we found our faith better justified.

And when, in 1890, as the great Senator from Kentucky was stricken with mortal illness, we saw Senator Vance, worn and suffering, taking his place in the thickest of the fight, he became thenceforth our rock of reliance; and not merely in the old North State of the South but throughout the North we gloried in his pluck and prayed for his health.

Such, sir, was the confidence, such were the fears with which we were inspired when, but a little more than a year ago, we anxiously awaited his return to the place where he was so sorely missed. The crisis was at hand of the long struggle in which he had so long fought. If there was any man who had earned the right to lead the battle in the Senate, if there was one upon whom his party and his country had specially counted, that man was Senator Vance.

But death claimed him.

I shall not attempt, sir, to find consolation for his loss. In the crisis in which it occurred, in view of the long balance and dubious issue of the events in which we needed his aid, and lacked it, we can only bow to what must be. He was stricken down just when his arm was most needed; we lost his aid just when it would have availed us most; and the coranach of Duncan found its echo in our hearts:

He is gone on the mountain,
He is lost to the forest,
Like a summer-dried fountain,
When our need was the sorest.

He died too soon—not for himself, for fame had already written full the record of his busy life, but for his State, his country, and his party, that he had served so long and so well in field and in council; as a soldier, without fear; as a statesman, without variableness or shadow of turning; as a man among men, whose presence warmed and cheered every fellow-mortal whom he touched.

Mr. BUNN. Mr. Speaker, in that sweetest and tenderest, the sublimest, and most beautiful love tragedy that was ever written—the thrilling, the heart-moving, the soul-electrifying play of Romeo and Juliet—Mercutio, the wit of that play, is made to say, when he had received a fatal wound in his breast by the hand of Tybalt, "Tis not so deep as a well, nor so wide as a church door; but 'tis enough, 'twill serve."

And so the wound of bereavement which has been made in the hearts of his countrymen by that cruel danger, Death, which removed from time to immortality the spirit of the lamented Vance, is deeper than the soundless depths of old Ocean and broader than the whole Christian Church, and it will remain there until the last ripple in the river of Time has been mingled with the waves in the ocean of Eternity.

And now, Mr. Speaker, in coming to pay my humble but sincere and heart-nursed tribute to transcendent worth and exalted greatness and loftiest excellence, I feel the poverty of human expression and the weakness of strongest language, for words, however expressive and graphic, are at best but poorest vehicles for the transmission of those feelings, when the heart is swept by the rushing billows of grief that sweep o'er the ocean of an overwhelming bereavement. And so, my tongue is in the coffin of Vance, and I can only bow my head and weep o'er the memories of him who is now sleeping where the myrtles grow and the daisies peep.

But, Mr. Speaker, I must attempt a tribute to his worth and express my grief at the loss which our country has sustained in his untimely death. I say untimely, for he went down in the hour of his greatest usefulness, when his magnificently equipped mental forces were most admirably trained and drilled and disciplined and in fullest and strongest vigor. But he went down like the blazing meteor, more brilliant and dazzling and resplendent in its downward coruscations than when in pristine glory and unsullied radiance it first glistened in the firmament with planets; for our grandly panoplied Senator was ascending into the zenith of his glory; his last service was the most brilliant, his last speeches his greatest and his best, and will crown his career with a halo of renown that will never lose the richness of its effulgence or the brilliancy of its beaming.

Yes; he died when his mind was in the noontide of its richest brilliancy and his power in the very summer of its lushest vigor. He passed away when his splendid abilities were in greatest demand and when his sage counsels were most needed. And his loss is irreparable, for he was a true patriot and a broad-gauged statesman, and being so thoroughly versed in the affairs of government his sagacious counsels and ripe experience were indeed most needed in this trying ordeal of our political history. His death at such a time did indeed produce a shock that was felt all over the country, for while we all knew that he was in feeble health and was perhaps nearing that glorious sunset whose gorgeous beauties are but the undimmed reflections of celestial splendor, yet his death was so sudden that we could scarcely realize that the brawny-brained statesman had ended his last debate, and that listening Senators would never more hang with rapt attention upon the wholesome words that fell from his eloquent tongue.

Senator Vance was perhaps the most many-sided and admirably rounded public man of this century. He was not only a man of magnificent ability and richest intellectual resources, but he was a speaker of rarest eloquence and the most thrilling and electrifying oratory. His stirring appeals were as sweeping as the winds when forests are rended and as resistless as the billows of the sea when navies are stranded. He was, indeed, a grand, powerful, intellectual giant, and on the stump the most admirably fortified men of this age dreaded the sweep of his logic, the vigor of his eloquence, the fiery outbursts of his dramatic oratory, and the withering fires of his burning invective.

In the fields of literary culture and classic research he was indeed superb, for his speeches, while containing golden nuggets of ripest wisdom, sparkled with gems of richest humor and glistened with the auroral lights of the finest poetic fancy. Thousands have been charmed and enchanted with the richly blooming flowers of his poetic gardens and lulled and soothed by the rhythmic flow of his gracefully winding current of mellifluous rhetoric. All of his speeches were forceful in their presentation of truth and facts, noble in their ethical teachings of duty to country, luscious with the mellowest fruitage of lofty patriotism, opulent with the gems of successfully garnered wisdom, kingly in the imperial sweep of their royal eloquence, and regal in the magnificent drapery of the most ornate diction. They will prove monuments to the fame of Senator Vance more lasting than marble, for on the adamantine and invulnerable surface of their imperishable worth, unequalled merit, superb splendor, and magnificent beauty, the corroding and devastating moth of decay will never fix a fang.

And the people loved him because his big, generous, sympathetic heart was always responsive to every touch of sorrow and distress, and ever ready to vibrate with tenderest strains of solace and commiseration; and so when the sad news of his death was sent on the quivering bosom of the electric current throughout his native State it opened the floodgates to the briniest waters in the stream of human bereavement, for all felt that one of North Carolina's truest and noblest and grandest sons had been stricken down like a flower in fullest bloom and beauty. And those who followed that funeral train as it took him to his last resting place in the mountains, and witnessed the spontaneous demonstrations of grief that gushed from the loyal hearts of the old and the young, the high and the low, the rich and the poor, must have realized that the depth of love and fervor of devotion felt and shown for him was never before manifested for any other man in the history of my State.

And the people loved him, too, because he was true to them. In season and out of season his voice was ever ready to uphold their interests and defend their rights. He was in touch with them, and they could always hear the beating of his great heart and listen to the music of its throbbings and from its inspiring strains find solace for the ills of the present and hope in the promises of the future. And so he became their idol, and they followed him most blindly. And he never deceived or misled them, for his life was as an open book and its pages could be read by all. And on those pages there were no blurs or blots or blemishes; all pure and bright and stainless and flawless.

He was the soul of honor, the very embodiment of honesty. He had the courage of his convictions, and everybody knew how and where he stood, for he was free and bold in the expression of his views and opinions. And yet, bold and aggressive as he was in political combat, his heart was tender and sympathetic, and in all of his dealings with the weak and defenseless he was the very personification of womanly tenderness and forbearance; and no one could surpass him in those gentle amenities which give such a charm to manhood and such a glorious light to true greatness.

These are some of the virtues which emblazon his character and which will shine forever in that fadeless and imperishable coronet that will crown the lustrous brow of the illustrious Vance.

But, alas! this stately oak, the very monarch in the forest of humanity, with all of its widespreading and luxuriant branches of intellectual adornment, bathing in the glad, warm sunlight of affectionate esteem and idolatrous admiration, has been stricken down by the inevitable bolt of death, and he now sleeps in the peaceful hush of the quiet grave. But men may stalk across the stage of existence and make reputation as bright and as radiant as the blush of a dewdrop under the trembling kiss of a morning sunbeam, but never will the brilliancy of his reputation be surpassed by mortal man, and never will his name hold a second place on the tablet that recites the glories of intellectual splendor; and though he has gone from us forever, yet he has left behind him an example and an influence and a memory that will prove a blessing to his country and a benediction to his people, for their radiant light will blaze for our guidance the glorious path of patriotic duty he so nobly trod and encourage us to live like him who has gone to his God.

Yes; he has left behind a radiant stream of effulgent glory. Like the brilliant sun, which sinks behind the distant hilltops and leaves behind a golden stream of gorgeous splendors, making the whole western horizon seem as if the most opulent dye pots in the studio of the angels had been upset and had leaked through upon the clouds thus giving them the tintings of celestial glories, so his sun of existence has sunk behind the hilltops of death and left behind a stream of memories that will never fade from the tablets of our hearts. Unlike the glories of the setting sun, which soon lose their gorgeous colorings in the bosom of darkness, his resplendent virtues will not lose their brilliancy in the shadows of death's dark night, for they were dug from mines of richest and purest ore, and bright in glory's jeweled throne they will shine forever more.

On Fame's eternal camping ground
His silent tent is spread,
And glory guards with solemn round
The bivouac of our dead.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, comparatively few great men have had such a checkered career as the late Senator Zebulon B. Vance. I will give only so much of his history as will show that during the changing conditions of society he was always the trusted leader of his people. He was born May 13, 1830, in Buncombe County, N. C. His early life was uneventful, not differing from that of the friends of his boyhood.

His educational advantages were not the best, but fairly good. He was admitted to practice law in the county courts in December, 1851, elected county solicitor for Buncombe County in May, 1852, and admitted to practice in the superior courts in August, 1853. He was elected to the house of commons of North Carolina in 1856, and to the United States Congress in 1858, and reelected in 1860. During this period he was an ardent Whig, and devoted to the Union. In 1861 he resigned his seat in Congress, and volunteered in the service of North Carolina and the Confederate States to fight as a soldier, actuated by the same spirit that prompted his fellow-citizens to engage in the war. They had to fight upon one side or the other, and preferred to cast their lot with the Southern States. He was elected captain of his company, and soon after was elected colonel of the Twenty-sixth North Carolina Regiment. He served with distinction in the battles of Newbern, N. C., the seven days before Richmond, and Malvern Hill.

In August, 1862, the people of North Carolina recalled him from the tented field and placed him in the governor's chair, and it was here that he exhibited that great executive ability that made him so well known through the Confederate States as the great war governor. His foresight in buying the Advance, a ship that repeatedly ran the blockade at Wilmington, N. C., freighted with blankets, clothing, boots, and shoes for the North Carolina soldiers and many articles of necessity for the people of the State, rendered him the idol of the soldier as well as the citizen at home. Again, in August, 1864, he was elected governor, and the closing days of the Confederacy further demonstrated the greatness of his executive ability.

After the surrender of the Confederate armies, in May, 1865, he was arrested by the military forces of the United States and brought to the city of Washington, D. C., and imprisoned in the Old Capitol. Some time afterwards he was released on parole, and permitted to return to North Carolina. He moved with his family to Charlotte, N. C., and commenced the practice of law, and proved himself to be one of the ablest advocates that bar has ever had. The national Republican party controlling the National Government during the period of reconstruction disfranchised a sufficient number of white people to give the newly organized Republican party, composed chiefly of carpetbaggers and negroes, control of the State.

The white people, believing that their civilization was threatened, united under the name of the Conservative Democratic party and in 1870 redeemed the State. Though the late Senator Vance was still disfranchised, his wise counsel aided materially in securing that great victory. The legislature, recognizing the valuable service he had rendered, elected him to the United States Senate; but his disabilities not having been removed by Congress, he was not permitted to take his seat. In 1872 he was defeated for the same office by the friends of ex-Senator Merrimon combining with the Republicans. In 1876, after the greatest political contest that has ever occurred in the State, he was elected governor for the third time by a flattering vote.

In 1879 he was again elected to the United States Senate, reelected in 1885, and again in 1891. His death occurred in April, 1894. I think I but state the truth in saying that at the time of his death he had a greater hold upon the affections of the people of North Carolina than at any time during his life. A leader of the Whigs or Unionists, one of the great leaders of the Confederacy, and after reconstruction a great leader of the Democracy, as attested by being reelected governor and four times United States Senator, is a record that proves—

Act well your part, there all the honor lies.

In my opinion, the great secret of his success was his intense earnestness and great ability in carrying out the principles contended for. He never wavered or faltered in a fight. He guarded the interests of the people so well that their confidence in his integrity and honesty was unbounded. They knew that he would never—

Crook the pregnant hinges of the knee
Where thrift may follow fawning.

Few public men were so fortunate as to have so few personal enemies. Kind, generous, and sympathetic, gifted with a rare fund of wit and humor, he gained the friendship of nearly every one with whom he came in contact. Having been in feeble health for many months, his death was not unexpected. Yet his death came at a time when his people most needed his wise counsel to pilot them through the political trouble then distracting the State. Others have told how the sad news of his death was received by his people, and the great sorrow exhibited by them as his colleagues carried his bier to the capital of his State, and thence to Asheville, and placed it in a sepulcher near his kindred and friends. North Carolina has lost her brightest jewel, and her people have seen their "guide star" struck from the political firmament.

Mr. BRANCH. Mr. Speaker, during my four years of service in the House the occasions have been frequent in either hall of Congress when solemn services like these are held to pay the last act of respectful duty to the memory of some departed member. These occurrences can but warn us of the precarious tenure by which we hold to the fleeting things of time and teach the impressive lesson of instability of human life. It is a happy thing for a country, Mr. Speaker, when the lives of its public men can be thrown freely open to the world and challenge its closest scrutiny with a consciousness upon the part of the friendly critic that there is no blot to be concealed and no glaring fault which a love of truth forbids him to deny and his own sense of right scarcely allows him to palliate.

Of all public men I have known there are none whose lives teach more impressively the great moral of the strength which public virtue gives than that of Zebulon Baird Vance. Here at least is a public man in whose life there can be found no mean or equivocating action, none of a departure from the self-imposed restraints of a lofty sense of honor; none in which either the fear of man, the seductions of ambition, or the allurements of pecuniary advancement could tempt to a deed which would destroy his own self-respect or the respect of others for him. He knew how to inspire a people with a just confidence in the soundness of his judgment and integrity of his purpose, so as to be looked to as a safe depository of trust and confidence.

His popularity was not the result of those factious aids which give to demagogues and political tricksters an existence, but was the natural consequence of his exalted qualities of both head and heart. Under such circumstances it is not surprising that each step in the political career of such a man should have been crowned with public honors. Amid all the fluctuations of public sentiment, amid all the changes of party, tried in times of war as well as peace, he was found pursuing the path of duty by the light of principle, and dying, he has left behind him a life of consistency and public virtue upon which the patriot may ponder with pleasure, and from which the mere aspirant for worldly honor may draw an instructive lesson.

His life is a true illustration that the line of duty is alike the path of safety and the way to honor. During a long and eventful period a very large portion of his life was spent in the public service; for near half a century he devoted his energies and his talents to the performance of public duties, always performing his trust with fidelity and ability, and never failing to command the confidence, admiration, and gratitude of an enlightened constituency. How happy now the reflections of those who loved him most, that there is not an act of his public life which can be referred to but to his honor; not a suspicion that could mar the purity and luster of his escutcheon. The remembrance of the life and work of such a man should always be an inspiration to those who are to assume the duties he so well in his time performed.

Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, one of the highest encomiums ever passed on a man in public life, said John Quincy Adams, is that of an historian, eminent for his profound acquaintance with mankind, who, in painting a great character by a single line, says, "He was just equal to all the duties of the highest offices which he attained and never above them." The possession of this rare political virtue was preeminently exemplified throughout the career of Zebulon B. Vance, who laid down his work without one stain upon his record, leaving as a priceless heritage to his family and his country a name synonymous with honesty and incorruptibility.

It is a privilege and a sad pleasure, Mr. Speaker, to lay garlands upon the tomb of the honored dead in whose memory these ceremonies are held to-day. I shall not attempt to give a review or sketch of his eventful life, nor recite the many important incidents that mark his long, distinguished public career. Colleagues of mine who have preceded me have with admirable precision of detail, and in eloquent graceful terms of unexaggerated eulogy, spoken of Zebulon B. Vance, who has left upon the historic annals of his State and country lasting and imperishable evidences of his statesmanship and patriotism.

He was a brave, generous, magnanimous man; every pulsation of his warm unselfish heart was kindness and love for his fellow-man. The good of his State, the glory of her people, the honor and welfare of his country was the polar star ever guiding him. His thoughts were of his State and her people. He saw her wide-extending fields of cotton and grain, her mines, her quarries, her factories, the hum of her wheels of industry, the songs of her workingmen—these his thoughts. He knew the privations, the trials, the struggles of his people. To make the burden lighter, their hearts happier, were thoughts that concerned him most, and while, Mr. Speaker, the addresses on this occasion can add nothing to the future happiness of the dead, can not augment the fame which his social virtues and his public career have earned, they tell the world that a republic can be grateful to those who have done her service, and that the citizens of a republic can appreciate the gentle qualities which give dignity and honor to a statesman's life and insure peace and consolation to a Christian's death.

A great man has fallen; it is fit we mourn him, indulging the hope that the light of his example may long continue to illuminate the paths of the future Representatives of the State which honored and loved him as the swiftest in the race of ambition to serve her, the strongest in the strife for her supremacy, a State which now holds his remains and will ever cherish his memory.

Mr. BOWER of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, all that panegyric can bestow has been accorded to him whose distinguished life and melancholy death we to-day commemorate. The tongue of the orator, the pen of the historian, and, what would have been more to the illustrious dead, the love-inspired eloquence of his immediate fellow-citizens have proclaimed and recorded his distinguished deeds and exalted station. In the presence of his stupendous merit common adulation blushes into silence, and genuine appreciation would be mute. Discarding fulsome flattery, it may truthfully be said of him that he was the greatest of all North Carolinians. If asked in what respect greatest, let each honest admirer answer for himself according to what his own ideal of true greatness may be, for his greatness was full-measured and many-sided. If called upon to name the principal trait or talent that gave him such distinction, his friends would be widely apart in their views. On what rests his solid and enduring fame?

The world has laughed and has been refreshed from the fountain of his quaint and inimitable humor. His anecdotes and sallies of wit are quoted in almost every household in his native State. In every family there yet lives some one to relate and recount his wonderful achievements upon the hustings; how this opponent was foiled; how that was overthrown by the keen thrust of apt and witty illustration. Perhaps he was best known as a humorist, and yet I may venture to suggest that his humor was only an incident and an instrumentality to more substantial qualities. As a ready and an agreeable debater he had few equals and no superiors. He grappled with a comprehension broad and accurate the most abstruse political questions of his day, and it may be said that he never discussed such a question without at once elucidating and simplifying it. Under his manipulation the intricate questions of revenue and tariff legislation were brought within easy scope of ordinary intelligence and understanding. He never shot above the heads of his audience and never below. Whether addressing a grave and dignified Senate or speaking face to face with the sturdy yeomanry of his State, whose arms had borne him so often to victory and never to defeat, he was the same easy, forcible, and convincing orator. He never discussed a question that he did not thoroughly understand, and hence never failed to be interesting and instructive.

His public life was preeminently eventful and successful. Scarcely had he attained his majority when he was clothed with responsible judicial office. At the age of 27 he had the honor of a seat in this Hall, defeating a gentleman of great prominence in his State and changing the political complexion of the district from which he hailed. For a new and young member his standing in Congress was highly creditable. This was just prior to the civil war, and when that memorable struggle came on, though only 30 years of age, the eyes of his people were turned to him for guidance and leadership. Up to the time when his State seceded from the Union he had been an ardent Union man, but when the bond that united North Carolina with the other States had been severed he hesitated no longer, but threw himself with all his soul into the contest which he had hoped to see averted, but which when inevitable received his hearty and unflinching support.

When the tocsin of war was sounded he was promptly at the front, and as colonel of the Twenty-sixth Regiment of North Carolina Volunteers, as gallant a troop as ever marched to battle, he gave promise of as much distinction in arms as afterwards awaited him in the civic field. But it was as the "war governor" of North Carolina that he reached the acme in the esteem and affection of his people. He was in every pulsation and fiber truly Southern, and in the rôle of governor at this critical period he showed forth to great advantage those splendid qualities of head and heart that make the ruler immortal and command the unalloyed pride and gratitude of the governed. Those who lead in times of greatest gloom and trial are those around whose memory cluster the most tender affections of an appreciative people.

In the dark days of 1864 and 1865 he was the beacon light of hope and consolation, and when the sun of the Confederacy went out in the final eclipse he appeared as the first and brightest star in the new and upper firmament. It is not necessary to trace his career from the days of reconstruction to the close of his life. It is written upon every imperishable page that records the history of his State and nation. How he spurned the pelf of power and the lust and greed of office, "choosing rather to suffer affliction" with his people "than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season," how he drank the drugs of political humiliation and again tasted the sweets of political redemption, "these things are known and read of all" his countrymen.

In the magnificent structure of his life and character a few of the salient features may be noted. And first and most prominent was the inborn rugged honesty that characterized his life from its beginning to its close. And when I speak of honesty I do not mean it in its narrow, restricted sense of meeting one's pecuniary obligations, though in this sense it may be remarked he lived an honest man and died a poor one. But I use the term in its broader acceptance, involving perfect candor and fairness in all his personal and political relations and dealings with his fellow-man. As a Representative he never deceived nor attempted to deceive his constituency. However embarrassing the strait or pressing the emergency, he "hewed to the line." He was no trimmer. He pursued no devious ways, but sought his object with courageous rectitude in a straightforward, manly way. And yet, while he did not court, he did not spurn public sentiment.

The secret of his great political strength and success was the grace with which he responded to a popular demand when no inconsistency or sacrifice of principle was involved. Another element in his composition was his intense patriotism and ardent love for the people of his State. He loved North Carolina with the fervor of a first love. Her tall mountains and beetling crags, her deep ravines and undulating valleys, her green fields, her babbling brooks, her bounding rivers caught the enraptured fancy of his youth and held with unbroken charm the ripe and mellowed heart of the man. To him no atmosphere so rare and bracing, no landscape so witching, no sky so blue as hers. No wonder the tired and wasted body in the throes of its impending dissolution should have sought the scenes of its early association and imbibed fresh vigor and renewed hope in every breath wafted from the misty mountain tops of his birthland.

His solicitude for the welfare of his people knew no limitation or cessation. In every crucial period in his life he had taken them into his innermost sympathy and confidence. In the ante bellum days of his budding greatness, at the twilight, and again at the midnight, of war's dread carnival, in the succeeding period of material depression and gloom, in victory and defeat, he was ever of them and with them. Through all the vicissitudes incident to a most eventful and thrilling public life he maintained his hold upon the popular heart as only a true patriot and matchless commoner could have done. As the solemn tidings of his death swept over the State every true North Carolinian felt as if a star of the first magnitude had suddenly been blotted from the heavens, and the State had somehow grown commonplace and dull. He has gone from our sight forever, and we shall not see his like again.

[Mr. WOODARD addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, we pause to-day to pay a tribute of respect to the memory of the late Senator Vance—to drop a tear, as it were, on his grave. Eulogy, at this time and place, can but imperfectly outline the character and public service of the dead patriot and statesman. It must be left to the historian to review and analyze the great life work of the peerless and incomparable Vance and give him his true place in his country's history.

Zebulon Baird Vance was born in Buncombe County, N. C., May 13, 1830, in the district which I have the honor to represent. He was not surrounded by the luxuries of wealth, but the ordinary comforts of life, and it may be said that his greatest heritage was a poverty that gave him an opportunity to build his own fortune—and he built as a master builder. Nature endowed him with a double portion of the essential elements of true greatness and cast his lot among the beautiful and picturesque Alleghanies, in the very heart of the "Land of the Sky," in the shadow, as it were, of Mount Mitchell, Pisgah, and a score of other peaks whose summits pierce the clouds 6,000 feet above the sea. That portion of North Carolina was then comparatively an isolated spot, where the busy ways of trade had not been learned, and where the tireless march of progress had scarcely trod—

Of vast extent, untouched by hand of art;
Where Nature sowed herself
And reaped her crops.

To him these mountains were an inspiration; upon their grandeur his soul feasted, and his young life was filled with a love and admiration for the beautiful and sublime in nature. The fountain of his aspiration was fed by nature herself, and from her open book he learned his most valuable lessons. The breeze that winged its way from mountain cavern, the sunbeam that frolicked with the leafy forest, the flower that smiled upon the grassy dell, the brook that lisped its never-ending song, all had a message for him, and in them and beyond them all he saw and realized the power, the wisdom, and the goodness of God.

The intellectual faculties of young Vance were aided by an indomitable will power, and he seized every opportunity within his grasp for acquiring an education. After attending the best schools of the community he took a course at Washington College, Tennessee, and subsequently a select course, including law, at the University of North Carolina. He located in Asheville to practice his profession, and at the age of twenty-two he was prosecuting attorney of Buncombe County; at twenty-four he was a member of the legislature, and at twenty-eight he was elected to Congress to fill the unexpired term of Thomas L. Clingman, who had been appointed to the Senate. The district had been largely Democratic, and the party had for a candidate a strong exponent in W. W. Avery. But, contrary to all expectation, the Whigs carried it, electing Vance by a handsome majority—the youngest man North Carolina ever sent to Congress. He was again elected in 1860 over Col. David Coleman.

His term in the House was brief, but he made for himself a national reputation, and by his faithful and efficient services he endeared himself more than ever to the people of his State. He was a strong Union man and opposed secession with all the ardor of his vigorous nature, but surrendered his judgment to the wisdom of his sovereign State when she withdrew from the Union.

He resigned his seat in Congress, came home, organized a company, and went to the seat of war. In a few months he was made colonel of the Twenty-sixth North Carolina, and participated in the "seven days' fight" around Richmond. In 1862, while in the field, he was elected governor over Col. William Johnson.

His administration was more aggressive than that of any other governor of the seceded States, and he was known as the "war governor of the South." Under his administration North Carolina mustered and sent to the war more men than any other State of the Confederacy—more than one-sixth of the whole number enlisted. He was quick to realize that the State could not equip and maintain her soldiers in the field without the aid of foreign commerce, therefore he purchased a splendid steamer in the Clyde, and successfully ran the blockade, exchanging cotton for arms, ammunition, and clothing for the soldiers, and salt and other domestic articles for the people at home.

The popularity of Governor Vance was unbounded. His wise policy and successful administration met the approval of the people generally, and in 1864 he was again elected by a large majority over W. W. Holden.

Mr. Speaker, fate had decreed against the dissolution of the Union, the resources of the South were finally exhausted, and the Confederacy collapsed. The leading officials were arrested and imprisoned. Governor Vance was brought to this city and confined in the Old Capitol, but after a few months was released. He returned home, located in Charlotte, and resumed the practice of law. But never for a moment did he lose sight of the political situation. During the dark days of reconstruction no man did so much to make the harsh and unwise policy of the Federal Administration odious as Zebulon B. Vance. While others hesitated and faltered, he struck straight from the shoulder with his keen Damascus blade, and never failed to leave a gaping wound. He hurled his thunderbolts against the carpetbag régime with the precision of Jove.

I believe that when the historian comes to review the long and illustrious services of Senator Vance to his State, it will be recorded that the period of reconstruction furnished the brightest star in his crown of fame. That period when the South was in a formative state, passing from the old to the new order of things; when local self-government was overthrown, and the people were under the iron heel of oppression; when his beloved State had been stricken by the devastating hand of war, and carrion vultures were flocking to feed upon its emaciated form; then it was he rose with the strength of young Hercules, and from one end of the State to the other he attacked these hordes of despoilers with a boldness and power that were irresistible, and rallied the patriotic and conservative people to his support and overturned their rule of riot and ruin. Wise and wholesome laws were enacted, the right of local self-government was restored to the bona fide citizens, and no State in the Union with like advantages has made greater progress, and no people have been more wisely, honestly, and economically governed than the people of North Carolina. These results are largely attributable to Senator Vance, for he was in close touch with the masses and had great influence in molding public sentiment and in shaping political policies. He was the idol of the people, and they trusted him with implicit confidence and loved him as they loved no other man. They delighted to honor him and bestowed upon him their choicest gifts.

Mr. Speaker, the issues of the war brought about a political revolution and made friends of former antagonists. Upon these issues the Whig party went to pieces and Senator Vance became a Democrat and opposed the Republican party with greater zeal than he had opposed the Democratic party when he was a Whig. He was as true to the principles of Democracy as the needle to the pole, and at the hands of the Democratic party received his greatest honors. He was elected to the United States Senate in 1870, but was not allowed to take his seat on account of political disabilities incurred during the war.

In 1876 he was nominated for governor, and the Republicans nominated Judge Settle, their best and ablest man. Their joint campaign was the most memorable in the history of the State, and is fresh in the minds of all who heard it. It was a battle of the giants—Greek meeting Greek. They were both in the prime of life, and both were splendid specimens of physical manhood. The discussion was masterly and on a high plane. Zeb Vance, as he was familiarly called, was a household word, though I had never seen him until the day of the speaking at Waynesville. But few days of my life are as clearly photographed on my mind as that, and the scope of no debate so well remembered. The people turned out en masse, and the discussion took place in the grove at the Baptist church, Vance leading off. I remember the first words he uttered, and to the closing sentence he held me spellbound. Never before had I heard such an outburst of wit, humor, and eloquence. His great speech, combined with his fine physique and stately bearing, made him at once my ideal statesman, and such he remained through life. The Democrats carried the State, electing Vance by a majority of over 13,000.

After serving two years as governor, he was elected to the Senate, and took his seat March 18, 1879, and was reelected in 1885, and again in 1891. To undertake to review his course in the Senate would be to give a résumé of the important legislation of that body since he has been a member. He entered the Senate at the age of forty-nine, with an experience of twenty-five years in public affairs and a national reputation which put him at once in the front rank of American Senators. For a number of years he had been a leading member of the Finance Committee, and devoted most of his time to the tariff and financial questions, and had much to do with the legislation along these lines. He led the fight of the minority against the McKinley bill and demonstrated that he had thoroughly mastered the subject in detail.

It was the ambition of his life to live to see the tariff reformed in the interest of the people and silver restored to its constitutional place as a money metal of the country. For these results he labored in season and out of season. Often he met successfully in debate the champions of the protective tariff, and the gold standard. He had but few equals and no superiors in debate. His nature was pugnacious and combative, but his sword was never drawn except in defense of the people's rights, and when drawn was never sheathed until the right prevailed. But he was a generous, manly opponent, sincere and honest, and never resorted to a temporizing expedient to gain advantage over his antagonist.

Mr. Speaker, Senator Vance was a student, and by too close application his health was gradually undermined, and before he was aware he was rapidly approaching the grave. The last speech he made was on September 1, 1893, against the unconditional repeal of the Sherman law. With prophetic wisdom he predicted that there would be no legislation favorable to silver if not had at the time the Sherman law was repealed. This was one of the greatest speeches of his life, and he spoke with his old-time vigor. When he had concluded, I congratulated him, saying, "Governor, you seem to be yourself again," and he replied, "By no means; I am thoroughly exhausted." And the great statesman and patriot stepped out of the Senate and the doors closed behind him forever.

For some time he had realized that an insidious malady was sapping his vitals, and with a hope of relief he sought the sights and scenes of lands beyond the seas. Perhaps the deep, heaving billow or the cheery whisper of the wavelets; perhaps the soft caress of ocean's briny breath—perhaps these might lend a balm to heal him. He spent several months in Europe, visiting famous health resorts, but returned home without realizing his hopes. He resumed his duties in the Senate, but soon it became necessary for him again to abandon his work, and he retired, as he had often done, to the sweet seclusion of his mountain home in North Carolina, to enjoy the companionship of tree and bird and brook, where he could lay his head upon the bosom of the solitude and feel the refreshing influence of nature's heart throbs. This seemed to give him a new lease on life, and he returned to attend the extra session of Congress, in the summer of 1893, with his health apparently restored. But his laborious work as chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, the long, tedious struggle over the repeal of the Sherman law, and the worry and disappointment over offices for his friends, completely prostrated him.

Still hoping that the coveted panacea might be found, he went to Florida; but alas! he grew worse, returned to his home in Washington, and after lingering a few weeks died on the night of the 14th of April, 1894. He could no longer flee from death. The sands in the hourglass had refused to flow; the gateway to another world was reached and life vanished like a rainbow on a summer's morning. His was a painless death. The angel poised in contemplative silence above the ebbing and flowing tide, and seeing the weary waves roll heavily against the shore, reached down and laid a gentle hand upon the flood—and he was dead.

The climax of his life was heralded by a glorious sunset, while the night drew on as gently as the summer's gloaming, and brightly gleamed the halo that crowned his earthly career as he fell Death's captive on the threshold of the night. Too soon it seemed the autumn of his life drew swiftly on; too soon the hungry breath of ill-timed winter sought to steal away the glories of his ripening years, and his spirit, like a swift-winged bird of passage, took its flight to brighter and more genial climes.

When the message was flashed along the electric wires, "Senator Vance is dead," the heart of every North Carolinian was sad; for all realized that his death was not only a great and irreparable loss to the State, but to each individual a personal bereavement, for every man, rich and poor alike, could say, "He was my friend."

The remains of the dead Senator were escorted to a last resting place among his native mountains in North Carolina, the dearest place to him in all the world. Among these mountains he was born, among them he spent his young manhood, to them he resorted for recuperation in his failing years, and there he desired to sleep while the ages roll on.

The body lay in state in the capitol at Raleigh for several hours, and hundreds came sorrowfully to take the last earthly view of their own loved Vance. The whole State was as a stricken household. The stations between Raleigh and Asheville were thronged with people, hoping that they might have an opportunity once more to see the face of their true friend and trusted leader. Asheville was reached in the early morning of the 18th. The city was draped in mourning, and a sorrowing multitude that came from far and near stood about the streets waiting to pay the last tribute of love and respect to him who was returning home after the conflicts of life were ended. The air was pleasant and the morning sun shined brightly, but soon the sky drew a veil of somber clouds about its face, the mountains grew dark and gloomy, and as we stooped with tender hands and bleeding hearts to give him to the tomb, the very elements seemed to see our grief and dropped with us their tears.

He sleeps in beautiful Riverside, and the rolling French Broad that soothed his childhood slumbers will ever sing to his moldering ashes. Sleep on!

There is no death! The stars go down
To rise upon some other shore;
And bright in heaven's jeweled crown
They shine forevermore.

Mr. BUNN. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of several gentlemen who desire to add their tribute to the memory of the distinguished deceased, I ask unanimous consent that those who desire to do so may be permitted to publish remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TRACEY). Without objection that order will be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. BUNN. I now ask, Mr. Speaker, that under the resolution already adopted, the House be declared adjourned as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, before adjournment I ask unanimous consent to introduce—

Mr. BUNN. It is not in order, Mr. Speaker, to entertain a request for unanimous consent. The House stands adjourned at the close of these exercises by the resolution already adopted.

Mr. MURRAY. I understand that; but I ask unanimous consent. Does the gentleman object?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from South Carolina that the order having been made, and the resolution adopted, it would not be in order now to recognize the gentleman for any change in the programme. That is the custom of the House.

Mr. MURRAY. Even by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Even by unanimous consent.

And then, in accordance with the resolutions already adopted, the Speaker pro tempore (at 5 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.) declared the House adjourned until Monday at 11 o'clock a. m.

AMENDMENT OF REVENUE ACT.

Mr. VOORHEES. I present a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting certain suggestions for amendments to the present tariff law. I move that the communication be printed in the RECORD and as a document, and that it be referred to the Committee on Finance, so that it will be before us at our regular meeting to-morrow.

The communication was referred to the Committee on Finance, ordered to be printed as a document and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., February 23, 1895.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith certain suggestions for amendments to the present tariff law. These amendments are designed to make more clear the intention of Congress, and to lessen the chances of litigation, by removing the ambiguity now existing in the various paragraphs herein after enumerated.

Most of these suggestions originate with General Appraiser Sharretta, a few having been added by this Department, and all are transmitted for the consideration of your committee.

The paragraphs of the act of August 23, 1894, sought to be amended by the suggestions referred to, are as follows: 44, 48, *70, 88, 93, 124, 210, *217, 218, 234, 248, 263, 265, 266, 268, 276, 308, 321, 323, 338, 361, *401, 410, 431, 443, *467, *491, *542, 585.

The suggestions emanating from this Department are marked with an asterisk.

Respectfully, yours,

J. G. CARLISLE, Secretary.

Hon. D. W. VOORHEES,
Chairman Finance Committee, United States Senate.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

LIEUT. F. C. ROCKENBACH.

Mr. DANIEL introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 140) authorizing Second Lieut. F. C. Rockenbach, of the Tenth Cavalry, United States Army, to accept the position of commandant of cadets at the Virginia Military Academy, at Lexington, Va.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BATE subsequently reported the joint resolution without amendment from the Committee on Military Affairs, and it was placed on the Calendar.

LIEUT. COL. J. MADISON CUTTS.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I rise to make a request to which I trust the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, will give attention.

On the 26th day of January I asked unanimous consent to call from the Calendar the bill (S. 399) for the relief of Bvt. Lieut. Col. J. Madison Cutts. There was no objection, the bill was passed, and went to the other House. Since that time, in a very irregular and, as I think, improper way a so-called minority report, seriously reflecting upon the military record of the claimant, was injected into the RECORD before the majority report had been made to the House. I understand that the bill has since then been reported favorably by the House committee, but the only chance to get action upon it will be under a suspension of the rules.

I now wish to ask, in justice to myself, in justice to the Senate, as well as in justice to this soldier, the privilege of having printed in the RECORD the report of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, which report adopts the report of General BLACK, of the House of Representatives, and also an argument in behalf of the bill, which contains certain official documents relating to the case.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The report referred to is as follows:

Mr. PALMER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted the following report, to accompany bill S. 399:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 399) for the relief of Bvt. Lieut. Col. J. Madison Cutts, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to report that the committee have considered the bill and recommend its passage.

The military history of this officer is voluminous. Without repeating the facts, the committee beg leave to refer to a report made by the Military Committee of the House of Representatives in connection with the House bill No. 2556, which is adopted, and presents a very clear and succinct statement of the facts which entitle this officer to the favorable consideration of the Senate.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted the following report, to accompany bill H. R. 2556:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2556) for the relief of Bvt. Lieut. Col. J. Madison Cutts, submit the following report:

This bill has now for the third time, in a third successive Congress, received the careful and thorough consideration of the House Committee on Military Affairs.

The committee adopt the report of the committee of the Fifty-second Congress, which also includes that of the Fifty-first Congress, as follows:

[House Report No. 2118, Fifty-second Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2130) for the relief of Bvt. Lieut. Col. J. Madison Cutts, submit the following report:

An examination of the evidence accompanying this report shows that many of the most distinguished soldiers, living and dead, have with a great unanimity described his services as imbued with patriotic ardor of a high order, varied, faithful, unwearied, valuable, arduous, and often hazardous, and so distinguished as to be the recipient of a triple medal of honor from the Congress of the United States.

The commendations come from the brigade, division, and corps commanders of the Ninth Army Corps, on the staff of which he served as aid-de-camp, judge-advocate, and frequently assistant adjutant-general.

They are confirmed by his brigade, division, and corps commanders of the Fifth Army Corps, in which he served as acting field officer, second in command, and in command of his regiment. They are repeated from personal knowledge by commanders of other corps and by distinguished staff officers of the Army of the Potomac, on the staff of which army he himself served as aid-de-camp and judge-advocate. They come from soldiers who have served with great distinction as chiefs of the general staff corps of the Army, as adjutant, inspector, quartermaster, and commissary generals of the Army of the United States; and the entire record of this soldier has been carefully reviewed by distinguished commanders of Western armies, by Major-General Rosecrans, who commanded the Army of the Cumberland, and by Major-General Schofield, now commanding the Army, and who was Secretary of War at the date of this officer's resignation, and was and now is officially familiar with all attending circumstances connected therewith.

It has been made perfectly evident to the committee that the officer's career in the line, field, and staff of the Army was of great distinction and that his services were of a high order of merit and usefulness, and were eminent, brilliant, and worthy the highest consideration—eminent and worthy of the highest consideration in the belief of General Getty and General Schriver, and meritorious, gallant, and brilliant in the belief of General Rosecrans. The committee have therefore felt compelled to give the bill far more than usual consideration—careful, thorough, and even prolonged investigation.

The committee adopt the unanimous report made in the Fifty-first Congress upon a similar bill which passed the House of Representatives by the recognition of the Speaker unanimously and without objection on February 28, 1891.

[House Report No. 3343, Fifty-first Congress, second session.]

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7490) for the relief of Bvt. Lieut. Col. J. Madison Cutts, respectfully report as follows:

We find from the evidence, and careful examination of his record, as certified by the War Department, that this soldier, then a young lawyer, was one of the earliest of those who patriotically enlisted for the defense of the Union.

After serving as a private soldier in the First Rhode Island Volunteers (three months' service) he was commissioned by President Lincoln, at the request of Hon. Stephen A. Douglas, made shortly before his death, as captain of the Eleventh United States Infantry.

After organizing as mastering and disbursing officer Rhode Island troops, cavalry, artillery, and infantry, he was ordered to report for duty on the staff of Major-General Burnside, and served on that general's staff as aid-de-camp, judge-advocate, and in other staff capacities in his successive commands of the Department of North Carolina, the Ninth Army Corps, the right wing of the Army of the Potomac, the Army of the Potomac, and the Department of the Ohio. During that period he was present in the battles of South Mountain, Antietam, and Fredericksburg, in which his services were of a very high order of distinction.

He thereafter served with his regiment at the Mine Run campaign of General Meade and in the many battles of General Grant's campaign of the Wilderness, and was acting field officer, and thereafter commanded his regiment at General Grant's headquarters, City Point, Va., and at General Meade's headquarters, and in the battle of Fort Steadman, Va. His final service was in Louisiana, as commander of the post at Shreveport, La., with subposts at Marshall and Jefferson, Tex.

His services as a soldier were very varied, arduous, unremitted, often extremely hazardous, and involving great responsibilities, and he was at all times noted for ability and fidelity to duty and for conspicuous and distinguished acts of gallantry on many battlefields until, after rallying his regiment, which had been broken by a devastating artillery fire in front of Petersburg, Va., June 18, 1864, he himself fell, as was at that time supposed, mortally wounded, while advancing in front of his regiment in the line of battle which he had reformed.

He then incurred a disability, in the performance of a specific act of great gallantry, sufficient to have entitled him to be at once retired as captain. A little more than two years afterwards he could have been retired under the act of Congress of July 26, 1866, with the rank of his command when wounded—that of a field officer.

Although often urged and advised to avail himself of the provisions of that act, he had no desire to become a charge upon the country he had helped to save, and remained in the service, although seriously disabled, hoping still to be of service to his country.

He resigned June 19, 1868, under circumstances of great personal distress, and after having been tried by a court-martial on two sets of charges, which seem to have originated largely from personal difficulties with one of his officers.

At the time of his resignation Colonel Cutts believed that the court-martial had sentenced him to dismissal, but was entirely ignorant of the fact that the court had unanimously recommended, not mitigation or leniency, but the entire and absolute remission of the sentence, thus, while rendering a technical or pro forma judgment, themselves declaring that in view of all the circumstances the accused was not strictly amenable to their sentence.

This fact, by reason of his resignation, was not known to Colonel Cutts until May, 1890, and has only lately been officially certified by the Secretary of War to your committee.

His career since his resignation has been one of long-continued useful and honorable effort in civil and professional life. The committee believe it highly to his honor that, after marrying and having 11 children, 7 of whom are now living, he has forborne to press his claim and appeal for relief until no longer able, by reason of disability, the result of his wounds and exposures in the service, to bear the cares, anxieties, and wants of his large family.

In view of his long-continued and distinguished services, entitling him in a marked degree to the gratitude of his country, the committee recommend that he be honorably restored to the status he held when wounded, and accordingly report favorably the bill for his retirement in the Army with the rank of captain.

In justice to the soldier, and in support of their action, your committee append the statements of the many distinguished soldiers, living and dead, who were his friends, immediate associates, and comrades in arms.

APPENDIX.

Captain Cutts rendered efficient services as mustering and disbursing officer in organizing Rhode Island troops, for which he was personally thanked by the governor of that State.

Maj. Gen. William Sprague, late governor of Rhode Island, writes: "COLONEL: Say from me that your early action, the earliest who stirred, becoming the forlorn hope, against the organized South, entitles you to great consideration. More than that, your more than interested relations South would have restrained you had you not been more than ordinarily imbued with patriotic ardor. Besides, were you not the brother-in-law of Stephen A. Douglas? Your services were of a high order here, and I unite fully with all who certify to your services, with equally praiseworthy ones under my official eye."

The statements of Maj. Gens. Samuel D. Sturgis, J. D. Cox, John F. Hart, and Hugh Ewing, Henry J. Hunt, and William B. Franklin fully cover the period of his staff services.

Says General Sturgis: "I was well acquainted with Colonel Cutts during the campaign in Maryland in 1862, and can not speak in terms too high of the valuable, arduous, and often hazardous services which he rendered at the battles of South Mountain and Antietam. My personal acquaintance with Colonel Cutts included also his services at the battle of Fredericksburg, Va., in the fall of 1862, where his services were well understood by the army corps (Ninth) to which we both belonged."

"I believe it may be safely said of Colonel Cutts that there are few officers of his rank and opportunities who have done so much and received so little in return."

Writes Gen. J. D. Cox: "I take pleasure in stating that during the years 1862 and 1863 I was well acquainted with the military standing of Col. (then Captain) J. Madison Cutts, who was then serving on the staff of Major-General Burnside, commanding the right wing of the Army of the Potomac. This brought me in constant intercourse with the gentlemen of General Burnside's staff, and I know that Captain Cutts was among the most energetic, brave, and intelligent of the officers in that service. He sought active field service as acting aid, and was found wherever severe duty was to be done."

Says General Hunt: "I knew and esteemed Colonel Cutts during the late war, whilst he was serving on the staff of General Burnside, commanding the Army of the Potomac, my own headquarters being with those of General Burnside."

"He bore the character of an active, intelligent, and efficient officer, not only during that time but in the previous campaign in Maryland, when General McClellan commanded that Army."

"After he joined his regiment I did not personally see so much of him, but his services were always well spoken of until he was disabled by a severe wound received in one of the assaults on Petersburg in June, 1864."

Writes General Hartranft: "I was well acquainted with Col. J. M. Cutts during his services with the Army of the Potomac and up to the time of his disabling wound in front of Petersburg, June, 1864."

"He was distinguished for bravery and unswerving fidelity to duty, and I cheerfully testify to the very high regard in which he was held by his comrades and his superior officers. On the staff of Major-General Burnside and with his regiment he fully met every requirement of a gallant soldier and true patriot."

Says Gen. Hugh Ewing:

"The troops which I commanded were led to their position in line of battle at Antietam by Colonel Cutts, and the soldierly skill, coolness, and bright courage displayed by him that day won from me the highest admiration."

"He displayed on that field the noble qualities that go to make up the brilliant soldier, and I do not recall a single other officer during the entire course of the war that so quickly and profoundly impressed me."

"What more can I say? He was a bright light on the field of battle, cheering up the duller spirits, and by such service long continued as few rendered or could render, he secured the gratitude of the soldier and earned the lasting gratitude of the Republic."

Writes General Franklin:

"I well remember the fact that you were with me at the first battle of Fredericksburg, December 13, 1862, as a member of the staff of General Burnside, the commanding general, I being at the time the commander of the Left Grand Division. The service that you then rendered was brave, able, and efficient, and deserved honorable recognition by the authorities, although I have never heard that you received it. As our paths led in different directions after that time, I can not speak positively of your service afterwards; but I know that it was honorable and distinguished, and that you were severely wounded in action, and were entitled to have been placed on the retired list had you applied to be so placed. I do not think that under the circumstances you ought to be considered as having lost your right to such a position now, and sincerely hope that you will be successful in your efforts to have your merits recognized by the action of Congress, for which you ask."

Says Maj. Gen. Rufus Ingalls, chief quartermaster of the armies operating against Richmond:

"This certifies that I have personally known Col. J. Madison Cutts, captain, Eleventh Infantry, for years, running back before he entered the Army. I saw much of him while he served in the Army of the Potomac on General Burnside's staff, and with his regiment. I saw him at City Point when dangerously wounded in battle on the 18th of June, 1864, and sent him to Washington for treatment. He is a man of fine education, and had a robust constitution before his hard and dangerous service, but is now enfeebled from the effects of this service and wounds. As a soldier he stood high with all who served with him. No one questioned his ability, patriotism, and bravery. He served faithfully, and is deserving of his country now in his day of need." In the early days of his recovery, while still confined to his bed, Captain Cutts was cheered and strengthened by a letter written by General Griffin, his division commander, to Mrs. Griffin, and by her brought to him to read.

Writes General Griffin:

"I asked General Ayres to-day how Captain Cutts was getting, and he replied he understood he was out of danger, and added he had made his mark as a gallant officer in this campaign."

"I doubt whether any officer of the regulars has been so specially gallant and attentive to duty as Captain Cutts, and it was a subject of universal remark before he was wounded or thought he was going to die; still, it would not have surprised any one who had known his father."

Writes General Ayres, his brigade commander:

"My knowledge of Colonel Cutts dates back to his army service. He joined my command in 1864, and was with it in that long series of battles commencing with the Wilderness, through that, Spotsylvania Court-House, the North Anna, Cold Harbor, and the crossing of the James, to the front of Petersburg, when, in the assault on that place, June 18, he was severely wounded and carried from the field."

"His good conduct was marked in all those battles, and in some of the severest his gallantry was conspicuous. He was a soldier who deserves well of his country."

And again, in a separate paper, General Ayres, writing from personal knowledge, as an eyewitness of the circumstances under which Colonel Cutts was wounded, says:

"I have the honor to state, from personal knowledge, that Bvt. Lieut. Col. J. Madison Cutts, late captain, Eleventh Infantry, was second in command of his regiment (and acting field officer) on the 18th of June, 1864."

"In the engagement in front of Petersburg, Va., on that day a spherical case shot burst in front of the regiment, killing 7 men and wounding 23 others. Of course, confusion in the regiment followed. Colonel Cutts stepped to the front and straightened out the line. While doing so he was severely wounded and carried from the field. His conduct was, as on former occasions, conspicuous and gallant."

It now remains to refer to the statement of that most distinguished and skillful surgeon, Dr. Basil Norris, United States Army, who attended Colonel Cutts while wounded. He writes:

"Capt. J. M. Cutts, Eleventh United States Infantry, was wounded on the 18th of June, 1864, in front of Petersburg, Va., while acting as field officer, and, as I have been informed, advancing in line of battle in front of his regiment."

"He was conveyed to Washington, where he arrived June 20, 1864, and placed under my treatment, and continued under my care until September following. His wound was a gunshot wound (rifle ball) of left side. The ball entered between the eighth and ninth ribs on a line below the axilla, fractured the ninth rib, penetrated the lung, and made its exit between the ninth and tenth ribs at a point about 1 inch from the spinal column."

"Captain Cutts was brevetted lieutenant-colonel for gallant and distinguished services in that campaign of the Army of the Potomac, having previously rendered conspicuous services in the preceding campaigns of the same army."

"His wound created a permanent disability, which then, and ever since, would have entitled him, had he requested while in the service, to be placed on the retired list."

"He never made such application, but before his wounds were entirely healed rejoined his regiment and sought opportunities for further service and distinction."

"He resigned in 1868, and now, with a large family, after a long interval of honorable exertion, he finds himself no longer able to contend against his increasing disabilities incurred in the line of duty and in battle."

Informed, as I am, that Colonel Cutts will apply to Congress to be placed on the retired list of the Army, I would respectfully say that such recognition of his services and sufferings would only be in accordance with the custom of service in the Regular Army in like cases, and that I believe he abundantly merits such consideration."

Colonel Cutts was twice brevetted for gallant and distinguished services. He was recommended for the colonelcy of one of the regiments of General Hancock's veteran corps. Although strongly commended by his brigade, division, corps, and army commanders, Generals Ayres, Griffin, Warren, and Meade, and although his detail was requested by General Hancock in person, it was declined and refused by the Secretary of War, because he decided that the veteran corps was designed to bring back into the service those that were out of it, and he therefore would not order the detail of an officer already in the Army."

The indorsement of that distinguished soldier, Maj. Gen. G. K. Warren, the commander of the Fifth Army Corps, with reference to Captain Cutts's promotion to the colonelcy of a veteran corps regiment, followed the recommendations of his brigade and division commanders, Generals Ayres and Griffin, and was as follows:

"HEADQUARTERS FIFTH ARMY CORPS, August 24, 1864.

"I could add nothing to the recommendations above, which I fully indorse. I hope such faithful service and suffering will not go unrewarded."

Writes Maj. Gen. Edward Ferrero:

"It affords me great pleasure to recommend Col. J. M. Cutts, having known him personally while connected with the Ninth Army Corps. A brave and accomplished officer, whose faithful services during the late war entitle him to the kind consideration of his fellow-men in general. I sincerely hope that his wishes to be retired will meet with the approval of the Senate and House."

Writes Maj. Gen. and ex-President R. B. Hayes:

"During the Antietam campaign I served in the same corps with Colonel Cutts, and have sufficient information of his services throughout the war to be well assured that it was of decided merit."

"I am confident that he deserves the relief that Congress is asked to afford, and I trust sincerely that it will be granted."

Testifies Brig. Gen. David B. McKibben:

"It affords me great pleasure to add my testimony to your gallantry on the field of battle and to your high soldierly character when we served together in the Army of the Potomac. The records of the War Department show this. All your brother officers were witnesses of it. Such being the case, a generous country will not refuse its aid, only asked for when broken down by wounds and disease incurred battling for its existence."

"I sincerely wish you success, and I have not the slightest doubt you will achieve it. No one has a better claim and few as richly deserve of their country."

Writes Maj. Gen. Orlando B. Willcox, now governor of Soldiers' Home:

"I have read the abstract of your service in the Army with great interest, and cheerfully add my testimony to the mass of evidence to your distinguished services during our acquaintance in the war of the rebellion."

"I remember your activity and great usefulness in the fights at South Mountain and Antietam, particularly where, as aid-de-camp to General Burnside, you contributed so much to success, and I may safely say that no staff officer habitually exposed himself to danger in carrying orders and gaining intelligence more than yourself."

"In my humble judgment you are richly deserving retirement, with the rank of captain at least."

Testifies Maj. Gen. George W. Getty:

"I fully concur in all that has been said in your behalf."

"During the Maryland campaign, which resulted in the battles of South Mountain and Antietam, I was the chief of artillery of the right wing of the Army of the Potomac. You rendered most efficient aid to me in selecting positions for the artillery, and subsequently in conducting the batteries to the positions selected."

"In the Virginia campaign, under Major-General Burnside, your services were active and dangerous in carrying orders and gaining intelligence of the movements of General Lee's army. No staff officer on General Burnside's staff rendered more efficient or valuable services than yourself."

"Your services during the war were eminent and honorable, deserving the highest consideration."

"I do most sincerely hope that Congress, as a simple act of justice, will grant the relief you ask."

Since the above report was made much valuable and additional evidence has been laid before the Fifty-second Congress. This evidence is all embraced in its proper connections in the argument made before the committee. The entire argument which has so fully satisfied and convinced the committee has elicited evidences of equal approbation and conviction from the most distinguished sources, from some of which we quote:

WASHINGTON, January 21, 1892.

DEAR COLONEL CUTTS: I have received your letter of this date, and have no hesitation in stating with pleasure that the argument in support of the Congressional bill for your relief is candid, soldier-like, fair, just, and honorable. I can not doubt that it will convince all who may be called on to act in the case, and I trust that they will meet the wishes of yourself and the friends who desire the success which you richly deserve.

Truly, your friend,

ED. SCHRIVER,

Inspector-General U. S. A., Retired.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH., May 25, 1892.

DEAR COLONEL: I have read your argument, and you make a very able one. The report of the committee in the Fifty-first Congress speaks for itself. You deserve to succeed.

Yours, truly,

B. M. CUTCHEON,

Chairman Military Committee,
House of Representatives, Fifty-first Congress.

Col. J. MADISON CUTTS.

[From Maj. Gen. Amos Beckwith, Commissary-General United States Army, retired, president of the New Orleans court-martial.]

DEAR COLONEL: I have read over your argument in the matter of the bill for your relief. I can not see wherein you can better the presentation of the case. I hope the committee may take a sensible and favorable view of your case, and make such a recommendation as will carry the bill through.

PRESIDENT'S ROOM, BROWN UNIVERSITY,
Providence, R. I., May 21, 1892.

MY DEAR COLONEL CUTTS: I do not see but that you have prepared your argument with admirable candor, taste, and force. I can not but hope and think that you will win. So hope all your friends here.

Yours,

E. BENJ. ANDREWS.

[From ex-President R. B. Hayes.]

SPIEGEL GROVE, Fremont, Ohio, May 19, 1892.

MY DEAR COLONEL: I have read with interest your full and convincing argument in behalf of relief by act of Congress. It will, I trust, persuade the authorities to grant what you ask. Nothing can give full compensation for what you have suffered, but the honorable military record you have fairly won can and should be restored to you.

Sincerely,

RUTHERFORD B. HAYES.

[From Maj. Gen. Rufus Ingalls, Quartermaster-General United States Army, retired.]

NEW YORK CITY, June 5, 1892.

MY DEAR MADISON: I have read your argument very carefully and see nothing to add to it.

The fact is, your record is perfectly glorious, and I trust Congress will so decide promptly. At this late day, after having suffered so much through flagrant injustice, nothing can possibly be too good for you.

Very sincerely,

RUFUS INGALLS.

[From Gen. Edwin S. Osborne, chairman of the Subcommittee House Committee on Military Affairs, which unanimously reported the bill in the Fifty-first Congress.]

MY DEAR COLONEL: I became much interested in your case early in the Fifty-first Congress, and was sadly disappointed that the case was so long delayed in the Senate as to prevent justice being rendered in some slight degree to you by that Congress.

I have read the brief of your argument with much satisfaction and sincerely hope the deserved result for good so long delayed may be shortly reached, and the great injury done you after these long years of sorrow and suffering may be forgotten and that your future may be rich with many blessings.

Your services to the country on the battlefield were grand and glorious and you deserve that reward your splendid efforts demand.

The circumstances surrounding your resignation from the Army were fully understood by the Military Committee of the Fifty-first Congress, and it never was regarded in the slightest degree as an objection to granting the relief you so justly are entitled to receive.

Congress should restore to you all the rights and honors you certainly were entitled to before these sad experiences, though had man overtaken your career, and surely the wounds that carried you down on that hard day, 18th June, 1864, in the front at Petersburg, should not be forgotten.

You deserve well of your country, and it will be small return for periled life to give you the brevet rank of brigadier-general and place you upon the retired list as captain.

I sincerely trust that justice may be permitted for yourself and your children.

I am, dear colonel, with kind regards, your obedient servant,

EDWIN S. OSBORNE.

[From Major-General Commanding the Army.]

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
Washington, D. C., February 20, 1892.

MY DEAR COLONEL: I am sure the steps you have taken will secure to your case fair and deliberate consideration, and I doubt not ultimate success. Yours, very truly,

J. M. SCHOFIELD.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE,
Lansing, Mich., May 25, 1892.

MY DEAR COLONEL: Yours of 22d with inclosed "argument" received. I hope the bill for your relief will become a law. The argument seems conclusive that the act would be only justice to you.

I am, very truly, yours,

EDWIN B. WINANS.

Col. J. MADISON CUTTS,
Washington, D. C.

The committee have fully considered the courts-martial records and all the circumstances of great distress, anxiety, misapprehension, and entire misunderstanding which led to and attended this officer's resignation from the service after the machinery of courts-martial had been put in motion by bad and malicious men for their own purposes of revenge totally disconnected from the good of the service, and during the exciting period of reconstruction, when this officer at a culminating period of honorable usefulness was faithfully and intelligently exercising all his powers and facilities for the welfare and best interests of his country in an important and difficult command with the most beneficent results.

The committee concur fully with the surviving members of the New Orleans court-martial, which, at the time, unknown to this officer, unanimously recommended not mitigation, but the entire, absolute, and unqualified remission of their gravest sentence, as now expressed by Maj. Gen. Beckwith, the president of that court, that "this most valuable officer should be restored to the service, where he rightfully belongs," and only regret that, in accordance with all the recent precedents in cases of retirement, this can only be done by placing him on the retired list with the rank of captain, that being his actual rank at the date of his resignation, to date from the passage of this act, and without back pay, although in 1866, under then existing law, and two years before his resignation, he had the undoubted right to be retired as field officer, the rank of his command when wounded.

The Committee of the Fifty-third Congress do not consider it necessary to republish the argument of the case which was made an appendix to the report of the committee of the Fifty-second House, but they do desire to comment upon this case as being a precedent of great value, going very far to affirm and establish fundamental principles of importance to the Army and Navy in the administration of military justice.

It is much to the honor of this soldier that, during a long life since his resignation in 1868, his career has been one of active usefulness and honorable distinction in civil life; that he has never despaired of the justice of his country, and through a long contest, which almost invariably attends Congressional legislation, covering a large field of inquiry, he has borne himself gallantly, at all times displaying a chivalric spirit, the same courage and fortitude which he exhibited on many battlefields, and always insisting upon the most severe and critical examination of his entire record as a soldier, and finally has obtained the concurring judgment, with but few intervening days, in the same month and year of the Committees on Military Affairs in both Houses of Congress, which both he and his many friends throughout the entire country may well be justified in believing to be a final and conclusive judgment.

It is a clear violation of the laws, usages, and customs governing armies to continue an officer in the discharge of important duties and hold over his head any charge, and a still greater violation to make the prosecution of that charge depend upon his acceptance or nonacceptance of any conditions whatever.

Where an officer of tried ability, experience, and distinction exercises his best judgment in the performance of his duties a very careful inquiry should be made before subjecting him to the odium of a court-martial arising out of that performance of duty, or upon facts incidentally or accidentally connected.

The objects sought by the Articles of War, by the discipline, rules, and customs of the service, and of trials by courts-martial, are not to gratify private and personal resentments, or to accomplish private ends, but to maintain and secure, by the proper punishment of offenses and delinquencies, the dignity, order, good conduct, character, reputation, and discipline of the Army. The ends of justice should, therefore, never be perverted, or its administration strained, by the admixture of private animosities or personal resentments.

Where a court-martial, after a long and harassing trial, unanimously recommends, not mitigation or clemency, but the absolute and unqualified remission of an entire sentence, thus conclusively demonstrating that in view of all the circumstances the accused is not a proper subject for punishment he should not for a moment be kept in ignorance of that judgment of his peers, since it is clear that no reviewing authority would ever disregard such a recommendation.

Experience in this and other cases has shown that in the hurry, agitation and confusion of times of war or of civil excitement injustice is often done not always apparent on the face of the record, or the usual summary announcements of general courts-martial orders, and that a very careful inquiry into motives and circumstances by a proper board or otherwise is often necessary in order that justice shall be secured to deserving soldiers.

The truth of these propositions has been fully demonstrated in this case. The publication of the entire record of this soldier by the House Committee on Military Affairs, Fifty-second Congress, having enabled him to obtain the judgments of many of the most distinguished officers, both upon the active and retired list of the Army, from some of whom we quote—preceding them with a semi-judicial opinion of the chief justice of the great State of Ohio—and it is here to be noted that each has given his separate opinion in varying language unknown to the other, and yet with entire general concurrence, thus constituting a board of review of the highest character.

SUPREME COURT OF OHIO, CONSULTATION ROOM.
Columbus February 10, 1894.

MY DEAR MADISON: I have received your very kind letter of the 8th instant. It is to be earnestly wished by every lover of justice and every admirer of noble and patriotic service for our country in its darkest hour that this Congress will not end without passing the bill pending for your relief. It is not necessary to repeat what I have several times written you, that upon careful review of the evidence at the courts-martial in your case, and with reliable information as to the causes that unjustly inspired the proceedings, you should, in my opinion, have all and more than you ask at the hands of Congress.

I am gratified by your kind expressions in reference to myself. It is true you left the profession of the law, of which you would have become an ornament had you continued in the struggle (which is the lot of all who woo the jealous mistress), yet no one can find fault with your having made the sacrifice for the sake of your country.

With my best wishes, and I will say prayers, for your success in the matter which must now fill so large a space in your mind and heart and soul, I am, ever and sincerely,

Your friend,

F. J. DICKMAN.

Bvt. Maj. Gen. August V. Kautz, brigadier-general, United States Army, retired, a very high authority on the laws, usages, and customs which govern the Army, responded as follows:

TACOMA, WASH., February 4, 1893.

DEAR SIR: Not until now have I been able to read the reports of House Military Committee of the Fifty-second Congress, which enables me to answer the interrogatories of your letter of the 30th of December, 1892.

The customs and usages of the service were violated in allowing you to be continued in the performance of important duties after an alleged offense for which you were subsequently tried, as shown in the proceedings of the Cincinnati court-martial of 1863 in your case.

The Braman court-martial case does not show any treatment of enlisted men by you that could not reasonably have been excused by the circumstances and the practice of the service at that time.

The Peterson court-martial and the recommendation of the members show that they regarded you as a gallant and chivalrous officer, seeking to protect the country under your command against what you had reason to believe the dishonest schemes of Peterson.

I concur fully in the findings of the committees, and do not see how Congress can justly fail, except by default, to grant your petition. Trusting that when I shall have the opportunity of meeting you in person you will be in the enjoyment of your just dues, with your name again upon the Army list, I am,

Yours, very respectfully,

AUGUST V. KAUTZ,

Brig. Gen. Retired, Bvt. Maj. Gen. U. S. A.

Maj. Gen. Amos Beckwith, who was president of the New Orleans court-martial which tried both the Peterson and the Braman cases, with the full printed records before him, responds:

ST. LOUIS, MO., January 4, 1894.

MY DEAR COLONEL CUTTS: You are fortunately favored with a committee of able, historic men who are perfectly familiar with military affairs and acquainted with the customs and courtesies of the military service. They will at once perceive that injustice was done you in concealing or withholding from you the nature of the sentence of the New Orleans court.

I vividly recall all the incidents of this court-martial and recognize the recommendation of the court. In fact, it was written by myself.

Surely the time is at hand when you will secure your restoration so long delayed, so justly due.

Your obedient servant,

AMOS BECKWITH,

Brevet Major-General, United States Army.

General Otis, lately appointed brigadier-general United States Army, writes:

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE COLUMBIA,
Vancouver Barracks, Wash., February 26, 1894.

MY DEAR COLONEL: I have carefully read the report which you sent me. I do not know anything of the great majority of facts presented and discussed, and have now ascertained them for the first time, but concerning you I know this much:

I became acquainted with you at the Cambridge Law School in 1859 and 1860. You were a very close student, and established a reputation for application and ability. I next saw you in the Wilderness on the 7th of May, 1864, when you were with your regiment, and from that date to the 18th day of June, when you were severely wounded in front of Petersburg, Va., I saw you very frequently, as I was continuously an active member of the brigade in which you were serving.

On June 18 I commanded that brigade, and recollect most distinctly the circumstances under which you received your wound.

In that terrible campaign, from May 5 until Petersburg was reached, you bore yourself most gallantly and won the admiration and respect of all with whom you were associated. For your services in that campaign alone your country is greatly indebted, and I shall be very glad to see you suitably rewarded.

Very truly, yours,

E. S. OTIS,

Brigadier-General, United States Army.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 27, 1893.

DEAR COLONEL: I regard the report of the Military Committee as a thorough vindication of your record as a soldier and of your claim to the gratitude of your country.

With the compliments of the season, I am,
Yours, truly,

E. A. CARR,
Brigadier-General, U. S. Army, Retired Brevet Major-General.

GOVERNOR'S OFFICE, UNITED STATES SOLDIERS' HOME,
Washington, D. C., December 30, 1893.

DEAR COLONEL: I have carefully read your papers submitted to the Military Committee of the House of Representatives and regard the argument as most convincing. The recommendation of the six officers, all of high character, members of the court, could not possibly have been disregarded by any reviewing authority, and will, I trust, be equally respected by our Senate and House of Representatives.

Very respectfully,

D. S. STANLEY,
Brigadier-General, Retired, Brevet Major-General.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE EAST,
Governors Island, N. Y., January 17, 1894.

MY DEAR COLONEL: Surely the country can afford to remember the grand stand and solid work of the "Little Giant" and not less your own phenomenal gallantry and self-denying service.

Very truly, yours,

O. O. HOWARD,
Major-General, United States Army.

From Maj. Gen. Alex. S. Webb, ex-chief of staff, Army of the Potomac, and now president of the College of the City of New York:

OYSTER BAY, LONG ISLAND, N. Y., October 11, 1893.

MY DEAR COLONEL: I was in agony when your letter and report of Committee on Military Affairs came to me here. I have an attack of my old enemy.

Your vindication is complete. Of course, I read every word, and will read more.

I remain, truly yours,

ALEX. S. WEBB.

From Bvt. Maj. Gen. D. H. Rucker, ex-Quartermaster-General United States Army, brigadier-general retired:

WASHINGTON, February 3, 1894.

DEAR COLONEL: I have received and read the report of the Military Committee, House of Representatives, sent me with your note of the 31st January last.

Your very distinguished services in the Army during the war of the rebellion are very clearly and forcibly set forth therein and should, I think, be convincing to all impartial readers.

I hope that your brilliant career as an officer during the war may receive consideration and that you may be successful in your effort to be placed on the retired list of the Army.

Truly, yours,

D. H. RUCKER.

Maj. Gen. Fitz-John Porter responds:

119 WEST FORTY-SEVENTH STREET,

New York, December 24, 1893.

DEAR COLONEL: I have read with pleasure and interest the report of the House committee on your appeal, which you have kindly sent me.

I am sorry your bill did not pass and become law when first before Congress, but I do not doubt it will pass in your present appeal.

Wishing you relief, comfort, and happiness, and the same to your family, believe me,

Yours, truly,

F. J. PORTER.

Colonel Cutts, writing to Lieut. Col. John B. Parke, asking if he remembered delivering to him in person the order to advance on June 18, 1864, received the following reply:

COLUMBUS BARRACKS, OHIO,
DEPOT GENERAL RECRUITING SERVICE,
UNITED STATES ARMY,
December 25, 1893.

MY DEAR COLONEL: Your favor of December 21, 1893, at hand with inclosed report. I can not recollect about my giving you the orders on the field on the 18th of June, 1864, but I will state that from the time we crossed the Rapidan River up to the time you were wounded I saw you in command of your regiment, the Eleventh Infantry, and knew personally that you were always in the front. In several of the battles of the Wilderness and on the first day's fighting at that place you had charge of the skirmish line, I being on it, and held it all day long.

Hoping you may be successful, I remain,

Very truly, yours,

JOHN B. PARKE,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Second Infantry, Commanding Depot.

From Rear-Admiral Daniel Ammen, United States Navy (retired):

AMMENDALE, MD., November 19, 1893.

MY DEAR COLONEL: Your note of the 14th came duly to hand and later the Congressional report was received, which I have examined with interest.

I am quite sure that an examination of the abundant testimony covering every part of your army career entitles you to the consideration of your claims in an eminent degree, and I shall hope to see your wishes fulfilled.

Very truly, yours,

DAN'L AMMEN.

From Gen. L. A. Grant, ex-Assistant Secretary of War:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 18, 1894.

MY DEAR COLONEL: I have yours of yesterday, and have read with interest the report of the committee of the House, Fifty-second Congress, first session.

There seems to me but one conclusion. Your record and the great value of your military services are fully established, and you deserve well of your country.

Very truly, yours,

L. A. GRANT.

The committee report the bill back without amendment and recommend its passage.

IN THE MATTER OF THE BILL FOR THE RELIEF OF CAPT. AND BVT. LIEUT.
COL. J. MADISON CUTTS.

Argument submitted to the Committee on Military Affairs, House of Representatives, Fifty-second Congress, April 25, 1892.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, on the 6th of December, 1890, I was for the first and only time able to obtain an adequate hearing upon the bill then pending in the Fifty-first Congress for my relief.

On that day I was heard in person before a subcommittee of five members of the House Committee on Military Affairs, consisting of General Osborne, of Pennsylvania; Mr. Spooner, of Rhode Island; Mr. Lansing, of New York; General Spinola, of New York, and Mr. Lanham, of Texas. This subcommittee unanimously reported favorably. Mr. Spooner, of Rhode Island, was directed to prepare the report, which, after being read, considered in detail, and amended in the full committee, was unanimously presented to the House on the 22d day of December, 1890, and the bill thereafter, February 28, 1891, as unanimously passed the House, too late in the session, the last of that Congress, to permit my obtaining the final and concurring action of the Senate. A petition signed by the governors of Indiana, Rhode Island, Ohio, Illinois, Michigan, Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, and Vermont, and by ex-President Rutherford B. Hayes, Maj. Gen. Daniel Butterfield, Orlando B. Wilcox, W. S. Rosecrans, and Capt. John Palmer, commander-in-chief Grand Army of the Republic, has been presented to the Fifty-second Congress praying the passage of the bill to retire me as captain and for such future recognition by brevet rank of my services in the line, field, and staff of the Army "as may in your judgment give fitting expression to the gratitude of the nation."

A bill differing in some particulars from that passed by the House, Fifty-first Congress, is now before you.

I am thus compelled to renew the argument previously made, with some additions rendered necessary by very important additional evidence, by the fact that since the expiration of the Fifty-first Congress I have for the first time been able to fully examine certain courts-martial records, and have very recently been furnished with officially certified copies which I cheerfully and most gladly hold at the service of the committee.

I here beg each member of the committee to read carefully the report made in the last House, more especially because it fully sets forth the evidence upon which the committee acted, which, together with a large amount of most important additional evidence since received, I shall have occasion to refer to in this argument. I shall thus, to a very great extent, be saved the necessity of detail and a discussion which must, of inevitable necessity, be of considerable length on account of its absolutely necessary proofs and illustrations, will yet be made as short as possible.

Mr. Chairman, before the battle of Fredericksburg I had earned in the Ninth Army Corps and the Army of the Potomac an honorable reputation, which, if it was not distinguished as that of a soldier without fear or reproach, was certainly that of an officer whose patriotism was above suspicion, and whose devotion to duty was "constant and unwearied," to use the language of General Burnside.

During the battle of Fredericksburg, after exhausting my own horses I procured a fresh mount from Gen. Rufus Ingalls to carry a communication to General Franklin. Returning, horse and rider jaded and worn, I had occasion to speak a few words of censure to certain junior officers of General Burnside's staff, and riding past them, reported to that general, then holding a council of war, upon the condition and position of General Franklin's forces, the "Left Grand Division of the Army of the Potomac."

When I concluded, and, with diagram of General Franklin's line of battle in my hand, made by myself on the battlefield, had answered a few questions, General Burnside said to me, with great warmth and earnestness, thrice repeating himself, "Thank you, captain! Thank you, captain! Thank you, captain!"

I left the council room, and going downstairs I spoke to another member of the staff about the matter which had elicited my censure, which he said he also had observed, but yielding to his earnest and almost pathetic appeal, I determined to keep silent. I have kept silent ever since.

From that time, while there was distance and reserve, there were no personal quarrels; but I had incurred the hostility and concealed or suppressed enmity of certain officers, junior to myself, almost at the very moment of time when I had rendered services which had earned me the thrice-repeated thanks of the general commanding the Army of the Potomac, and as a consequence the gratitude of my country. (See the evidence of General Franklin, hereafter quoted.)

Under then existing law I was entitled to have been made major and judge-advocate of the Army, but, although I continuously performed the duties of judge-advocate, I did not receive the appointment, promotion, pay, and rank of a major of cavalry, to which I was then entitled by long previous services.

Between the battle of Fredericksburg and the "mud march" the chief of staff came to me and directed me to prepare, quietly and unobserved, to accompany the general commanding. I did so, and we proceeded, unattended even by our orderlies, to meet President Lincoln at Belle Plain. The President did not come. We met General Halleck in his stead.

Returning, riding late at night, our conversation came to be directed to the matter of my appointment as judge-advocate, and General Burnside said to me, "Captain, I have as much confidence in you as in any member of my staff, and I do not know but that I have more. I can at any time have you made major and judge-advocate, but I am seeking to give you much higher promotion."

Shortly afterwards a very important court-martial was convened in Washington, and I was detailed as its judge-advocate. General Burnside was a little later relieved from command of the Army of the Potomac. I joined him as he passed through Washington, and proceeded with him to Cincinnati, Ohio, where I was at once assigned to duty as judge-advocate of the Department of the Ohio, embracing the five great States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, and Kentucky, still only with my rank as captain, General Burnside again assuring me "that he was seeking to give me much higher promotion, if circumstances developed as he expected, and that he had already had some conversation with the Secretary of War upon the subject."

I may here be permitted to state that although I knew I was the only officer of General Burnside's personal staff whom General Hooker would gladly have retained, and had at this time close and very intimate friendship with many of the most cultivated and distinguished officers of the Army of the Potomac, which it grieved me to sever, I yet chose to remain loyal to my chief and to continue attached to his fortunes, while he himself was suffering from severe criticisms, disappointments, and vexation of spirit.

I here quote the following letter, filed in evidence, from Gen. Joseph Dickinson, the most intimate friend of General Hooker, his assistant adjutant throughout the whole of his career and his chief of staff on the field of Chancellorsville.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF PENSIONS,
Washington, D. C., April 27, 1891.

MY DEAR COLONEL: I sincerely regret that the bill for your retirement, which passed the House in so honorable and gratifying a manner, failed to be reached for the final action of the Senate.

I have read the report of the House committee with pleasure and interest, and I am sure that no one who served with you would question the justice of its conclusions.

I knew you well during the South Mountain, Antietam, and Fredericksburg campaigns and battles. Your valuable services, which then earned you a distinguished reputation as a soldier, were afterwards supplemented by equally conspicuous services in the campaign of the Wilderness.

No one at all familiar with the history of the Army of the Potomac would hesitate to accept as conclusive the testimony of the many distinguished officers whose statements in your behalf are set forth in the report of your committee.

It was always a matter of surprise to me that you were not commissioned as major and judge-advocate of the Army of the Potomac in 1862. Had you been so appointed, under the law authorizing a judge-advocate for each separate army, you would have belonged permanently to that army, and of course, unless otherwise ordered by the War Department, would have remained behind with General Hooker when General Burnside was relieved.

Had you, even as it was, requested to have been transferred to General Hooker's staff, I have every reason to believe that your wish would have been gratified, and that General Hooker would have made you his judge-advocate.

I know that he would have been glad to have retained you in the Army of the Potomac, and on his staff, because of your experience and reputation as an officer and many warm and mutual friendships and soldierly ties which commended you to his esteem as they then did and always will to mine.

I hope you will not relax your efforts, which I trust will soon be crowned with deserved success.

Very truly and sincerely, your friend,

JOS. DICKINSON.

I now beg leave to invite the most careful attention and rigid scrutiny of the facts now to be recited and a close observance and comparison of dates. April 18, 1863, General Burnside issued his celebrated General Orders, No. 38, at Cincinnati, headquarters Department of the Ohio.

As judge-advocate of the department, it became my duty to take cognizance of all arrests made under this order, to prepare the cases for trial, and to see that courts-martial and military commissions were duly organized for that purpose.

Dismissing from General Burnside, both as to the necessity and legality of that order, I determined by the careful and judicious selection of cases which most pressing demanded trial, and by promptly dismissing such as were not sustained by evidence, to avoid any flagrant violation of the laws and Constitution of my country.

A court-martial and military commission were immediately organized at Cincinnati. By this court and commission 10 cases selected by me with great care and a most painful sense of responsibility were tried previous to the arrest and trial of Mr. Vandaligham.

On the night of the 4th of May, 1863, Mr. Vandaligham was arrested. His arrest was made without my knowledge that it was intended, and I knew nothing about it until the next morning, when Burnside, before either of us had risen from our beds, sent for me and, placing a copy of a newspaper containing a report of Vandaligham's speech in my hands, directed me to draw up the charges against him and prepare for his immediate trial. I pronounced the arrest illegal and advised against the trial on the ground that it would create needless excitement and ill feeling in the department, and be productive of great injury to the cause and service of the Government. He angrily said that he would be responsible for the policy, and that as long as I was his judge-advocate it was my duty to do what he ordered me to do. I obeyed orders. As a soldier I could not have done otherwise.

The trial commenced May 6, and on its conclusion I hurried to Washington to attend my father in his last illness. Returning I renewed my opposition and continued my protests against Order No. 38.

On the 16th day of June, 1863, after some discussion between us, again terminating quite angrily on his part and on mine, concluding with a request that he would allow me to prepare an order embodying my views, to which he assented, I submitted a general order and urged its adoption and immediate publication in lieu of General Orders No. 38. His reply was that he would not issue it, as he was expecting a reply from the President relative to his request to be allowed to declare martial law throughout the department, which, if acquiesced in, no such order as mine would be necessary.

It will at once be observed by every lawyer, jurist, and statesman that he here admitted the justice, legality, and constitutionality of my contention, which all along had been that General Order No. 38 was in effect a declaration of martial law, which he had no right to declare and which was not authorized by the condition either of the Department or the country, and that no commanding general had the right to declare martial law except under overpowering necessity and in the immediate scene of operating and contending forces and warfare.

President Lincoln never gave General Burnside his consent to a declaration of martial law, and I have reason to believe and to know that he and his Secretary of War concurred with me in their beliefs.

On the 20th day of June I again urged the immediate publication of the order I had prepared. General Burnside's answer again was that he was still waiting the President's reply. After that time I had little personal or official communication with General Burnside.

Now, during all this time, from the date of his assumption of command to June 22, 1863, I had no knowledge of any storm brewing about my head. Not a single word from any human being, or the slightest intimation from any source, had reached me that any charge involving any scandal was being held over me for punishment.

If anything had occurred to the great scandal and injury of the service, and this took place April 10, 1863, certainly between April 10 and June 22, more than two entire months having elapsed, during all of which time I was in the continuous performance of the most responsible, arduous, and exacting duties, it must have become publicly known, or else the inevitable conclusion is that there was no great public scandal.

Something certainly did occur on the 18th day of June, and on the 21st and 22d, as fully set forth in General Orders, No. 33d, War Department, Adjutant-General's Office, October 8, 1863.

That occurrence was simply this: That one of the officers whom I had re-proved at Fredericksburg grossly insulted me by occupying my desk off-daily assigned to me for my official use, and receiving a sharp reply from me to a remark made by him, challenged me to fight a duel.

I declined for the reason that I did not consider him a foe worthy of my steel, for reasons which abundantly appeared in the course of my trial, and, above all, that I did not consider in any event that a proper method of displaying courage, and did not intend, as the officer of the staff charged with the duty of enforcing military law, propose myself to violate the Articles of War with deliberate intent.

It was then, and only then, when the sender of the challenge, the bearer, and myself were all three placed in arrest, that an occurrence which had happened on April 10, 1863, was for the first time brought to my attention with official emphasis, when a copy of the charges was handed to me.

This occurrence was unearthed by malice, and although the head and front of my offending was as I pleaded it, and was so found by the court, it was used, or attempted to be used, in the most cruel and treacherous manner for my destruction, and I became then and for a long time afterwards an almost infinite sufferer.

The court having no mercy for me leniently, complacently, if not complacently themselves, proceeded in the most flagrant manner to violate one of the Articles of War, and in open defiance of its mandatory and peremptory direction, found the sender of the challenge "guilty," and yet only sentenced him to be reprimanded, while the article of war, without leaving the slightest discretion, absolutely prescribes only one punishment, that of dismissal, and then, continuing, found the bearer of the challenge "not guilty," a result which clearly could have been reached only after some adroit subterfuge on his part, while they singled me out as the only victim and sacrifice.

The President, as soon as the cases could receive his attention, promptly restored me to duty, and practically reversed the judgment of the court by dismissing the sender of the challenge from the service. I to receive a reprimand.

When I afterwards saw the President he treated me with the greatest kindness and the most marked consideration, and did administer to me a mild reprimand. He advised me to forget the incident and not permit it to affect my future career, and concluded by saying: "I have done worse things myself, but nobody was ever mean enough to tell about them." It is here to be said that the offense was one known as the "concupiscence of the eyes." I had in a moment of temptation simply sought to look upon a person of the opposite sex when I should not have done so, and there was no further sin, and absolutely no aggravation and no scandal.

Mr. Chairman, the President restored me to duty for gallant conduct in battle.

Did the record of my services at that time and up to that date justify this action? Should it not have shielded me from the gross wrong and injustice done me and the ingratitude of Burnside? Let us examine that record with the assistance of General Burnside himself.

Says General Burnside in his report of the operations of the "right wing, Army of the Potomac, September 7-19, 1862:"

"To Brigadier-Generals Cox, Wilcox, and Sturgis: I desire to express my obligations for the prompt and efficient manner in which all my orders were executed."

Again—

"The battery commanders are deserving of special mention for the efficient service rendered by them during the day. I beg to call attention of the general commanding to the valuable services rendered by Lieutenant-Colonel Getty, chief of artillery, who posted the batteries."

"To my personal staff I am under renewed obligations for their constant and unwearying efforts and their faithfulness and courage exhibited in the various duties required of them. They are as follows:

"J. M. CUTTS,
"Captain, Aide-de-Camp."

It thus becomes immediately important to know what Generals Cox, Wilcox, Sturgis, Getty, Ewing, and Hartranft, all of whom were under fire with Captain Cutts, thought of his services at South Mountain and Antietam, and I may here also properly include their testimony and that of other distinguished soldiers as to the battle of Fredericksburg, all of which is quoted in the House report.

Writes Maj. Gen. J. D. Cox, who, after the death of General Reno at South Mountain, commanded the Ninth Army Corps at Antietam:

"I take pleasure in stating that during the years 1862 and 1863 I was well acquainted with the military standing of Col. (then Capt.) J. Madison Cutts, who was then serving on the staff of Major-General Burnside, commanding the right wing of the Army of the Potomac. This brought me in constant intercourse with the gentlemen of General Burnside's staff, and I know that Captain Cutts was among the most energetic, brave, and intelligent of the officers in that service. He sought active field service as acting aid, and was found wherever severe duty was to be done."

Writes Maj. Gen. Orlando B. Wilcox, now governor of the Soldiers' Home, and brigadier-general, United States Army, retired:

"I have read the abstract of your service in the Army with great interest, and cheerfully add my testimony to the mass of evidence to your distinguished services during our acquaintance in the war of the rebellion."

"I remember your activity and great usefulness in the fights at South Mountain and Antietam, particularly where, as aid-de-camp to General Burnside, you contributed so much to success, and I may safely say that no staff officer habitually exposed himself to danger in carrying orders and gaining intelligence more than yourself."

"In my humble judgment you are richly deserving retirement, with the rank of captain, at least."

Says Major-General Sturgis, who commanded a division of the Ninth Army Corps at South Mountain and Antietam, and afterwards the corps:

"I was well acquainted with Colonel Cutts during the campaign in Maryland in 1862, and can not speak in terms too high of the valuable, arduous, and often hazardous services which he rendered at the battles of South Mountain and Antietam. My personal acquaintance with Colonel Cutts included also his services at the battle of Fredericksburg, Va., in the fall of 1862, where his services were well understood by the Army Corps (Ninth) to which we both belonged."

"I believe it may be safely said of Colonel Cutts that there are few officers of his rank and opportunities who have done so much and received so little in return."

Testifies Maj. Gen. George W. Getty, now colonel, United States Army, retired:

"I fully concur in all that has been said in your behalf."

"During the Maryland campaign, which resulted in the battles of South Mountain and Antietam, I was the chief of artillery of the right wing of the Army of the Potomac. You rendered most efficient aid to me in selecting positions for the artillery, and subsequently in conducting the batteries to the positions selected."

"In the Virginia campaign under Major-General Burnside your services were active and dangerous in carrying orders and gaining intelligence of the movements of General Lee's army. No staff officer on General Burnside's staff rendered more efficient or valuable services than yourself."

"Your services during the war were eminent and honorable, deserving the highest consideration."

"I do most sincerely hope that Congress, as a simple act of justice, will grant the relief you ask."

Writes Major-General Hartranft, who commanded a division of the Ninth Corps and the corps itself, and was afterwards governor of Pennsylvania:

"I was well acquainted with Col. J. M. Cutts during his services with the Army of the Potomac and up to the time of his disabling wound in front of Petersburg, June, 1864."

"He was distinguished for bravery and unswerving fidelity to duty, and I cheerfully testify to the very high regard in which he was held by his comrades and his superior officers. On the staff of Major-General Burnside and with his regiment he fully met every requirement of a gallant soldier and true patriot."

Hon. Whitelaw Reid, ex-United States minister to France, in his history of "Ohio in the War; Her Statesmen, Her Generals, and Her Soldiers," in his sketch of Maj. Gen. Hugh Ewing, a brother-in-law of General Sherman, says:

"At the battle of Antietam he commanded a brigade at the extreme left, which, according to General Burnside's report, after General Rodman had been driven back, 'by a change of front to rear on his right flank saved the left from being driven completely in.' In General Cox's order issued after this battle Colonel Ewing was favorably mentioned 'for energy and skillful bravery.'"

Certainly what General Ewing says of Captain Cutts, and with especial reference to his services on this same battlefield, is entitled to great weight with Congress and the country.

Says Gen. Hugh Ewing:

"The troops which I commanded were led to their position in line of battle at Antietam by Colonel Cutts, and the soldierly skill, coolness, and bright courage displayed by him that day won from me the highest admiration."

"He displayed on that field the noble qualities that go to make up the brilliant soldier, and I do not recall a single other officer during the entire course of the war that so quickly and profoundly impressed me."

"What more can I say? He was a bright light on the field of battle, cheering up the duller spirits, and by such service long continued as few rendered or could render, he secured the gratitude of the soldier and earned the lasting gratitude of the Republic."

Writes another of Ohio's distinguished soldiers and one of the most distinguished citizens of the Republic, Maj. Gen. and Ex-President R. B. Hayes:

"During the Antietam campaign I served in the same corps with Colonel Cutts and have sufficient information of his services throughout the war to be well assured that it was of decided merit."

"I am confident that he deserves the relief that Congress is asked to afford, and I trust sincerely that it will be granted."

Writes Maj. Gen. Edward Ferrero, of New York, who commanded a brigade and a division of the Ninth Corps:

"It affords me great pleasure to recommend Col. J. M. Cutts, having known him personally while connected with the Ninth Army Corps. A brave and accomplished officer, whose faithful services during the late war entitle him to the kind consideration of his fellow-men in general. I sincerely hope that his wishes to be retired will meet with the approval of the Senate and House."

Says Major-General Hunt, chief artillery, Army of the Potomac:

"I knew Colonel Cutts during the late war, whilst he was serving on the staff of General Burnside, commanding the Army of the Potomac, my own headquarters being with those of General Burnside."

"He bore the character of an active, intelligent, and efficient officer, not only during that time, but in the previous campaign in Maryland, when General McClellan commanded that army."

"After he joined his regiment I did not personally see so much of him, but his services were always well spoken of until he was disabled by a severe wound received in one of the assaults on Petersburg in June, 1864."

Testifies Maj. Gen. William B. Franklin:

"I well remember the fact that you were with me at the first battle of Fredericksburg, December 13, 1862, as a member of the staff of General Burnside, the commanding general, I being at the time the commander of the left grand division. The service that you then rendered was brave, able, and efficient, and deserved honorable recognition by the authorities, although I have never heard that you received it. As our paths led in different directions after that time, I can not speak positively of your service afterwards; but I know that it was honorable and distinguished, and that you were severely wounded in action and were entitled to have been placed on the retired list had you applied to be so placed. I do not think that, under the circumstances, you ought to be considered as having lost your right to such a position now, and sincerely hope that you will be successful in your efforts to have your merits recognized by the action of Congress, for which you ask."

Says Maj. Gen. Rufus Ingalls, chief quartermaster of the armies operating against Richmond:

"This certifies that I have personally known Col. J. Madison Cutts, captain Eleventh Infantry, for years, running back before he entered the Army. I saw much of him while he served in the Army of the Potomac on General Burnside's staff, and with his regiment. I saw him at City Point when dangerously wounded in battle on the 18th of June, 1864, and sent him to Washington for treatment. He is a man of fine education, and had a robust constitution before his hard and dangerous service, but is now enfeebled from the effects of this service and wounds. As a soldier he stood high with all who served with him. No one questioned his ability, patriotism, and bravery. He served faithfully, and is deserving of his country now in his day of need."

I can not close the testimony on this part of my case without quoting the evidence of one to whose magnificent and inspiring elan, while he was the youthful war governor of Rhode Island, that State and the entire country owes a debt of gratitude which can not be obscured or obliterated by his own subsequent misfortunes, or entirely forgotten until ingratitude ceases to be the basest of crimes.

Maj. Gen. William Sprague, late governor of Rhode Island, writes:

"COLONEL: Say from me that your early action, the earliest who stirred, becoming the forlorn hope, against the organized South, entitle you to great consideration. More than that, your more than interested relations South would have restrained you had you not been more than ordinarily imbued with patriotic ardor. Besides, were you not the brother-in-law of Stephen A. Douglas? Your services were of a high order here, and I unite fully with all who certify to your services, with equally praiseworthy ones under my official eye."

Mr. Chairman, may I not reasonably expect your prompt and unanimous decision that the facts in my case abundantly authorize the President to restore me to duty?

Immediately an equally important question arises. Was the President's action justified by the results? Gentlemen of the committee, it is of a strange order of Divine Providence that while on the 18th day of June, 1863, one Captain Hutton picked a quarrel with me which led to his own final discomfiture, while it returned to his regiment, with a sad and sorrowing countenance and almost a broken heart, one who before that time had been a "happy warrior," the man of sorrows, precisely to a day, one year afterwards, on the 18th day of June, 1864, fell, as was supposed, mortally wounded, a universally acknowledged "hero of the Republic." All this not great for a day and heroic for an hour, but after the most conspicuous and distinguished services in a long series of battles, and in the very act of tendering specific, conspicuous, distinguished, and successful services of that kind which are the pride and glory of a soldier, and are in all nations recognized by the highest and noblest rewards and praises.

Is not this absolutely true? See the evidence of my brigade and division commanders, quoted in the report as follows:

"In the early days of his recovery, while still confined to his bed, Captain

Cutts was cheered and strengthened by a letter written by General Griffin, his division commander, to Mrs. Griffin, and by her brought to him to read.

"Writes General Griffin:

"I asked General Ayres to-day how Captain Cutts was getting, and he replied he understood he was out of danger, and added he had made his mark as a gallant officer this campaign.

"I doubt whether any officer of the regulars has been so specially gallant and attentive to duty as Captain Cutts, and it was a subject of universal remark before he was wounded or thought he was going to die; still, it would not have surprised anyone who had known his father."

"Writes General Ayres, his brigade commander:

"My knowledge of Colonel Cutts dates back to his army service. He joined my command in 1864 and was with it in that long series of battles commencing with the Wilderness, through that, Spotsylvania Court-House, the North Anna, Cold Harbor, and the crossing of the James, to the front of Petersburg, when, in the assault on that place, June 18, he was severely wounded and carried from the field.

"His good conduct was marked in all those battles, and in some of the severest his gallantry was conspicuous. He was a soldier who deserves well of his country."

"And again, in a separate paper, General Ayres, writing from personal knowledge, as an eyewitness of the circumstances under which Colonel Cutts was wounded, says:

"I have the honor to state from personal knowledge that Bvt. Lieut. Col. J. Madison Cutts, late captain Eleventh Infantry, was second in command of his regiment (and acting field officer) on the 18th of June, 1864.

"In the engagement in front of Petersburg, Va., on that day, a spherical-case shot burst in front of the regiment, killing seven men and wounding 23 others. Of course, confusion in the regiment followed. Colonel Cutts stepped to the front and straightened out the line. While doing so he was severely wounded and carried from the field. His conduct was as on former occasions, conspicuous and gallant."

Have I not conclusively shown, Mr. Chairman, that however distinguished a soldier I may have been in the Ninth Army Corps, I was even more distinguished in the celebrated Fifth Corps, Army of the Potomac?

The House report, Fifty-first Congress, covering this period of my services, the Wilderness campaign of 1864, includes the following facts and evidence:

"Colonel Cutts was twice brevetted for gallant and distinguished services. He was recommended for the colonelcy of one of the regiments of General Hancock's Veteran Corps. Although strongly commended by his brigade, division, corps, and army commanders, Generals Ayres, Griffin, Warren, and Meade, and although his detail was requested by General Hancock in person, it was declined and refused by the Secretary of War, because he decided that the veteran corps was designed to bring back into the service those that were out of it, and he therefore would not order the detail of an officer already in the Army."

"The indorsement of that distinguished soldier, Maj. Gen. G. K. Warren, the commander of the Fifth Army Corps, with reference to Captain Cutts's promotion to the colonelcy of a veteran corps regiment, followed the recommendations of his brigade and division commanders, Generals Ayres and Griffin, and was as follows:

"HEADQUARTERS FIFTH ARMY CORPS, August 24, 1864.

"I could add nothing to the recommendations above, which I fully indorse, I hope such faithful service and suffering will not go unrewarded."

I here quote the evidence of a dearly beloved comrade and friend, who fought side by side with me in the Wilderness campaign, both of us captains and exercising the same commands as acting field officers.

Testifies Brig. Gen. David B. McKibben:

"It affords me great pleasure to add my testimony to your gallantry on the field of battle and to your high soldierly character when we served together in the Army of the Potomac. The records of the War Department show this. All your brother officers were witnesses of it. Such being the case, a generous country will not refuse its aid, only asked for when broken down by wounds and disease incurred battling for its existence."

"I sincerely wish you success, and I have not the slightest doubt you will achieve it. No one has a better claim and few as richly deserve of their country."

With equal pleasure and pride I here refer to the following testimony of another gallant and distinguished commander of the Fifth Army Corps, who was General Hooker's chief of staff at Chancellorsville, remained with General Meade as his chief of staff at Gettysburg, and is now the president of the Society of the Army of the Potomac. He writes as follows:

"616 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK, April 13, 1891.

"MY DEAR COLONEL: I regret to learn that Congress did not pass the bill putting you on the retired list as captain. I hope it will yet be done. I recall your presence with the Army of the Potomac, and your coming to me with orders from General Burnside while I commanded the Fifth Corps in the battle of Fredericksburg, and your self-possession and courage under a terrible fire at the time I was with General Humphreys during the attack of his division. I recall also your activity in a general way during the war, and I know that you deserve this consideration and justly should have it."

"I hope another Congress will give it you."

"I am, very truly, yours,

"DANIEL BUTTERFIELD."

It was only after hearing of my services in the Fifth Corps, and knowing that I had received two brevets, that, possibly realizing the great wrong that had been done a most loyal and devoted staff officer, General Burnside wrote me the following letter:

PROVIDENCE, R. I., February 15, 1865.

COLONEL: Allow me to congratulate you upon the honorable mention made of your services during the late campaign in Virginia. Notwithstanding the course pursued by me, I have always felt the greatest interest in your success and welfare. I congratulate you upon the reward given for your distinguished services.

A. E. BURNSIDE, Major-General.

Bvt. Lieut. Col. J. M. CUTTS.

Certainly, Mr. Chairman, that court-martial record is entirely disposed of now and forever. Surely that man does not live, citizen or soldier, so ungenerous and unjust as to say or intimate that it can in any possible way be for a moment held or entertained as an objection to my being placed on the retired list of the Army by a tardy act of justice on the part of the Congress of the United States.

And now, Mr. Chairman, having incontestably, and I trust gallantly, won this portion of the battlefield, I mass all my forces and direct all my guns in another direction.

Upon the arrival of my regiment, the Twentieth United States Infantry, from Richmond, Va., at New Orleans, La., in January, 1867, I expected, as the senior captain, to be stationed at the regimental headquarters, Baton Rouge, La. Lieutenant-Colonel Watkins came to me and informed me that he had been requested by General Sheridan to select his most experienced officer to send to Shreveport with three companies, and that the general had told him that section of country was in a very bad condition and that the services of a competent officer were much needed, and that as I had the largest and most varied experience of any captain of the regiment, especially so as a staff and administrative officer, he had been compelled to designate me.

Suppressing my disappointment, I went cheerfully forward to the duty assigned me, and, having first personally superintended the dispatch of the other companies to their posts, I, with three companies, the last to leave the levee, departed, via the Mississippi and Red rivers, for Shreveport, La.

The Eightieth United States Colored Infantry was then garrisoning that portion of Louisiana and neighboring parts of Texas. Its term of service had expired and the regiment was awaiting muster out. All discipline had either relaxed, had never existed, or been entirely abandoned, and the complaints of the communities of Shreveport, La., Marshall and Jefferson, Tex., and surrounding country were universal. The disorganized colored troops were subjects of alarm and discontent, and they left behind them, both officers and men, a very bad and odious reputation.

As soon as possible, by calling in their detachments and relieving them at Marshall and Jefferson, Tex., and wherever else was necessary, with troops of my own command, I sent them down to New Orleans to be mustered out.

Immediately I gave the closest attention to the discipline of my own command, and gave strict and peremptory orders that the men should be kept in their camps until their posts were thoroughly policed, reconstructed where necessary, and put in perfect condition. I was determined that none of the odium attached to the colored troops should ever by reflection soil the honor of my command.

When they came to observe the marked contrast, kindly and friendly relations with the people were soon established, their confidence and respect gained, quiet and good order restored, and my command accomplished its mission.

Those who are familiar with the early period of reconstruction will at once perceive that I had no time for idleness and dissipation, and that as the officers under my command, even my post adjutant and quartermaster, were absolutely without experience of the kind required, every detail of command demanded and received my most constant personal attention and supervision.

I took an active and studious interest in all questions affecting the welfare of that people and came into relations of friendship with all their leading citizens, who soon began to look upon me as a friend and adviser.

I do not believe that any commanding officer or any body of troops in any part of the South during the entire period of reconstruction ever possessed in a higher degree the respect and confidence of the people among whom they were stationed. It is a source of calm content and happiness for me to know that in every just and honorable sense I justified the confidence reposed in me, as both implied and expressed by my selection for the command, which, if not the largest, was certainly the most difficult and the most important in the Fifth Military District, and by reason of its great distance from department headquarters and the want of rapid and reliable means of communication—there were no railroads and the telegraph was irregular—was, in fact, an entirely independent and isolated command, imposing upon me the greatest care, diligence, watchfulness, and frequently the gravest responsibilities.

The limits of this argument will not permit me to include here abundant contemporaneous public and official documentary and other proofs and illustrations. It is enough to say that I was soon called to put the reconstruction laws in operation. Under them I was compelled to exercise important powers, and was responsible for the peace and good government of that section of country, of which I was in substance military governor.

The present useful and distinguished member of Congress from the Shreveport (La.) district, now chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, was then a young student at Alexandria, La. In November, 1890, I inclosed him a copy of so much of this argument I then had prepared for the House committee as contained the statements just made as to the character and results of my command in Louisiana and Texas, requesting that he would make careful inquiry and make such indorsement as he saw fit upon the paper. He returned it to me with the following indorsement:

"SHREVEPORT, LA., November 12, 1890.

"I was not living in Shreveport during the time J. Madison Cutts was commandant of the post there in the year 1867; but inquiry among substantial citizens who were resident there at the time enables me to say that the within statement is substantially correct. I am informed that his official conduct was marked by fairness, justice, and moderation."

"N. C. BLANCHARD,

"M. C., Fourth Louisiana District."

I have since had an opportunity to send the same statement, with Mr. BLANCHARD's indorsement, to a distinguished citizen who was a citizen of Shreveport and residing there while I was in command, but who now is the managing editor of the Galveston and Dallas (Tex.) News. His indorsement is as follows:

"GALVESTON, TEX., June 4, 1891.

"I take pleasure in indorsing the within. I was a resident of Shreveport during the period named, and can personally testify to the splendid conduct of J. Madison Cutts in coming to the relief of the people of my section of country during the troublous times of the reconstruction period."

"R. G. LOWE,

"Managing Editor Galveston News."

How, then, Mr. Chairman, did it happen that on the 17th day of July, 1867 I was placed in arrest, relieved from arrest September 4, 1867, but thereafter suspended from command, and in January until near the end of May, 1868, was under trial before the same court-martial at New Orleans on two sets of charges, and afterwards, in great distress and in entire ignorance of the final action of the court, resigned from the service June 19, 1868?

Was it wholly or in part my own fault, or was there malice and bad blood, misconception, misrepresentation, and misunderstanding of facts on the part of others, and hasty and ill-advised action?

In the last days of June, 1867, in compliance with regulations, I inspected my entire command—the ports of Shreveport, La., Marshall and Jefferson, Tex. I had also to investigate and report upon the local administration of justice and trials by jury in Jefferson, Tex., and neighboring parts of Texas.

While I was at Jefferson the deputy collector of United States internal revenue informed me that he had been approached by a man named Peterson, who had proposed that he should unite with him in defrauding the revenues of the Government. He told me that said Peterson had assured him it was a safe transaction; that he was intimate with General Mower, and that all the officers of the Army and internal-revenue officers, including E. A. Rollins, then Commissioner of Internal Revenue, from Shreveport to Washington, were connected and associated with him.

Satisfied of the character and personal integrity of Captain Fowler, who was my informant, I assured him that nothing of the kind could be attempted, still less accomplished, within the limits of my command, and I immediately took the responsibility of arresting the said Peterson, and directed that he should be sent by the earliest boat to New Orleans under guard. It must be here noted that I had no commissioned officer who could be spared to send with him.

There was a delay in Peterson's departure, otherwise I would have had no further personal connection with him. During this delay I completed my inspection at Jefferson, which involved some important matters of detail connected with the health and comfort of the troops. I also met Judge Mabry and the leading members of the bar, and thoroughly investigated the administration of local justice and the jury question, then agitating the State of Texas, and was ready to return to Shreveport immediately.

I had not expected to be on the same boat with Peterson. But it so happened. The departure of the boat was delayed by a storm, during which time many of the lawyers and other citizens I had met were on the boat, and some of them had come down in compliment to me to see me off.

I had not intended to hold any intercourse whatever with Peterson. I considered that for the time I was entirely off duty. I had just completed a most laborious amount of duty. It was shown on my trial that during the whole time I had refused the social courtesies usually implied among gentlemen in a drink; had been a guest at a dinner party, drinking with the hostess only one glass of champagne, remarking at the time that I supposed I could do so, as I had performed all my duties and was "off duty." On the boat during the storm, with the gentlemen who were detained aboard, I indulged in the social intercourse common and almost universal in that country, and drank whisky, almost the only obtainable drink, with some of the gentlemen I had met.

When he saw I was somewhat affected with liquor, Petersen seized an early opportunity and made a most offensive allusion to the fact that I had once been court-martialed at Cincinnati, and he threatened that when he arrived at New Orleans he would be released, and would have me put in arrest, and that his arrest would cost me my shoulder straps, which he would capture.

This assault upon my character as a man and my honor as a soldier violently angered me, and I treated him in the manner about as found by the subsequent court-martial, but not as he himself alleged when he arrived at New Orleans, as will most clearly be seen by considering and examining the findings of that court.

When the boat arrived the next day at Shreveport I was entirely free from the influence of liquor, took the prisoner out to my headquarters, regretted that under violent provocation I had in anyway misused him. He apologized for his own insolence to me and expressed himself gratified with his subsequent treatment. But I did not release him from arrest, but sent him, under guard, to New Orleans. It is almost morally certain that had he been released he would never have preferred charges of any description against me.

Upon his arrival in New Orleans he was at once released, and I was soon afterwards placed in arrest. The record of the subsequent court-martial shows that I then entertained a very firm and decided opinion as to what I judged a very summary proceeding, and that opinion was soon afterwards expressed officially in very emphatic language, which I then believed to be true and do now believe to be true, but which was not intended to be disrespectful to my district commander, and which the court found contained no "false accusations."

I beg leave here to refer to my "inspection report" and accompanying letter of advice, dated June 30, 1867, and also to a report made by me, dated July 5, 1867, upon the administration of justice and the jury system as containing conclusive evidence of the large amount of important service and duty I was then at that very instant of time performing with the greatest and most conscientious fidelity to duty. These papers can be furnished if desired from the War Department. "Records of discontinued commands."

In my letter of advice transmitting my inspection report for the month of June, 1867, I was able with the strictest and most honorable regard for exactness to speak of my command as follows:

"With the exceptions indicated the arms, accoutrements, clothing, camp and garrison equipage of the entire command are in the most perfect condition."

"In conclusion I have the honor to report that the conduct of the troops has been excellent. There have been no enlisted men in confinement at either of the above posts for a long time. The objects for which they have been stationed in this country have been so fully attained as to induce me to recommend them to the commendation of the commanding general."

"The registration has been conducted with entire success. All classes of citizens have been secure in their lives and property to an extent heretofore unheard of in this portion of the country. Such rare and occasional outrages as anyway come within the power of the military forces of the country to prevent or punish have been promptly met, acted upon, and reported from these headquarters, and the action taken approved."

"Though unable entirely to control sentiments or opinions, no unlawful acts have been permitted to go unnoticed, and the influence of this command has been exerted to promote good feeling, to accelerate an improved and improving tone of political sentiment, and to illustrate by character, conduct, example, and act that the power of the Government is not to be used for oppression, nor for malice, nor for revenge, either public or private, but for the peace, harmony, and happiness of the entire country."

How, Mr. Chairman, were results so useful and honorable achieved? I can not give a better answer than by quoting what were uniformly my instructions to the officers under my command as addressed in writing to the commanding officer of the post at Jefferson, Tex., June 1, 1867:

"It is much to be desired that you should cultivate the acquaintance of the most prominent and able citizens, bring the evils complained of to their attention, and induce them to use their utmost exertions to correct them."

"I need not repeat my verbal instructions to keep your command at all times in a high state of discipline and efficiency. I mainly rely upon the moral effects which would thence result to restrain evil-disposed persons from the commission of acts which endanger the welfare of the country, and to induce a favorable and satisfactory condition of public sentiment throughout the limits of your post."

About this time, Mr. Chairman, June 21, 1867, there was published in the Shreveport and New Orleans papers a card of thanks from the officers and passengers of the steamer Live Oak addressed to me, for my successful aid in rescuing that steamer and her cargo from destruction. The editor of the Cado Gazette in publishing the card commented upon it editorially as follows:

"We publish in another column a card from the officers of the steamer Live Oak, and also one from the passengers, tendering their thanks to Colonel Cutts, commanding at Shreveport, for his prompt, honorable, and kind action in relieving that steamer from her perilous position on the 20th instant."

"Such officers as Colonel Cutts sent among the people of the South will do more for reconstruction and good will than all other measures combined."

Mr. Chairman, I am here compelled to refer to other incidents of my career which were made subject-matter of court-martial before the same court-martial which tried the Peterson charges.

In Shreveport, La., from February to July, 1867, I was an excessively over-worked man. I had been severely wounded, and no doubt ought to have gone on the retired list, as I was advised at the time, and as I could have done any time after I was wounded, June, 1864, and after the passage of the act of July 26, 1860, with the rank of a field officer, that having been the rank of command when wounded. I was in 1867 in an unhealthy, malarial country, unaccustomed to its climatic influences, and was often subject to great debility. My wound was through the left lung. I was advised to have recourse to stimulants, but abstained as bravely as I could. Sometimes I drank whisky and quinine.

This was the universal habit and custom of the people there. No man who does that either from choice or a supposed or real necessity can safely say that he may not at some unguarded moment do so to excess, with results largely dependent upon his physical condition.

Arriving at Shreveport in January, it was not until March 1, 1867, that I could realize the results of constant and incessant labors, not unmixed with care, and permit myself to seek any relaxation. February 27, in my ambulance I went with Rev. Father Pierre to make his annual visit to his most remote parishioners. The distance was great, the weather bad, and the roads very rough, and I returned March 1 thoroughly exhausted and worn out. This journey was not entirely one of relaxation. I desired to familiarize myself with the people and country I was then practically governing, and whose happiness and welfare often depended largely upon my action.

On the night of March 1, 1867, after I had in person attended tattoo roll call, and my entire command was asleep, I not having previously touched a single drop of liquor, after conversing for some time with Dr. Brayman, I asked him for a stimulant to enable me to sleep soundly and recuperate. He gave me some whisky, and I afterwards drank a great deal more. His quarters were next my own. Two hours after I had retired and was sleeping profoundly a fire broke out in his quarters. He thought it necessary to drag me out of my quarters, and thus I was made to appear in my night shirt, and did all I could under the circumstances. There were no ladies in the command, not a woman in camp. It was shown in evidence that I ought not to have been disturbed.

The next morning I placed Dr. Brayman in arrest. The fire had occurred in his quarters. Here he himself was the only witness. But I believed it to have been the result of his own carelessness, against which I and others had previously and repeatedly cautioned him. I soon afterwards released him from arrest.

Near my camp "over and under the hill" was a rude shanty inhabited by colored women of bad repute, relics of the Eightieth United States Colored Infantry. I had strictly, under penalty of severe punishment, forbidden the soldiers of my command to go there.

On the 8th of March, 1867, some of these women, stripped almost entirely naked, came running to my camp saying that some of my soldiers had destroyed or were destroying their shanty and were maltreating them. A guard was sent out to arrest the offenders, and Corporal Garland and Private Wright were arrested and brought before me. Both were drunk, violent, unruly, noisy, disrespectful, and insubordinate. Incensed beyond measure, I tore off the corporal's chevrons and reduced him to the ranks, and struck and knocked him down, and as they continued ungovernable I directed them to be bucked and gagged, and afterwards that water be thrown over them. Although I had often known such punishment inflicted in much less severe cases, this was the first and only time I had ever inflicted it in any command of mine.

It was proved on my trial that I immediately ordered the entire command to be paraded to witness the punishment of these men; that I appeared before the company and explained, and stated the gravity of their disgraceful offense, stating that it was the first and only time in my life when I had been sufficiently incensed to strike an enlisted man, and I hoped it would be the last.

This incident saved my command from after demoralization, insubordination, and disgrace. No officer or soldier of my command ever for a moment thought that I had inflicted cruel, unusual, or unnecessary punishment, or bore myself otherwise than became a brave, determined, and fearless officer. In striking the corporal I broke the metacarpal bone of the third finger of my right hand, which was immediately set by Dr. Brayman.

Dr. Brayman continued at the post and a member of my mess until nearly the end of the month, when he resigned. He preferred no charges against me while in the service, and never intimated such intention, and left the post on the most friendly terms, expressing to myself and to others the kindest regards and the highest respect for me, amounting to fulsome praise and admiration. He returned to Massachusetts and after a long interval of time wrote me for a certificate which would enable him to recover from the Government the value of a box of medical instruments, his own private property, lost in the fire of March 1.

I refused the certificate, still continuing of the belief that the fire had been the result of his own carelessness. This was the belief of the command. My knowledge of the man was such that I did not even reply to his letter requesting the certificate. With my belief I could not honorably have given it, and he knew it.

He thereafter took a long time to shape his ends and develop his malicious purposes, and on the 10th day of July, 1867, wrote from Brighton, Mass., a most infamous and abusive letter to the Hon. Charles Sumner, which on that day he duly swore to and executed in the form of an affidavit before a justice of the peace. This letter was received by Senator Sumner and referred by him to the War Department on or about July 15, 1867. The affidavit contained charges against me growing out of the fire of March 1, and my punishment of the enlisted men March 8, 1867. He in addition denounced my loyalty and called me "an unmitigated scoundrel."

Thus Dr. Brayman had allowed more than four full months to elapse before he carried his unfriendly purpose into effect and before he realized that his sense of duty required him to do so. The dates also suggest the certainty beyond mere probability that, hearing I was in arrest on other grounds and on Peterson's account, the courage of his convictions became strengthened, and he determined that his opportunity to do me evil had arrived.

I was tried on the charges thus originated, but it is morally and absolutely certain that had I granted the certificate in question, thus furnishing hush money, these charges would never have been preferred. No one who reads the certified copy of the record in that court-martial can arrive at any other conclusion.

For the findings and sentence of the court-martial on the Braman charges reference is made to General Order No. 26, Fifth Military district, New Orleans, La., May 3, 1868.

The limits of an argument before Congress will not permit me to enter into elaborate detailed discussion of the Peterson and Brayman charges, and my trial upon them. Both are matters of record and must speak for themselves, subject at all times to a proper and just review of both facts and law.

I must, however, be permitted to declare my firm belief that an analysis or even cursory reading of both sets of charges and specifications and findings, aided by the full records and the evidence, will show that while they had color of fact and of truth sufficient to enable any evil disposed or vicious man, guided by ill will or personal animosity, to make me the subject of a court-martial, they were much and grossly exaggerated under the influence of deliberate premeditated malice and bad blood. I go further and say that this was evidently the opinion uppermost and dominant in the minds and belief of the members of that court-martial, although, unhappily, I did not know this to be true at the time, and only knew it long years afterwards, when in May, 1890, I learned of the unanimous recommendation of the court in the Peterson case, and received very recently the statements of the surviving members of the court, which will soon be quoted in evidence. As a complete and conclusive demonstration of the truth of this contention, let us consider for a moment the first of the Peterson charges:

"Conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman."

To this charge there were eight specifications, all of them loaded down with venom of the most poisonous description. The court found me—

- Of the first specification: "Guilty, except the words without sufficient authority, unlawfully, and willfully."
- Of the second specification: "Not guilty."
- Of the third specification: "Guilty" with exception.
- Of the fourth specification: "Not guilty."
- Of the fifth specification: "Not guilty."
- Of the sixth specification: "Guilty, in part."
- Of the seventh specification: "Not guilty."
- Of the eighth specification: "Not guilty."

Thus, the court found that I did arrest Peterson with sufficient authority and lawfully. They could not possibly have attached any criminality to that act, but must, on the contrary, have sustained me.

The court absolutely acquitted me of all the averments of fact contained in five specifications and did not sustain a single one of the eight specifications entire and without any important exceptions, and, as a consequence, did not find me guilty of the charge, but guilty of a minor charge.

Was there no self-evident exaggeration and malice here? There can be but one possible answer.

Could the court have failed to believe that there was malice, exaggeration, and absolute unmitigated falsehood? The findings conclusively answer—they must have so believed, and could not by any possibility have believed otherwise. Above all, their unanimous recommendation, not for clemency or mitigation of their sentence, but its absolute and entire remission shows that in view of all the circumstances as shown in evidence they sustained my character and reputation as an officer and did not consider me a proper subject for punishment. Had I known this at the time, I would to-day have been a full colonel in the Army high up on the list or else long since on the retired list.

Mr. Chairman, as illustrative of the vast difference between Colonel Cutts and Dr. Brayman, which I trust has already been made sufficiently apparent, I here quote a letter of the Rev. Father Pierre, a pious, self-sacrificing Catholic priest, who afterwards died at his post of duty attending the sick in a yellow fever scourge. It was with him that I made the journey in February, 1867. This letter is quoted from the record of my trial.

SHREVEPORT, January 2, 1868.

MY DEAR COLONEL: In answer to your request to me to inform you what was my opinion as to the relations existing between Dr. Brayman and yourself, so far as my intercourse with both was concerned, it affords me great pleasure to be able to assure you that the forenamed gentleman spoke always of you in the highest possible terms, such as "I am proud of my colonel; he is a very clever man;" also, "I believe he is an honor to the United States Army," and the like.

This has been his uniform language to me previous to his leaving your post, and this a few days before his departure. Besides, as you well remember, I have been frequently at your quarters, where you also invited him and always showed him great kindness.

I conclude, my dear colonel, by wishing you a prompt return to Shreveport, where the community will welcome you warmly and affectionately, because by your uniform conduct whilst in our midst you have always conducted yourself as a gentleman and true soldier should.

Come back soon, therefore, to the many friends you leave behind, in the number of whom I hope you will permit me to subscribe myself affectionately and respectfully, yours,

I. PIERRE, P.

Mr. Chairman, as demonstrating wherein Colonel Cutts differed from Peterson, it may be said:

1. That the one was a distinguished officer who arrested the other for a contemplated and well-planned conspiracy and an attempt to defraud the Government of the United States, and had previously been engaged in the cotton frauds and spoliations.

2. That my subordinate officers, other civilian officers of the Government, and the people of that entire country approved the arrest; that the then United States district attorney at New Orleans and many distinguished lawyers not only justified the arrest but believed I would have culpably failed in my duty had I not made it.

3. That Gen. Lorenzo Thomas, the Adjutant-General of the Army, a soldier of three wars and of great experience, believed from inquiry made on the spot that I had acted wisely, and telegraphed to General Sheridan as follows:

SHREVEPORT, LA., August 8, 1867.

Maj. Gen. P. H. SHERIDAN,

Commanding Fifth Military District, New Orleans, La.:

Please relieve Colonel Cutts from arrest and reinstate him in his command. He is a capable and good officer who, if he is in error at all, has had in view only the best interests of the Government. Order him to New Orleans to communicate in person with you. You will be perfectly satisfied with his explanation.

L. THOMAS,
Adjutant-General United States Army.

4. Col. D. B. CULBERSON, a distinguished lawyer of Texas, now chairman of the Judiciary Committee, House of Representatives, testified as follows on the trial of Colonel Cutts:

Q. (By defense.) State to the court the reputation of one B. H. Peterson in that community (Jefferson, Tex.), and what your means of knowledge are.

A. His general character is bad. I do not know him personally, but I have personal knowledge of his operations and transactions in eastern Texas since the surrender of the Confederate army.

Q. (By defense.) Is your knowledge of his reputation derived from your knowledge of his transactions?

A. It is, mainly.

Q. (By defense.) What was the nature of the transactions you refer to?

A. The transactions I have referred to arose mainly from cotton operations in that country by which he had caused cotton to be seized as Government cotton on fabricated claims, and then in some instances he would have the cotton released on payment to him of a sum of money charged as fees. In other cases he would buy the cotton thus embarrassed at prices far below its value. He would frequently receive cotton for securing military orders for the seizure of cotton for certain parties claiming it for other parties.

Q. (By defense.) Have you any personal knowledge of cases where the proof was clear that he so operated?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have any professional connection as counsel in any way in matters connected with his arrest by Colonel Cutts in June, 1867?

A. I did after his arrest, but not before.

Q. (By defense.) Have you formed any opinion as to the legality or necessity of his arrest by Colonel Cutts? If so, state that opinion.

A. I think, under the circumstances, the arrest was necessary. I could not speak as to the legality, as opinions differ.

Q. (By defense.) Did the circumstances authorize an arrest to be held for further examination?

A. I think they did.

Q. (By defense.) Have you any knowledge that at the time of Peterson's arrest he was actually engaged in a fraud upon the revenue of the Government?

The witness declined to answer this question, as the information communicated to him came from clients.

The accused declined to press the question, as matter of courtesy, the witness having pleaded this privilege.

Mr. Chairman, for all of the above distinct and clear affirmations reference is made to the full court-martial record.

Mr. Chairman, the result of the Peterson charges was never made known to me, and I never had the slightest knowledge of the findings of the court until long afterward, as is hereinafter stated. Of course silence or nonpromulgation of the findings and sentence led me to infer that the sentence was dismissal, and that the record had gone to Washington for the final action of the President. In that event I did not dream, because of the action of the court in the Braman case, that they had made any recommendation.

I arrived at Baton Rouge worn out by a very long and protracted trial, preceded by a long suspension from command, all together inflicting upon me great distress and anxiety, which had lasted from July, 1867, to nearly the end of May, 1868, all of which was punishment a thousandfold too great for the unhappy and entirely accidental circumstances which had given Brayman and Peterson opportunities to have me court-martialed and to take cowardly advantage of me. In addition, I had passed through a season of overwork and of yellow fever at Shreveport, and my strength and health were greatly impaired.

Dr. Brayman had been reappointed, and, doubtless never expecting to meet me again, was at Baton Rouge on duty at the headquarters of my regiment. His presence almost maddened me. Sickness, excessive heat, great physical and mental prostration led me for one entire day of my life to drink to the greatest possible excess. I was also under the influence of large doses of quinine. I absolutely for one day lost and forgot myself—lost all self-control and was crazed beyond the control of others.

It was thus that on the 25th day of May, 1868, I became amenable to charges which were preferred against me on the following day by General Sykes. As soon as I was informed or was able to understand what had happened I made every possible apology for what had occurred in an hour and day of entire oblivion and frenzy. Except temporary frenzy or insanity, there was no defense. I resigned, and my resignation was accepted to date June 19, 1868.

Shortly after I resigned and after I had left the post the same Dr. Brayman, as if to indulge in some natural propensity, wrote a letter, which seemed to be his favorite method to accomplish the ruin of others, impugning the character for honesty of Second Lieut. William McGee, Twentieth Infantry, then serving at Baton Rouge. Lieutenant McGee was known as the "drummer boy of Chickamauga." He had been appointed as a protégé of Gen. George H. Thomas and Governor Marcus L. Ward, of New Jersey, and wore a medal of honor from the Congress for leading a charge while a drummer at the battle of Chickamauga. McGee went to Brayman's quarters much as I did, but with a far different result. He confronted him and upbraided him. Pistols were drawn, and Brayman was killed.

Of the dead I shall say no more.

Mr. Chairman, until April, 1890, when I had the opportunity to examine the War Department return, dated March 23, 1890, to the call for information in the matter of the bill for my retirement, I never knew what the findings of the court-martial in the Peterson charges were. The War Department return made no mention whatever of any recommendation by the court; a most essential and important omission.

It was not until Saturday, May 24, 1890, that having occasion to deliver in person a communication to the Secretary of State, being in the War Department building, I thought I would go and examine the full records of the New Orleans courts-martial. This I was not permitted to do, but I asked a few questions, to answer which the chief clerk of the acting Judge Advocate-General sent for the records themselves.

Moved by some instinct, which must have been a heavenly inspiration, not expecting an affirmative reply, because I had always thought that the sentence in the Brayman case was not justified, but was cruelly wrong, I said to him, "Please look at the end of the record in the Peterson case and see if there was any recommendation by the court." He did so, and said to me, "Yes; there is."

My surprise could not have been greater if a shell had exploded in the room. For the moment I was overcome.

I was then shown the recommendation. It reads as follows:

"The undersigned recommend the remission of the sentence.
"AMOS BECKWITH,
"Brevet Major-General, U. S. A.
"W. W. LOWE,
"Major, Sixth Cavalry, Brevet Brigadier-General.
"W. M. GRAHAM,
"Captain, First Artillery, Brevet Brigadier-General.
"A. D. NELSON,
"Major, First Infantry, Brevet Colonel.
"W. T. GENTRY,
"Captain, Seventeenth Infantry, Brevet Colonel, U. S. A.
"A. E. HOOKER,
"Captain, Ninth United States Cavalry."

This recommendation was subsequently certified by the Secretary of War to the House committee, and was unanimous.

Thus, after twenty-two long years of some fortitude and honorable efforts in civil life, I for the first time and only by accident learned that my brother officers, gallant and distinguished soldiers, representing all arms of the service, had nobly stood by my side, while I, in sorrow and bitterness, had supposed that they had abandoned me, they, on the contrary, deciding that while they gave a technical or pro-forma verdict, the meaning of which is perfectly well understood throughout the entire Army and Navy of the United States, they were of opinion that I was not a fit or deserving subject for punishment, and had recommended not the merciful and lenient mitigation but the absolute and unqualified remission of their entire sentence.

Had I possessed the slightest intimation of this action of the court, what occurred May 25, 1868, would not have happened, and most clearly I would not have resigned. It certainly was a very great calamity and a great pity that I had not the slightest intimation from any source of this action of the court. My resignation was tendered under an entire misapprehension and under circumstances of the greatest possible distress. Is there, gentlemen of the committee, anything in my entire record which any patriotic, noble-minded, or gallant citizen or soldier or which my entire and now happily reunited country needs to remember against me? On which stands the balance in a just, honorable, and equitable account?

I have submitted my entire case with full detail, as embraced in this entire argument, to my former regimental commander, who was General Wool's assistant adjutant-general in Mexico, captain of artillery, adjutant-general under Governor Seymour of the State of New York, then lieutenant-colonel of my regiment, and later General McDowell's chief of staff and Inspector-General of the Army, and received from him the following reply:

WASHINGTON, September 12, 1891.

DEAR COLONEL CUTTS: I lose no time in acknowledging receipt of your polite letter with inclosed report in your case of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives.

I need not assure you that the contents of both are very gratifying to me as the testimonials of distinguished brother officers named in the report, deserved as they are, must be to you.

I think you are justly entitled to a brevet for your eminent services in the Maryland and Virginia campaigns in 1862, and trust that the authorities, even at this late day, may recognize your right thereto.

Not doubting that the bill passed by the House of Representatives for your restoration will be favorably acted on by the Senate, and thus restore to you a commission relinquished long since through a misapprehension, I remain, with best wishes for your success,

Most truly, your friend,

ED. SCHRIVER,

I have made the same submission of all the questions involved in my case to General Rosecrans, reading to him nearly the whole of my argument and large portions of the court-martial records, and the following is his reply:

WASHINGTON, D. C., November 3, 1891.

MY DEAR COLONEL: You very kindly handed me a copy of the report in your case (H. R. Report No. 3343, Fifty-first Congress, second session, accompanying H. R. 7490) made by the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives, requesting that having exercised high command I would give the impression made by the recital of facts therein set forth concerning your behavior and services in the late war.

I have carefully read the report. I concur in the conclusion therein reached.

Your record of meritorious, gallant, and brilliant services on staff, in line, and on numerous battlefields, attested by wounds sustained, by medals received, and by a cloud of gallant Union generals, living and dead, would outweigh numerous mistakes, any one of them greater than those embodied in the allegations before the Burnside or the New Orleans courts-martial.

President Lincoln's action on the Burnside court-martial sentence, restoring you to duty, showed that, in his judgment, at most you had done nothing to stain a soldier's honor.

The unanimous recommendation of the New Orleans court-martial amply testifies to its judgment that the combined circumstances called for an absolute remission of the entire sentence.

Trusting that Congress may do you justice, I remain,

Your friend,

W. S. ROSECRANS.

Mr. Chairman, the delay in the final passage of a bill for my relief has given me an opportunity to demonstrate conclusively that in this argument I have done no violence to the actual disposition and intentions of the New Orleans courts-martial.

I communicated with the president of the court-martial asking him to give me any information in his power. In reply, he chose to take official action and inclosed me the following paper, which embraces the testimony of all the members of that court-martial who are now living:

HEADQUARTERS FIFTH UNITED STATES ARTILLERY,
Presidio of San Francisco, Cal., August 6, 1891.

To whom it may concern:

I take pleasure in commending the petition of Col. Madison Cutts to the favorable consideration of the proper authorities.

I was a member of the court-martial which tried Colonel Cutts some twenty-three years since, and my recollection of the case is that while the court felt that an example was necessary in the proper performance of their duties, yet they were also sufficiently impressed with the conviction that there existed extenuating circumstances in the case to prompt the members to a unanimous recommendation to clemency.

I, for one, should be glad to learn that Colonel Cutts is to derive some benefit from that recommendation, even though it be at this late day.

Respectfully submitted,

WM. M. GRAHAM,
Colonel Fifth Artillery, Brevet Brigadier General, U. S. A., Commanding Regiment.

[Indorsement.]

I was president of the court-martial within referred to before which Colonel Cutts was tried. In passing the sentence upon this officer, it certainly was not the intention of the court to throw him out of the service, and hence the unanimous recommendation of the court that the sentence imposed be remitted. If Colonel Cutts had not sent in his resignation, he would now be in the service, and I sincerely hope that such action may be taken as will restore this most valuable officer of the service where he rightly belongs.

A. BECKWITH,
Colonel and Brevet Major-General, United States Army, Retired.

Mr. Chairman, I have also submitted my entire case to the General Commanding the Army, who was Secretary of War at the date of my resignation, and had full and perfect knowledge, officially, of all the facts. He has with great cordiality authorized me to quote the following letters, which explain themselves, addressed to me during the pendency of this bill, and he has further authorized and almost directed me to say to the committee from him, that in awarding me the medal of honor he himself first made a personal and thorough examination of my entire record as a soldier.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 17, 1890.

MY DEAR COLONEL: I have read the record of your military services and the recommendations of the many distinguished officers under whom you served, and I sincerely hope Congress will give you the place on the retired list which you have so well merited. Your honest struggle to support yourself and your family in civil life increases your title to this consideration.

Very truly, yours,

J. M. SCHOFIELD.

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
Washington, April 29, 1891.

MY DEAR COLONEL: In reply to your letter of yesterday I take pleasure in informing you that the medal of honor was awarded you very promptly after the receipt of your last communication on the subject, and the medal is now in the hands of the engraver, and will be sent to you as soon as the suitable engraving is placed upon it.

Doubtless you ought to have been informed of the action of the War Department when it was taken, but I suppose, to save clerical labor, the habit is to send the medal with the information that it has been granted.

Regretting that you have been kept in any suspense in this regard, and hoping that the medal when it comes will serve all the desires of your heart in that respect,

I am, sincerely, your friend,

J. M. SCHOFIELD.

Col. J. MADISON CUTTS.

Mr. Chairman, the Congress of the United States, by an act approved July 12, 1862, authorized the President of the United States to cause "medals of honor" to be prepared with suitable emblematic devices, and to direct that the same be presented in the name of Congress to such noncommissioned officers and privates as "shall most distinguish themselves by their gallantry in action, and other soldierlike qualities, during the present insurrection."

By an act approved March 3, 1863, this law was extended so as to include commissioned officers.

The Confederate States passed a similar law October 13, 1862, and a General Order No. 131, adjutant and inspector general's office, Richmond, Va., dated October 3, 1863, directed:

(1) That the names of all those who have been or may hereafter be reported as worthy of this distinction be inscribed in a roll of honor to be preserved in the adjutant and inspector general's office, for reference in all future time for those who have deserved well of their country as having best displayed their courage and devotion on the field of battle.

(2) That the roll of honor, so far as now made up, be appended to this order and read at the head of every regiment in the service of the Confederate States, at the first dress parade after its receipt, and be published in at least one newspaper in each State.

Gentlemen of the committee: The medal awarded me was not for a single occasion; it is a triple medal of honor, and is inscribed as follows:

"The Congress to Capt. James M. Cutts, Eleventh Infantry, for gallantry at Wilderness, Spottsylvania, and Petersburg, 1864."

I had previously during the war received the brevet of major and lieutenant-colonel for gallant and distinguished services. The medal of honor adds far more than a third brevet, and is regarded among all soldiers as outranking any brevet or any number of brevets. Need I say that highly as I value it I shall even more dearly prize it if by your unanimous action on the bill before you you confirm my title to the thanks and gratitude of my country.

Mr. Chairman, the committee of the last House found that I fell June 18, 1864, in front of Petersburg, supposed to be mortally wounded, while advancing in front of my regiment in the line of battle which I had reformed, and they added:

"He then incurred a disability, in the performance of a specific act of great gallantry, sufficient to have entitled him to be at once retired as captain. A little more than two years afterwards he could have been retired under the act of Congress of July 20, 1860, with the rank of his command when wounded, that of a field officer."

"Although often urged and advised to avail himself of the provisions of that act, he had no desire to become a charge upon the country he had helped to save, and remained in the service, although seriously disabled, hoping still to be of service to his country."

I am now drawing a pension for total disability, which in the case of a captain is $20 per month. I here quote the evidence of that most distinguished and skillful surgeon, Dr. Basil Norris, United States Army, who attended me while wounded, and to whose constant care and attention at my home in Washington, after my wounds had been pronounced by surgeons in the field fatal, I owe my recovery. He conclusively establishes the fact that I had the legal right to be retired long before the date of the New Orleans courts-martial—while in the service and long before I resigned.

He testifies as follows:

"Capt. J. M. Cutts, Eleventh United States Infantry, was wounded on the 18th of June, 1864, in front of Petersburg, Va., while acting as field officer, and, as I have been informed, advancing in line of battle in front of his regiment."

"He was conveyed to Washington, where he arrived June 20, 1864, and placed under my treatment, and continued under my care until September following. His wound was a gunshot wound (rifle ball) of left side. The ball entered between the eighth and ninth ribs on a line below the axilla, fractured the ninth rib, penetrated the lung, and made its exit between the ninth and tenth ribs at a point about 1 inch from the spinal column."

"Captain Cutts was brevetted lieutenant-colonel for gallant and distinguished services in that campaign of the Army of the Potomac, having previously rendered conspicuous services in the preceding campaigns of the same army."

"His wound created a permanent disability, which then, and ever since, would have entitled him, had he requested while in the service, to be placed on the retired list."

"He never made such application, but before his wounds were entirely healed rejoined his regiment and sought opportunities for further service and distinction."

"He resigned in 1868, and now, with a large family, after a long interval of honorable exertion, he finds himself no longer able to contend against his increasing disabilities incurred in the line of duty and in battle."

"Informed, as I am, that Colonel Cutts will apply to Congress to be placed on the retired list of the Army, I would respectfully say that such recognition of his services and sufferings would only be in accordance with the custom of service in the Regular Army in like cases, and that I believe he abundantly merits such consideration."

The committee say of me in their report:

"His career since his resignation has been one of long-continued, useful, and honorable effort in civil and professional life. The committee believe it highly to his honor that after marrying and having eleven children, seven of whom are now living, he has foreborne to press his claim and appeal for relief, until no longer able by reason of disability, the result of his wounds and exposures in the service, to bear the cares, anxieties, and wants of his large family."

"In view of his long-continued and distinguished services, entitling him in a marked degree to the gratitude of his country, the committee recommend that he be honorably restored to the status he held when wounded, and accordingly report favorably the bill for his retirement in the Army, with the rank of captain."

The number of my children, by the birth of a son March 5, 1892, is now eight.

Mr. Chairman, the retirement of an officer of the Regular Army for wounds, disabilities, or length of service is simply a form of pension which is one of the legal conditions or elements of his service in the Army, and Congress, if it deems me worthy of retirement, can hardly decide to restore me to the status I held when I resigned without duly considering the arrears, if any such can properly be granted to me. The bill is subject to amendment in this or any other particular. Strongly opposed, as I have always been until necessity came upon me, to any thought of asking of my country pecuniary compensation for disabilities contracted in its service, I do so now only because my dearest friends have insisted that in the interest of my wife and very large number of children it is my duty to present the question for your consideration.

Mr. Chairman, I have strictly endeavored to confine myself in my argument to the recital of facts, which I have endeavored to accompany with proper and, as I trust and believe, unimpeachable, unanswerable, and conclusive evidence.

In passing upon the bill before you it is within your power to decide that the general tenor of my existence, both in the Army and in civil life, shall be weighed and considered, and thus weighed is found to be patriotic, self-sacrificing, and full of honorable efforts. You can decide without doing violence to truth and justice, and on the weight of overwhelming evidence, that my services to my country were conspicuous, long-continued, and distinguished, rising fully to the dignity and very high honor of entitling me to the gratitude of the nation.

It will not strain your authority to decide that a debt of national gratitude is not obliterated or forgotten because the benefactor meets with disaster or misfortune, with sickness and sorrow, still less when he falls a victim and a sacrifice to malice.

You can forever silence the tongue of slander, confuse and confound assassins of character, while, in great degree, near the close of his life, restoring to a soldier his peace of mind and happiness, giving back to him his sword and his commission, surrendered only under circumstances of great distress and under an entire and most cruel misapprehension, and enabling him, by granting the relief he asks, to respond to the cares and still remaining duties of life, which now, by reason of honorable wounds received in battle, creating a total disability, overtax his strength and powers of endurance.

Measuring sedately every word I say, I deliberately declare that if after my death any surviving friend, taking note of my departure, shall wish to be my eulogist, let him not say only that I earned the gratitude of my country on many battlefields, but let him examine the full official records of my New Orleans courts-martial and find, as he inevitably must, that in the stormy, exciting, and perilous days of reconstruction I was a conscientious soldier, devoted to the fullest and most faithful performance of every duty, and that I consulted fearlessly and with singleness of aim the honor, welfare, and best interests of my entire country; and let him add that I was not a professional but a citizen soldier, who, on more than one important occasion, brought to the service of his country the learning and attainments of a lawyer who always sought to be a wise counselor and an earnest advocate.

Gentlemen of the committee, take the case and upon full consideration, make such a decision as your consciences shall approve and dictate. Pass the bill entire as it has been introduced, or amend it as your sense of honor and justice shall dictate, but halt nor hesitate short of full justice, and do not deny to me an honorable measure of fame resting on its only true and enduring foundations thereof—conscientious adherence at all times and in all places to what I believed to be right and self-sacrificing devotion to the best interests of my country, so far as God gave me the power to judge correctly, and a patriotic love of my entire country.

Respectfully submitted.

J. MADISON CUTTS.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 23d instant approved and signed the act (S. 2783) to postpone the enforcement of the act of August 19, 1890, entitled "An act to adopt regulations for preventing collisions at sea."

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill. I desire to state that we have now on the Calendar—

Mr. HOAR. Let the assent be first obtained.

Mr. COCKRELL. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair was about submitting to the Senate the request. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8518) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations may be considered and acted upon as they are reached in the reading of the bill, and that after the reading is concluded other amendments may be considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish to state to the Senate that we have upon the Calendar the sundry civil appropriation bill and the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. The naval appropriation bill will be reported to-morrow or next day. The general deficiency appropriation bill has not yet passed the other House, but it will probably be here to-day. We shall have all these bills before the Senate for disposition just as rapidly as the Senate can dispose of them. Now, this is a long bill, with a good many amendments and other provisions that will be debated, and I hope it will be the pleasure of the Senate at about 6 o'clock this evening to take a recess until 8 o'clock, and then meet and continue in session until 10 or 11 o'clock.

Mr. HALE. Can not the Senator get an agreement now that that shall be done?

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask unanimous consent, then, that at 6 o'clock this evening we shall take a recess until 8 o'clock, and then that we continue in session until 10 or 11 o'clock.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not object, but I give notice that this evening I shall object to the consideration of anything except the appropriation bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. That will be the specific measure to be considered, as a matter of course. I shall not give way to anything else.

Mr. CHANDLER. With that understanding, I make no objection.

Mr. MANDERSON. I think the request ought to be delayed until there is a full attendance of the Senate. We have a very slim number here.

Mr. HALE. But they ought to be here.

Mr. MANDERSON. We have consented to take up the appropriation bill, ignoring morning business, and this is a bill so important that it ought not to be disposed of—

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator will not object.

Mr. MANDERSON. Let the request be made later in the day, when more Senators are here. I do not think it is exactly fair to what is practically a majority of the Senate that a consent agreement should be now made. There may be others who will desire to interpose an objection or to make a compromise. Let the request be delayed until later.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask that the sundry civil appropriation bill be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate take up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 8388) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The conference report will be read.

Mr. GORMAN. The conference report has been read, or at least printed in the RECORD. I suggest that it is not necessary to read it. I will explain what it contains.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have an explanation made by the Senator from Maryland, so that we may understand what the report contains.

Mr. GORMAN. I will make an explanation of the report.

The conferees have agreed on all the items of the bill in disagreement between the two Houses except four amendments of the Senate, to which I shall presently call attention. The principal amendments receded from by the Senate conferees are the following:

Extension of highways.....	$12,500.00
Work on streets as per schedule.....	18,000.00
Assessment and permit work.....	25,000.00
Sewers.....	78,118.00
County roads.....	30,000.00
Sweeping streets.....	4,000.00
Parking commission.....	4,000.00
Harbor boat.....	25,000.00
School buildings.....	127,500.00
Telegraph and telephone service.....	7,380.00
Emergency fund.....	7,000.00
Support of convicts.....	5,000.00
Charities.....	8,000.00
Miscellaneous amounts.....	14,330.00

Total receded from by Senate conferees..... 365,808.00

Amount appropriated by the bill as it passed the House of Representatives..... 5,262,107.25

Increase by Senate, net..... 741,144.00

Amount as passed by the Senate..... 6,133,251.25

The House conferees agree to Senate increases to the amount of..... 539,536.00

Total of bill as agreed to..... 5,730,643.25

Senate conferees recede from..... 265,808.00

Amounts disagreed to and still open..... 46,000.00

Amount of estimates for 1896..... 7,217,934.25

Amount of law for 1895..... 5,545,678.57

Mr. SHERMAN. What I want to know is what has been done with the smallpox-hospital provision.

Mr. GORMAN. I will come to that in a moment. That is one of the items that is disagreed to. The first of the four disagreements on which the conferees have been unable to agree is the amendment providing $8,500 for the police and firemen's relief fund. This is objected to by the conferees on the part of the House as being an innovation, notwithstanding the fact that since 1861 this relief fund has been granted by act of Congress and provision made for its payment, fixing the amount which shall be given to each of the disabled firemen and their wives and minor children in the case of death. It is an appropriation that has been constantly made, or a fund that has been created.

It has been depleted only because of the immense increase in the number of policemen and firemen in the District. It is a provision such as is made in every city of 100,000 inhabitants in the United States. The amount here provided is much smaller than in cities of 100,000, and is nearly one-half less than in Baltimore, Philadelphia, and other great cities that compare with Washington. Yet it is objected to on the other side upon the mistaken idea that it is a civil pension fund, when there is absolutely nothing in the idea.

I do not want to detain the Senate, but I could give a list of all the cities that pay such a fund. The practice is universal, and the amendment ought to be adhered to. It is a matter that does not affect the Treasury of the United States a penny. The fund, as we inserted the provision in the bill, comes from the fines imposed in the police court, collected from the vicious, and the bad, and the unfortunate, if you please, and not a dollar of it comes out of the Treasury. As Congress, in legislating upon this matter, is practically the common council of the city, the Senate conferees can not understand how there can be an objection from any quarter when the authorities of the District have all agreed to it, so far as we know, and are very anxious to have it sustained.

In the matter of the enforcement of the scarlet-fever act and the purchase of antitoxine an amendment was inserted in the Senate, which was discussed here very thoroughly, making provision for some place where the clothing could be fumigated and provided for without destroying the effects of the poor people who happen to have one of these contagious diseases. As I stated to the Senate before, this city is absolutely without facilities for that purpose. The authorities were compelled, during the terrible scourge that swept over this city, instead of destroying the infected clothing, etc., to take it to the steam heating establishments that are used for cleaning carpets and practically confiscate a room, hoping to relieve it afterwards by some process, and yet run the danger of having the disease spread all over the city. Yet the other House refuses to make the moderate appropriation of $6,000 for such a place and for machinery for that purpose.

Connected with this was the provision for antitoxine, a matter that has been discussed in the Senate. Its use has become general, and it is now recognized as a specific against many contagious diseases, some carrying it so far as to make it a specific even against smallpox itself as being better than vaccination. Yet while the whole amount is to come out of the revenues of the District, and not a dollar out of the Treasury, that amendment is objected to; and with it a provision which the Senate inserted prohibiting any hospital for infectious diseases within 800 feet of other property or other houses. The House conferees object to that also.

Mr. HARRIS. What is the amount of the appropriation for antitoxine?

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the Senator whether the 300-foot provision has been retained?

Mr. GORMAN. No; that is all in the amendment that is left pending. It has not been retained. It is objected to by the House conferees. It is one and the same amendment, and is still open for further conference. The Senate conferees insisted upon retaining it in the bill. In answer to the Senator from Tennessee I will state that $20,000 is the amount.

Another provision in disagreement is the appropriation for a smallpox hospital. Congress required the District Commissioners to locate and fix a hospital for smallpox patients. We have a shed which is a disgrace to humanity down here on the east of the jail on a lot of 50 or 60 acres, out of the way of everybody. There it is now, with the jail and the workhouse on one end of the lot.

By the amendment adopted in the Senate we appropriated $25,000 to erect a sufficient hospital there with four wards, and on the plans and estimate of Dr. Billings, who is an authority upon this subject, and also upon the estimate of the very intelligent young gentleman who is now the health officer of the District and has gone into the matter very thoroughly. We considered it absolutely necessary in every respect that a building should be erected. Men of prominence in the last six months have been confined in that building, which was not fit to be inhabited by anybody, particularly when suffering with such a disease, with no facilities to keep the patients, some of whom escaped and spread the disease elsewhere. Yet it is said that we shall not have a place here to confine smallpox patients, but that they had better be put out in tents; that they had better be sent across into Virginia or Maryland.

The Senate conferees have told the conferees on the other side that under no circumstances would we recede from either of these amendments without a vote of this body, and I trust the Senate will be as unanimous now as it was two weeks ago in insisting upon that provision. If the Treasury of the United States is in such a condition that we can not make the paltry appropriation of $40,000 or $50,000 in a case of this sort, while it would be unjust to the District of Columbia, I have no doubt it would agree that every dollar of the amount should come from the District treasury, although that burden ought not to be imposed upon it. The Senate conferees would not recede without a direct vote of the Senate and fail to have provision made in the cases I have named.

These are the principal items in the bill which are not agreed to. The Senator from Tennessee, I think, asked me a day or two since, when the bill was up, as to the construction of the waterworks, which is an important matter. The Senate conferees have agreed to make the appropriation as provided for in the bill as it came from the House for the immediate construction of the dam at the Great Falls, raising it 1 or 2 feet, the work to be done under the officer in charge of the waterworks, with General Casey assigned as consulting engineer. The reason for that was explained to the Senate. Both General Casey and Colonel Elliot, who are familiar with this matter, will retire within a short time.

General Casey is more familiar with it probably than any other man who lives to-day. His experience has been from the day of General Meigs down to the present, and we have associated him as the consulting engineer. To get the water from the reservoirs in Georgetown, to ascertain whether the tunnel can not be used, and whether the reservoir at the Soldiers' Home can be used with the dam in its present condition, we have made provision for a thorough inspection by these officers, Colonel Casey being the consulting engineer, and they are to report to Congress, together with a report as to what, if anything, is necessary to strengthen the conduit from the Great Falls to Georgetown. They are to report to Congress whether, in their opinion, the tunnel from Georgetown over to the Soldiers' Home can be utilized, and what is the most feasible and the best way to bring an additional supply of water into the city.

Mr. HARRIS. The provision does not, then, provide for the adoption of mains or other methods of conducting the water to the reservoir at the Soldiers' Home?

Mr. GORMAN. It requires them, in the event they find the tunnel can not be utilized within a reasonable cost, to report how many mains, if any, are required, and what character of mains; but they are only to report to Congress.

Mr. HARRIS. I will state the object of my inquiry. I think we ought to utilize that reservoir and conduct the water there by some method. If the tunnel can not be used some other method, it seems to me, is absolutely necessary to reach that point.

Mr. GORMAN. We think this provision is ample, and will give Congress all the facts to act upon at the next session.

There is one other matter to which I desire to call the attention of the Senate. It is the public schools in the District of Columbia. The conferees have stricken out $127,500 of the amount appropriated by the Senate. One hundred thousand dollars of that amount is the business high school. The other reductions, amounting to only $27,500, are in the appropriations for the common schools, but the provisions have been so adjusted as to provide for every school building that the Senate voted for, reducing the cost in three or four cases, and leaving out only the appropriation for the repair of the Wallach School building east of the Capitol. As the bill stands, agreed to by the conference, appropriations are made for every primary school the Senate voted for, leaving out the business high school.

I trust that the report may be adopted, and that the Senate will further insist upon the amendments disagreed to by the House conferees.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I do not intend to oppose the motion of the Senator from Maryland, but I wish to express a strong conviction I have, which I have been forming now for ten or twelve years after a close and careful watch, I may say, of the course of appropriations for the District of Columbia.

I think it is abnormal and indefensible to refer the appropriations for the District of Columbia to the Committee on Appropriations of this body, not that I have any complaint to make of the members of that committee, because they are among the ablest members of this body, and endeavor to do their duty according to the lights they have, as well as they can, but it is ridiculous to suppose that the Committee on Appropriations, charged with all the expenses of a Government like ours, $400,000,000 a year, can be considered as the best committee to act upon the affairs of the District of Columbia. We have a committee on the District of Columbia composed of able and experienced Senators, many of them especially interested in the District of Columbia, living near by, as the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON] and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON], and the Senators most interested in the affairs of the District being on that committee.

These appropriations ought to be passed upon by the committee that is in touch with the people, whom the people could approach. Many leading citizens of Washington who know that I feel a deep interest in the growth and progress of this city, have often spoken to me about this matter. Their communication is entirely with the Committee on the District of Columbia; they are familiar with the members of that committee; they go to that committee freely and make their complaints, either of want of appropriations, neglect to care for their interests, or on any other matter connected with the District of Columbia.

I hope that at the next session of Congress, without any division whatever, without any contest, the appropriation bill for the District of Columbia will be referred to that committee. I wish to say, with no disparagement to the honorable Senator from Maryland or the members of the Committee on Appropriations, that they have enough to do, and more than enough to do, without being burdened with a purely local matter, which affects the interests of the people in this District, who are in constant communication with the Committee on the District of Columbia, and have no opportunity practically to approach the Committee on Appropriations except at a time when that committee is necessarily crowded with much more important bills than the bill making appropriations for the District of Columbia. Compared with the great appropriation bills that are provided for by the Committee on Appropriations, the appropriations for the District of Columbia are less than 1 per cent of the amount, and yet the people of this District are deeply interested in those appropriations. Suppose that a legislature not at all connected with the subject should undertake to prescribe how much money should be expended at the State capital for a road or a highway or anything else.

It is impossible for the Committee on Appropriations to give the attention in detail that is required for such a bill. I trust that at the next session of Congress, without any disparagement at all to the Committee on Appropriations, the District of Columbia appropriation bill will be referred to the District Committee, so that the people of the District can go to those they are accustomed to deal with and talk to and confer with them about the affairs of the District of Columbia.

I have been a close watcher, an interested watcher, I may say, in the course of the appropriations for this District. I do think that it would be an act of wisdom on the part of the Committee on Appropriations to say that they are not possessed of the local information to deal with this bill, and that it should properly be referred to the committee that is especially charged with the very subjects-matter embraced in the bill.

This is all I wish to say. I do not care to interfere with the recommendation of our conferees. I could not understand all the details given by the Senator from Maryland, but it was because the Senate was a little noisy. However, I am perfectly willing to take their recommendations in regard to what should be done with this bill. I should like to know from the Senator, however, distinctly, whether it is proposed to locate any of the hospitals up near Seventh street on the road north. What provision is made on that subject?

Mr. GORMAN. The District Commissioners, by authority of law, as the Senator understands, purchased a lot to erect a hospital for contagious diseases north of the Capitol, near Seventh street.

Mr. SHERMAN. Do they propose to erect a hospital there for such diseases?

Mr. GORMAN. That unquestionably was the intention of the Commissioners. The Senate put in a provision making an appropriation for a hospital for smallpox down near the jail, east of the Capitol, and also inserted a provision requiring that no hospital for other contagious diseases should be within 300 feet of any other house. That whole matter is still in conference. We could not come to an agreement with the House conferees.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will express the hope that the Senator from Maryland and our other conferees will refuse definitely to locate any kind of a hospital that would injuriously affect the Garfield Hospital, or affect the immediate neighborhood where the hospital is proposed to be located. I believe it was a hasty, ill-considered, almost covert movement to buy a lot in a particular place there, knowing that all the people living in that region are very much opposed to it. Many of them have come to me about it. I trust that that will be remedied. If such a building is necessary, let it be located in some part of the city that is not so rapidly growing. The great body of the population of Washington is now extending north, occupying in part the very region that has been selected. The great population of the city will necessarily extend northward, and not so much eastward or southward. The whole tendency is toward the northwest, and therefore no hospital that would prevent the growth of that portion of the city ought to be allowed in that region.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I listened with great interest to the statement made by the distinguished Senator from Maryland regarding the differences between the two Houses on certain very important matters embraced in the District of Columbia appropriation bill. I rise simply for the purpose of saying that I trust the Senate will unanimously stand by their committee in a demand, so far as a demand can be made, to have these items remain in the bill.

For one I am very strongly in favor of the so-called pension fund for the police department. I shall not stop to argue it. I believe that it is but just, right, and proper, and that it would be a very great hardship to these men, whose lives are exposed every hour of every day, to have the beneficent provision that they have heretofore enjoyed taken from them.

Mr. President, regarding these hospitals, I have been interested in and sometimes disgusted with the discussions which have taken place in Congress concerning the location of a hospital for the treatment of epidemic diseases. First, we had a controversy here over the bill establishing a hospital for the treatment of epidemic diseases, and then immediately the contest as regarded its location commenced all over the District. The people in one section and the people in another section were unwilling that the hospital should be located anywhere near property that they own. I have listened to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] this morning, who told us that the hospital ought not to be located in a certain portion of the city. It reminds me, Mr. President, of Artemus Ward. He was willing that the boil should be on the other fellow. [Laughter.] He did not want it on himself. So, in reference to this matter the inhabitants of one section of the District are very willing that this hospital shall be located in some other section, and the inhabitants of that section want it located somewhere else.

I trust that the provision in the bill for this hospital will be retained, and that a hospital may be located in some place without any particular reference to the preferences or advantages which may accrue to any individual citizen of the District.

In my opinion, having some knowledge on this matter, it is absurd to say that such a hospital should be 400 feet on all sides from any private property. It would take several acres of land to surround that building. I have not made the calculation, but I venture to say that I am correct when I say that several acres of land will be required for the building if there is an open space of 400 feet on each of its four sides.

I hope the Senate conferees will insist on keeping the provision in the bill for a smallpox hospital. It is a shame and a disgrace, Mr. President, to this great city that we have not to-day a proper place where smallpox patients can be treated. I know of no other city in the American Union—I doubt if there is another city in the civilized world—of the wealth, culture, and population of the city of Washington, which has not better facilities for the treatment of smallpox patients than we have in the capital city of this great nation.

As to the matter of antitoxine, I made some good-natured observations concerning it when the matter was up the other day. I have my own opinions about it. They are purely speculative, and I did not insist they were well founded; but as a medical man I ventured to suggest some doubts as to the efficacy of this mode of treatment of diphtheria. Since that time I have been discussed somewhat in the medical journals and in the great newspapers of the country, and I have received a large number of letters from physicians and others concerning the matter. There is an honest difference of opinion on this subject; medical journals are divided in opinion; the newspapers are divided; the physicians are divided; and the people are divided. The newspapers, however, did me a great injustice when they telegraphed all over this country that I opposed that appropriation. I did nothing of the kind. I said I would vote for it and I did vote for it. There is a very small part of the appropriation to be used for the propagation of antitoxine, and, as the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] has well said, that appropriation contemplates the establishment of a disinfecting plant, and it contemplates other things which relate to the health of the citizens of the District of Columbia.

I trust our conferees will do all they can to keep that provision in the bill and to keep every provision in the bill which relates to the welfare, the health, and the protection of the lives of the men, women, and children in the District of Columbia. I hope there will be a unanimous vote by the Senate, and that our conferees will not yield those points unless they are absolutely compelled to do so.

Mr. PEPPER. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Maryland to amendments numbered 85, 87, and 89. I ask the Senator and the Senate to except from this report those three proposed amendments. I shall occupy the time very briefly in regard to those amendments.

In the Senate, after a very laborious effort, we succeeded in having the wages of the van drivers and ambulance drivers in the District of Columbia increased to at least the fair living wages of $600 a year. That is lower than any other city in the country pays for similar work, so far as I have been able to ascertain. I had a list of such wages paid in a large number of cities, but I have it not here now. Attention was called to it during our discussion in the Senate. The conference committee have agreed to reduce $600 a year to $480 in each of those separate amendments. I ask, without saying a word further, that when the Senate comes to vote upon it these three amendments may be excepted when we request a conference, and that they be restored, if possible.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, from the standpoint of chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, in which position I have given somewhat careful attention to District affairs, I desire so say that the managers of the conference on the part of the Senate upon this bill have been extremely liberal in the concessions which they have made to the other branch of Congress. They have been somewhat more liberal than my sense of duty would have permitted me to have been if I had been upon that conference.

In respect to the open questions—and I shall not go into details with regard to them—I do not see how it is possible for the managers of the conference on the part of the Senate to make concessions in respect to any one of the points that are still in controversy between the two Houses, and I hope the Senate will, by unanimous vote, further insist upon those amendments, and I hope that the managers of the conference on the part of the Senate will carry out the will of the Senate so expressed.

I shall not consume further time.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, the committee of conference on the part of the Senate in dealing with the District appropriation bill may have been, as the Senator from Tennessee states, more liberal in their concessions made to the House conferees than they ought to have been, but no one knows better than the Senator from Tennessee that in dealing with items in an appropriation bill it is necessary to make concessions, and to make such concessions as will secure in the end the passage of the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator will allow me, it is due to myself to say that I in no sense intended to censure the committee. For the very reasons which the Senator states, I know we have to give and take. I did not intend any uncharitable or unkind criticisms, but I did intend to emphasize an honest opinion which I entertain.

Mr. ALLISON. I know that the Senate Committee on Appropriations made considerable additions to this bill as it came to us from the other House, making them in the belief that the expenditures proposed by us were necessary expenditures in this District.

I would say to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], who has taken this occasion to impliedly censure the Committee on Appropriations for its want of knowledge and for its want of consideration of these bills, that I think, so far as the Committee on Appropriations is concerned, it has given in the past, and especially has it given to this bill, the utmost possible care as to the items in the bill for the protection of the District and commensurate with the growth of the District.

We must bear in mind here that one-half of the amount to be expended under all these appropriations is taken from the Treasury of the United States, and that it is a matter of interest, not locally alone, but of interest to all the people of the United States, that all these appropriations should be considered in the light of the fact that we pay one-half of the expenditures of the District. I have not criticized, and I do not now criticize, that adjustment. It is an adjustment which has prevailed for a great many years; and while I perhaps will admit that the Committee on Appropriations, in dealing with these bills, does not deal with them in a local sense, it does not deal with them according to the wishes of this individual or that individual who may have property in this District to be benefited by special local improvements.

We deal with those questions in a larger and better sense, for the protection not only of those who have special property here, but we deal with them in the sense of promoting the interests of the people who dwell in this District by and large, whether they own property or do not own property. So, while I may agree with the Senator when we come to again consider the question of who shall have charge of these appropriations, I shall not intrude upon the pressing hours now before us, in view of the closing days of the session, to discuss the question of the competency or incompetency of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to ask the Senator from Maryland whether, as to the items upon which the conference committee have agreed, there has been incorporated any new legislation not connected directly and necessarily with the legislation about which the Houses differ.

Mr. GORMAN. Not a single word or line has been added to the bill by the conference report. We have changed, as a matter of course, as I explained to the Senate, the phraseology in relation to some of the questions which have been dealt with, but no new items have been inserted.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I am very glad to learn that fact. When the income-tax-return bill was before the Senate, I discovered, or thought I discovered, that an item had been introduced into the conference report which had no relation whatever to any matter of difference between the two Houses. I was told by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] that what I stated was not true, and by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], in somewhat gentler phrase, that I was mistaken. I have made careful investigation of the history of that subject, and am prepared to show at some length that what I stated was exactly and literally correct and that it was the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Iowa who were mistaken, and not I. I shall not, however, detain the Senate to enter upon that discussion at this time, because I wish to expedite the public business. I shall endeavor to do so, if time affords, when some other conference report is before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the conference report.

The report was concurred in.

Mr. GORMAN. Let it be included in the motion that the Senate further insists on its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and asks for a further conference.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered, in the absence of objection.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. GORMAN, Mr. COCKRELL, and Mr. ALLISON were appointed.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I desire to present some morning business.

Mr. PLATT. Regular order, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is the sundry civil appropriation bill.

SURVEYOR OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. PROCTOR. I ask to withdraw a conference report on the bill (S. 444) making the surveyor of the District of Columbia a salaried officer, and to provide for more efficient service in the surveyor's office, for the sake of correcting a clerical error. Reference was made to line 4 of one of the amendments, which should have been line 6. I submit the report with the error corrected, and move its adoption.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 444) making the surveyor of the District of Columbia a salaried officer, and to provide for more efficient service in the surveyor's office, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House and agree to the same with the following amendments:

In line 5 of section 1, page 1, after the words "shall be," insert "appointed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia for a term of four years, unless sooner removed for cause, and shall be;" and the Senate agree to the same.

In line 6 of section 1, page 1, after the word "the" where it first occurs in said line, insert "said;" and the Senate agree to the same.

In lines 6 and 7 of section 1, page 1, strike out "of the District of Columbia;" and the Senate agree to the same.

In line 4 of section 3, page 2, after the words "per annum," insert "and such employees as may in the judgment of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be required for the surveyor's office and operations, at an aggregate expense of not exceeding $4,000 in any one year." Amend the proposed amendment by striking out "$4,000" and insert "$5,200" in lieu thereof; and the Senate agree to the same.

In section 3, page 2, strike out all after the words "per annum," in line 4, down to and including line 13; and the Senate agree to the same.

In line 3 of section 4, page 2, strike out the word "cities" and insert in lieu thereof the word "city;" and the Senate agree to the same.

In line 4 of section 4, page 2, strike out the words "and Georgetown;" and the Senate agree to the same.

In line 5 of section 4, page 2, strike out "cities" and insert in lieu thereof the word "city;" and the Senate agree to the same.

In line 11 of section 5, page 3, after the word "Columbia," insert "and all records, plats, plans, and other papers or documents now existing or hereafter made or secured by the office of the said surveyor shall be delivered by each surveyor to his successor in office." Amend by inserting after the word "office," "and no plat or survey of land shall be recorded in the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia except it be certified to as correct by the surveyor of the said District;" and the Senate agree to the same.

In section 8, page 3, strike out all after the word "laws," in line 1, down to and including line 4, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed;" and the Senate agree to the same.

REDFIELD PROCTOR,

CHAS. J. FAULKNER,

H. C. HANSBROUGH,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. E. COBB,

G. W. COOPER,

J. A. T. HULL,

Managers on the part of the House.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the report.

The report was concurred in.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as its Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8518) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 2, after line 5, to insert:

For the public building at Charleston, S. C.: For completion of building, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 7, to insert:

In order to provide accommodations for the Government officials in the city of Chicago now occupying the present building, during the erection of the proposed new building, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to accept for use temporarily any site that may be offered for such use free of cost and rent and to erect thereon a temporary building, and the sum of $300,000 is hereby appropriated, to be immediately available, of which amount the sum of $27,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be used for the rental of buildings for one year; said temporary building to be so erected shall be removed by the Government when said new building is completed and ready for use.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 20, to insert:

In pursuance of the act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for the erection of a Government building at Chicago, Ill.," approved February 2, 1895, the sum of $400,000 is hereby appropriated for the commencement and continuation of the building, of which amount the sum of $90,000 is hereby authorized to be expended by the Secretary of the Treasury to employ temporarily draftsmen and skilled service, which may be necessary in the preparation of plans and specifications for the said building, this amount to be exclusive of any moneys that he may be authorized to expend for the services of engineers, draftsmen, and other persons employed in the preparation of plans and specifications for any other public buildings.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 10, to insert:

For the public building at Fort Dodge, Iowa: For completion of three additional rooms in said building and placing additional dormers in the roof, $1,500, in addition to the balance of the appropriation now available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 8, to insert:

For court-house and post-office at Meridian, Miss.: The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, if in his discretion he thinks it to the public interest to do so, to exchange the site formerly purchased for said building and now owned by the United States for another and more suitable site: Provided, That the exchange can be effected without cost to the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 23, to insert:

For public building at Richmond, Ky.: For an additional amount for the completion of building, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 3, after the word "dollars," to strike out:

Provided, That before any work is done upon this building or contract let therefor, a board of three engineer officers of the Army shall be detailed by the Secretary of War to carefully examine the nature of the subsoil and bed of foundation of the site that has been purchased for such building at San Francisco, and whether the character of the same is proper for said building, and report to the Secretary of the Treasury on or before the 1st day of July, 1895, the results of their examination, together with an estimate of what will be the cost of making a foundation for said building, and if, in their opinion, the construction of said building should be proceeded with on said site. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to proceed with the construction of the building, and to enter into contracts for any part or the whole thereof, within the limit of cost fixed by law; the expenses of the board, and of their investigations, not to exceed $3,000, to be paid out of the appropriations made for the erection of said building.

And insert:

Provided, That before any work is done upon this building or contract let therefor, the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause to be carefully examined the nature of the subsoil and bed of foundation of the site that has been purchased for such building at San Francisco, and whether the character of the same is proper for said building, before the 1st day of July, 1895, and what will be the cost of making a foundation for said building, and whether the construction of said building should be proceeded with on said site; and the Secretary of War, upon the request of the Secretary of the Treasury, may detail one or more engineer officers of the Army to make such examination. If the Secretary of the Treasury shall determine that said building should be erected on said site, he is hereby authorized to proceed with the construction of the building, and to enter into contracts for any part or the whole thereof, within the limit of cost fixed by law; the expenses of such examination and investigation, not to exceed $3,000, to be paid out of the appropriations made for the erection of said building."

Mr. PERKINS. Before this amendment is adopted I ask the Committee on Appropriations to make it mandatory upon the Secretary of the Treasury to have detailed engineer officers of the Army for the purpose of making the examination. Therefore, I move, in line 6, to strike out the words "may detail one or more," and insert in lieu thereof "shall detail three engineer officers."

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Senator will not insist upon all of them being army officers. Let it be mandatory upon the Secretary of War, and not a request, that he shall detail one or more. He may not want so many.

Mr. PERKINS. The reason I desire to have the detail made from the Corps of Army Engineers is that the Secretary of the Treasury has already detailed two special agents to make an examination of this lot. It is presumable that they were appointed by reason of their political qualifications, rather than of their scientific knowledge of the proper foundation upon which a public building of the Government should be erected. Therefore, to save the President from the importunities of those who desire to make a pleasure trip to the Pacific Coast, I desire that the army officers who are there now, located in San Francisco, who have the confidence of the Government, the confidence of the people, and all who have business with them, be detailed for this purpose. I am satisfied to reduce the number to one or two if the Committee on Appropriations insist upon it, but it will be more satisfactory to our people to name three, and we have half a dozen or more army officers of the Engineer Corps stationed there. I hope the committee will accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ALLEN in the chair). The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 6, on page 2, it is proposed to strike out "may" and insert "shall," and in the same line to strike out the words "one or more" and insert "three."

Mr. COCKRELL. Say "two or more."

Mr. PERKINS. "Two or more." I will accept that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be again stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 6, of the committee's amendment, it is proposed to strike out before the word "detail" the word "may" and insert "shall," and in the same line after the word "detail" to strike out "one" and insert "two;" so as to read:

And the Secretary of War, upon the request of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall detail two or more engineer officers of the Army to make such examination.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, beginning at the top of page 8, to strike out:

The engineer officer of the Army or Navy detailed to act as superintendent of the State, War, and Navy building shall also be superintendent of the said post-office building in the city of Washington, when completed, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Postmaster-General, who are hereby constituted a commission for the purposes of the care and supervision of said building; said officer shall have charge of said building and of all the engines, machinery, water supply, heating, lighting, and ventilating apparatus, all elevators and fixtures therein, and all necessary repairs and alterations thereof, as well as the direction and control of such force of engineers, watchmen, laborers, and others as may be engaged about the building or the apparatus under his supervision; of the cleaning of the corridors and water-closets, of the approaches, sidewalks, lawns, courtyards, and areas of the building, and of all rooms in the subbasement which contain the boilers and other machinery, or so much of said rooms as may be indispensable to the proper performance of his duties as herein provided; and the said superintendent, before the completion of said building, shall submit estimates in detail for the salaries of all necessary employees and other expenses for maintaining said building.

The commission herein created for the care and supervision of said building shall, before the completion thereof, determine and report to Congress, first, what space therein shall be used by the Washington City post-office, and what bureaus and offices of their respective Departments occupying rented buildings shall be moved into and accommodated in said building, and what space shall be allotted to each; second, what bureaus and offices of their respective Departments occupying public buildings shall be removed, because of overcrowding or otherwise, into said building.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 10, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to repair the roof of the governor's building in Alaska, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 13, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to select, designate, and procure, by purchase or otherwise, suitable sites, and to commence the construction of public buildings thereon, in the city of Cheyenne, the capital of Wyoming; in Boise City, the capital of Idaho; in the city of Helena, the capital of Montana, and in the city of Annapolis, the capital of Maryland, $75,000. Each of said sites shall contain at least 16,000 square feet of ground, and shall leave an open space around the building to be erected thereon, including streets and alleys, of at least 40 feet; neither of said sites shall cost in excess of $20,000; and neither of said buildings, each of which shall be fireproof, shall cost, including the site, in excess of $120,000.

Mr. KYLE. I should like to know whether the amendment referring to public buildings in four Northwestern States has been approved by some committee of the Senate. May I ask the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. CAREY. The amendment has been reported favorably, with the exception of Annapolis. I do not know whether there has been a favorable report in that case, but as to the others the proposition has not only been reported favorably, but bills for that purpose have passed the Senate.

Mr. KYLE. There is only one question in regard to the amendment. It provides for the purchase of a site for a building in each of those Western towns at a cost not to exceed $20,000. I know the matter has been under consideration; we have talked about a public building in my own city, and the committee thought it was nothing more than fair and right that the town should contribute the ground for the building. The ground is worth nothing, so to speak, in those Western towns. A whole square can be obtained for a couple hundred dollars. In most places they are willing to give the ground. Here $20,000 is proposed to be appropriated for the site.

Mr. CAREY. It says neither of the sites shall cost in excess of $20,000. It is supposed that it will cost about $15,000 to get a suitable site in the capital city of my own State.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator from South Dakota, in the statement he has made, refer to a site for a building at the capital of his State?

Mr. KYLE. I venture to say that in the capital of my State a site would be given for a public building, if they could have one to-day.

Mr. HALE. This provision merely carries out the rule that has been adopted heretofore, to give a public building to the capital of each State. These four cities are capitals of different States.

Mr. KYLE. I understand that, but the ground is not very valuable in those western towns.

Mr. CAREY. The amendment does not compel the payment of $20,000 for the site. That is the maximum amount.

Mr. BLANCHARD. As a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds I wish to say that favorable action by that committee was taken on bills relating to the construction of public buildings at the three places first named, but I have no recollection of any action having been taken on a bill or an amendment proposing a public building at Annapolis, Md. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if a bill for the erection of a public building there has previously passed Congress or has an amendment proposing such a building been considered by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. Not so far as I remember.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I see the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] is now present, and I will ask him.

I will state to the Senator from Maryland that the Senator from Tennessee that in dealing with items in an appropriation bill it is necessary to make concessions, and to make such concessions as will secure in the end the passage of the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator will allow me, it is due to myself to say that I in no sense intended to censure the committee. For the very reasons which the Senator states, I know we have to give and take. I did not intend any uncharitable or unkind criticisms, but I did intend to emphasize an honest opinion which I entertain.

Mr. ALLISON. I know that the Senate Committee on Appropriations made considerable additions to this bill as it came to us from the other House, making them in the belief that the expenditures proposed by us were necessary expenditures in this District.

I would say to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], who has taken this occasion to impliedly censure the Committee on Appropriations for its want of knowledge and for its want of consideration of these bills, that I think, so far as the Committee on Appropriations is concerned, it has given in the past, and especially has it given to this bill, the utmost possible care as to the items in the bill for the protection of the District and commensurate with the growth of the District.

We must bear in mind here that one-half of the amount to be expended under all these appropriations is taken from the Treasury of the United States, and that it is a matter of interest, not locally alone, but of interest to all the people of the United States, that all these appropriations should be considered in the light of the fact that we pay one-half of the expenditures of the District. I have not criticised, and I do not now criticize, that adjustment. It is an adjustment which has prevailed for a great many years; and while I perhaps will admit that the Committee on Appropriations, in dealing with these bills, does not deal with them in a local sense, it does not deal with them according to the wishes of this individual or that individual who may have property in this District to be benefited by special local improvements.

We deal with those questions in a larger and better sense, for the protection not only of those who have special property here, but we deal with them in the sense of promoting the interests of the people who dwell in this District by and large, whether they own property or do not own property. So, while I may agree with the Senator when we come to again consider the question of who shall have charge of these appropriations, I shall not intrude upon the pressing hours now before us, in view of the closing days of the session, to discuss the question of the competency or incompetency of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to ask the Senator from Maryland whether, as to the items upon which the conference committee have agreed, there has been incorporated any new legislation not connected directly and necessarily with the legislation about which the Houses differ.

Mr. GORMAN. Not a single word or line has been added to the bill by the conference report. We have changed, as a matter of course, as I explained to the Senate, the phraseology in relation to some of the questions which have been dealt with, but no new items have been inserted.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I am very glad to learn that fact. When the income-tax-return bill was before the Senate, I discovered, or thought I discovered, that an item had been introduced into the conference report which had no relation whatever to any matter of difference between the two Houses. I was told by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] that what I stated was not true, and by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], in somewhat gentler phrase, that I was mistaken. I have made careful investigation of the history of that subject, and am prepared to show at some length that what I stated was exactly and literally correct and that it was the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Iowa who were mistaken, and not I. I shall not, however, detain the Senate to enter upon that discussion at this time, because I wish to expedite the public business. I shall endeavor to do so, if time affords, when some other conference report is before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the conference report.

The report was concurred in.

Mr. GORMAN. Let it be included in the motion that the Senate further insists on its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and asks for a further conference.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered, in the absence of objection.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. GORMAN, Mr. COCKRELL, and Mr. ALLISON were appointed.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I desire to present some morning business.

Mr. PLATT. Regular order, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is the sundry civil appropriation bill.

SURVEYOR OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. PROCTOR. I ask to withdraw a conference report on the bill (S. 444) making the surveyor of the District of Columbia a salaried officer, and to provide for more efficient service in the surveyor's office, for the sake of correcting a clerical error. Reference was made to line 4 of one of the amendments, which should have been line 6. I submit the report with the error corrected, and move its adoption.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 444) making the surveyor of the District of Columbia a salaried officer, and to provide for more efficient service in the surveyor's office, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House and agree to the same with the following amendments:

In line 5 of section 1, page 1, after the words "shall be," insert "appointed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia for a term of four years, unless sooner removed for cause, and shall be;" and the Senate agree to the same.

In line 6 of section 1, page 1, after the word "the" where it first occurs in said line, insert "said;" and the Senate agree to the same.

In lines 6 and 7 of section 1, page 1, strike out "of the District of Columbia;" and the Senate agree to the same.

In line 4 of section 3, page 2, after the words "per annum," insert "and such employees as may in the judgment of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be required for the surveyor's office and operations, at an aggregate expense of not exceeding $4,000 in any one year." Amend the proposed amendment by striking out "$4,000" and insert "$5,200" in lieu thereof; and the Senate agree to the same.

In section 3, page 2, strike out all after the words "per annum," in line 4, down to and including line 13; and the Senate agree to the same.

In line 3 of section 4, page 2, strike out the word "cities" and insert in lieu thereof the word "city;" and the Senate agree to the same.

In line 4 of section 4, page 2, strike out the words "and Georgetown;" and the Senate agree to the same.

In line 5 of section 4, page 2, strike out "cities" and insert in lieu thereof the word "city;" and the Senate agree to the same.

In line 11 of section 5, page 3, after the word "Columbia," insert "and all records, plats, plans, and other papers or documents now existing or hereafter made or secured by the office of the said surveyor shall be delivered by each surveyor to his successor in office." Amend by inserting after the word "office," "and no plat or survey of land shall be recorded in the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia except it be certified to as correct by the surveyor of the said District;" and the Senate agree to the same.

In section 8, page 3, strike out all after the word "laws," in line 1, down to and including line 4, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed;" and the Senate agree to the same.

REDFIELD PROCTOR,
CHAS. J. FAULKNER,
H. C. HANSBROUGH,
J. E. COBB,
G. W. COOPER,
J. A. T. HULL,
Managers on the part of the House.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the report.

The report was concurred in.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8518) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 2, after line 5, to insert:

For the public building at Charleston, S. C.: For completion of building, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 7, to insert:

In order to provide accommodations for the Government officials in the city of Chicago now occupying the present building, during the erection of the proposed new building, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to accept for use temporarily any site that may be offered for such use free of cost and rent and to erect thereon a temporary building, and the sum of $200,000 is hereby appropriated, to be immediately available, of which amount the sum of $27,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be used for the rental of buildings for one year; said temporary building to be so erected shall be removed by the Government when said new building is completed and ready for use.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 20, to insert:

In pursuance of the act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for the erection of a Government building at Chicago, Ill.," approved February 2, 1895, the sum of $400,000 is hereby appropriated for the commencement and continuation of the building, of which amount the sum of $30,000 is hereby authorized to be expended by the Secretary of the Treasury to employ temporarily draftsmen and skilled service, which may be necessary in the preparation of plans and specifications for the said building, this amount to be exclusive of any moneys that he may be authorized to expend for the services of engineers, draftsmen, and other persons employed in the preparation of plans and specifications for any other public buildings.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 10, to insert:

For the public building at Fort Dodge, Iowa: For completion of three additional rooms in said building and placing additional dormers in the roof, $1,500, in addition to the balance of the appropriation now available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 8, to insert:

For court-house and post-office at Meridian, Miss.: The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, if in his discretion he thinks it to the public interest to do so, to exchange the site formerly purchased for said building and now owned by the United States for another and more suitable site: Provided, That the exchange can be effected without cost to the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 23, to insert:

For public building at Richmond, Ky.: For an additional amount for the completion of building, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 3, after the word "dollars," to strike out:

Provided, That before any work is done upon this building or contract let therefor, a board of three engineer officers of the Army shall be detailed by the Secretary of War to carefully examine the nature of the subsoil and bed of foundation of the site that has been purchased for such building at San Francisco, and whether the character of the same is proper for said building, and report to the Secretary of the Treasury on or before the 1st day of July, 1895, the results of their examination, together with an estimate of what will be the cost of making a foundation for said building, and if, in their opinion, the construction of said building should be proceeded with on said site. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to proceed with the construction of the building, and to enter into contracts for any part or the whole thereof, within the limit of cost fixed by law; the expenses of the board, and of their investigations, not to exceed $3,000, to be paid out of the appropriations made for the erection of said building.

And insert:

Provided, That before any work is done upon this building or contract let therefor, the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause to be carefully examined the nature of the subsoil and bed of foundation of the site that has been purchased for such building at San Francisco, and whether the character of the same is proper for said building, before the 1st day of July, 1895, and what will be the cost of making a foundation for said building, and whether the construction of said building should be proceeded with on said site; and the Secretary of War, upon the request of the Secretary of the Treasury, may detail one or more engineer officers of the Army to make such examination. If the Secretary of the Treasury shall determine that said building should be erected on said site, he is hereby authorized to proceed with the construction of the building, and to enter into contracts for any part or the whole thereof, within the limit of cost fixed by law; the expenses of such examination and investigation, not to exceed $3,000, to be paid out of the appropriations made for the erection of said building."

Mr. PERKINS. Before this amendment is adopted I ask the Committee on Appropriations to make it mandatory upon the Secretary of the Treasury to have detailed engineer officers of the Army for the purpose of making the examination. Therefore, I move, in line 6, to strike out the words "may detail one or more," and insert in lieu thereof "shall detail three engineer officers."

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Senator will not insist upon all of them being army officers. Let it be mandatory upon the Secretary of War, and not a request, that he shall detail one or more. He may not want so many.

Mr. PERKINS. The reason I desire to have the detail made from the Corps of Army Engineers is that the Secretary of the Treasury has already detailed two special agents to make an examination of this lot. It is presumable that they were appointed by reason of their political qualifications, rather than of their scientific knowledge of the proper foundation upon which a public building of the Government should be erected. Therefore, to save the President from the importunities of those who desire to make a pleasure trip to the Pacific Coast, I desire that the army officers who are there now, located in San Francisco, who have the confidence of the Government, the confidence of the people, and all who have business with them, be detailed for this purpose. I am satisfied to reduce the number to one or two if the Committee on Appropriations insist upon it, but it will be more satisfactory to our people to name three, and we have half a dozen or more army officers of the Engineer Corps stationed there. I hope the committee will accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ALLEN in the chair). The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 6, on page 2, it is proposed to strike out "may" and insert "shall," and in the same line to strike out the words "one or more" and insert "three."

Mr. COCKRELL. Say "two or more."

Mr. PERKINS. "Two or more." I will accept that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be again stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 6, of the committee's amendment, it is proposed to strike out before the word "detail" the word "may" and insert "shall," and in the same line after the word "detail" to strike out "one" and insert "two;" so as to read:

And the Secretary of War, upon the request of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall detail two or more engineer officers of the Army to make such examination.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, beginning at the top of page 8, to strike out:

The engineer officer of the Army or Navy detailed to act as superintendent of the State, War, and Navy building shall also be superintendent of the said post-office building in the city of Washington, when completed, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Postmaster-General, who are hereby constituted a commission for the purposes of the care and supervision of said building; said officer shall have charge of said building and of all the engines, machinery, water supply, heating, lighting, and ventilating apparatus, all elevators and fixtures therein, and all necessary repairs and alterations thereof, as well as the direction and control of such force of engineers, watchmen, laborers, and others as may be engaged about the building or the apparatus under his supervision; of the cleaning of the corridors and water-closets, of the approaches, sidewalks, lawns, courtyards, and areas of the building, and of all rooms in the subbasement which contain the boilers and other machinery, or so much of said rooms as may be indispensable to the proper performance of his duties as herein provided; and the said superintendent, before the completion of said building, shall submit estimates in detail for the salaries of all necessary employees and other expenses for maintaining said building.

The commission herein created for the care and supervision of said building shall, before the completion thereof, determine and report to Congress, first, what space therein shall be used by the Washington City post-office, and what bureaus and offices of their respective Departments occupying rented buildings shall be moved into and accommodated in said building, and what space shall be allotted to each; second, what bureaus and offices of their respective Departments occupying public buildings shall be removed, because of overcrowding or otherwise, into said building.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 10, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to repair the roof of the governor's building in Alaska, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 13, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to select, designate, and procure, by purchase or otherwise, suitable sites, and to commence the construction of public buildings thereon, in the city of Cheyenne, the capital of Wyoming; in Boise City, the capital of Idaho; in the city of Helena, the capital of Montana, and in the city of Annapolis, the capital of Maryland, $75,000. Each of said sites shall contain at least 16,000 square feet of ground, and shall leave an open space around the building to be erected thereon, including streets and alleys, of at least 40 feet; neither of said sites shall cost in excess of $20,000; and neither of said buildings, each of which shall be fireproof, shall cost, including the site, in excess of $120,000.

Mr. KYLE. I should like to know whether the amendment referring to public buildings in four Northwestern States has been approved by some committee of the Senate. May I ask the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. CAREY. The amendment has been reported favorably, with the exception of Annapolis. I do not know whether there has been a favorable report in that case, but as to the others the proposition has not only been reported favorably, but bills for that purpose have passed the Senate.

Mr. KYLE. There is only one question in regard to the amendment. It provides for the purchase of a site for a building in each of those Western towns at a cost not to exceed $20,000. I know the matter has been under consideration; we have talked about a public building in my own city, and the committee thought it was nothing more than fair and right that the town should contribute the ground for the building. The ground is worth nothing, so to speak, in those Western towns. A whole square can be obtained for a couple hundred dollars. In most places they are willing to give the ground. Here $20,000 is proposed to be appropriated for the site.

Mr. CAREY. It says neither of the sites shall cost in excess of $20,000. It is supposed that it will cost about $15,000 to get a suitable site in the capital city of my own State.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator from South Dakota, in the statement he has made, refer to a site for a building at the capital of his State?

Mr. KYLE. I venture to say that in the capital of my State a site would be given for a public building, if they could have one to-day.

Mr. HALE. This provision merely carries out the rule that has been adopted heretofore, to give a public building to the capital of each State. These four cities are capitals of different States.

Mr. KYLE. I understand that, but the ground is not very valuable in those western towns.

Mr. CAREY. The amendment does not compel the payment of $20,000 for the site. That is the maximum amount.

Mr. BLANCHARD. As a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds I wish to say that favorable action by that committee was taken on bills relating to the construction of public buildings at the three places first named, but I have no recollection of any action having been taken on a bill or an amendment proposing a public building at Annapolis, Md. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if a bill for the erection of a public building there has previously passed Congress or has an amendment proposing such a building been considered by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. Not so far as I remember.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I see the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] is now present, and I will ask him.

I will state to the Senator from Maryland that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE] called attention to the amendment beginning on line 14 of page 9 of the bill, relating to the acquisition of sites for public buildings at the capital of Wyoming, the capital of Idaho, the capital of Montana, and the capital of Maryland. He asked if any previous action had been taken by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds relating to the construction of public buildings at those several places. I stated, as a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, that I recollected that action had been taken with reference to the first three, but I did not recollect that action had been taken in reference to the construction of a public building at Annapolis. Thereupon I asked the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if a bill had ever passed Congress authorizing the construction of a public building at Annapolis, and he said he knew of none. Is it a fact that a bill has or has not passed?

Mr. GORMAN. Yes, such a bill has been passed, but not at this session. I think the Senate has twice passed a bill for a public building at the capital of Maryland. I wish to say a few words to the Senator from Louisiana, if he will permit me to interrupt him, on this point.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Certainly.

Mr. GORMAN. For the second time a provision has come into an appropriation bill for a public building in the capital of the State of Maryland. At the last session of Congress a similar provision was inserted in an appropriation bill in the Senate. Maryland is the only State of the original thirteen States in which there is no public building for post-office and other purposes. We have adopted a rule of providing public buildings for capital cities, and it has been done in every State in the Union except the ones stated in the bill. I therefore inserted Annapolis. That is all there is of it.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I understand it is a fact—I ask the Senator from Maryland whether it is or not—that no bill has passed Congress authorizing the erection of a public building at Annapolis, in Maryland.

Mr. GORMAN. Not at the present session.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I ask the Senator if any bill has been passed by Congress at any time authorizing the construction of a public building at Annapolis?

Mr. GORMAN. Yes; twice.

Mr. VEST. We reported the bill. I think it was in the last session or the session before that. I wish to say to the Senator from Louisiana—

Mr. BLANCHARD. Just allow me a moment. Was that bill passed?

Mr. VEST. Not at the present session.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I mean at the last session.

Mr. VEST. Either the last session or the session previous to that.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Is the appropriation for that building placed in the pending bill pursuant to that authorization?

Mr. VEST. Not that I know of.

Mr. GORMAN. No, sir.

Mr. VEST. It does not come from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, but I wish to say to the Senator from Louisiana that the rule adopted by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, which was the rule when I went upon the committee sixteen years ago, was that every State in the Union should have at its capital a Federal building. Maryland is to-day the only one of the States, I think, that has not either a public building or legislation looking to that result.

Mr. BLANCHARD. That may be, and I am not challenging the policy of the erection of public buildings at State capitals. But I find here an appropriation for a public building at Annapolis, Md., which has not heretofore been authorized by act of Congress, or by act of the Senate, or one of its committees. That appears to be the fact.

My desire was merely to call attention to it because if there is any feature of new legislation or general legislation in the bill the proposition now under discussion is one. It is not my purpose to object to it at all, but to call the attention of the Senate to the fact. I wish merely to emphasize the fact now, because as we proceed in the consideration of the pending bill it may become pertinent.

Mr. GORMAN. All of these four States of the Union are on identically the same footing. There is no law providing for the construction of any one of these buildings, and Annapolis has been put in only because of the rule that has been adopted, to give each one of the States a public building. I state frankly to the Senate that there is no law authorizing it, and if the Senator from Louisiana, under the circumstances, desires to strike out Annapolis, I shall be very glad to have it stricken out. Indeed, upon second thought, I will do now as I did at the last session of Congress, I will ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to modify the amendment by striking out Annapolis.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I do not desire to strike it out and have made no such motion or suggestion.

Mr. CALL. I object.

Mr. GORMAN. No, sir. I ask that it be done.

Mr. CALL. I object.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to strike out the words "and in the city of Annapolis, Md."

Mr. WOLCOTT. I ask the Senator from Maryland why he asks for the withdrawal of an amendment which seems to be a very worthy one.

Mr. GORMAN. I prefer that the matter should come up on its own merits hereafter. I desire it in that way. I trust Annapolis will be stricken out.

Mr. DUBOIS. I wish it distinctly understood that so far as the Western States are concerned, they have no desire to have the Senator from Maryland strike out Annapolis.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is understood perfectly.

Mr. GORMAN. I trust it will be done, nevertheless.

Mr. ALLEN. I hope the Senator from Maryland will not do that.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask the Senate to strike out the provision as to Annapolis.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] to the committee amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 9, line 19, after the word "Montana," it is proposed to strike out "and in the city of Annapolis, the capital of Maryland."

Mr. MORRILL rose.

Mr. COCKRELL. I insist that those words shall go out. The Senator from Maryland wishes it, and it is right.

Mr. MORRILL. I believe Annapolis is the only capital city of any State that has not a public building in it. I hope, therefore, that the amendment to the amendment will not be submitted to by the Senate, and that they will retain in the bill the provision as to Annapolis.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. GORMAN. I trust the Senate will gratify me in this matter. There is a reason why I desire to have Annapolis stricken out at this time. There is a different reason which applies to this case and does not apply to the others. It occurred to me only this moment.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish to call attention to the fact that there is a great Naval Academy in Annapolis, a great Government institution. Annapolis is not only the capital of the State, but it is the headquarters of one of the great military schools in this country, and it is preeminently fit and proper that that city should have a public building. I do not know what reason the Senator from Maryland has—

Mr. GORMAN. I will state the reason frankly. I trust the Senate will gratify me in this matter. I only remembered the reason just now. It had entirely escaped me.

Six years ago we passed a separate bill providing for the construction of a public building at Annapolis, and it received a pocket veto by the President of the United States. I do not care now, upon reflection, to have this appropriation go into an appropriation bill. I therefore ask the Senate to strike it out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. After the word "Montana," in line 19, I move to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "fifty-six;" so as to read "$56,000."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KYLE. Following the word "dollars," in line 20, I move to insert:

And in the city of Pierre, the capital of South Dakota: Provided, That the said site shall not cost more than $5,000.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator from South Dakota whether there is a public building in Pierre?

Mr. KYLE. No. There are there a United States land office, a United States court, and a post-office and there is no public building.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there no public building of any kind there?

Mr. KYLE. No, sir.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am very much astonished that the Senator from South Dakota has not brought the matter to the attention of the Senate before.

Mr. KYLE. I had a bill up last year, and it passed the Senate; but it was not acted upon by the other House.

Mr. COCKRELL. It was stated here that those three States were the only Western States that did not have a public building at the capital.

Mr. KYLE. That is not true. North Dakota has no public building at its capital, either. I am willing to have the amendment adopted with the proviso which I have stated:

Provided, That the said site shall not cost more than $5,000.

I am sure that in South Dakota, and I think in North Dakota, a site can be obtained for $5,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I should like to offer an amendment. On page 9, line 19, after the word "Montana," I move to insert "and in the city of Olympia, the capital of Washington, $20,000."

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there no public building at Olympia?

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I will state that there is no public building at Olympia. My colleague [Mr. SQUIRE] has offered an amendment for a public building at Olympia, but he is unavoidably detained from the Chamber. We have a United States land office, a surveyor-general's office there—

Mr. COCKRELL. Is a United States court held there?

Mr. WILSON of Washington. No United States court is held there.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KYLE. I now move, in line 24, page 9, to strike out the word "twenty" and insert "five;" so as to read:

And neither of said sites shall cost in excess of $5,000.

I wish to emphasize the remark I made a moment ago as to these Western towns, the capitals of the States included, that land there is very cheap indeed. I know that in almost all our towns the people are willing to donate land in order to get a public building. I submit that in almost every case a site can be procured for $5,000, if the Government is compelled to pay for it at all. Therefore I do not wish to have a statute enacted providing that the site shall not cost in excess of $20,000, because, of course, the property owners will charge all they can get.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I do not think the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota ought to be adopted. The question of the cost of sites for the proposed public buildings at the capitals of these Western States was fully discussed and considered by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate. I thought then $20,000 was a large sum, but it was stated that at some of those places an eligible site could not likely be obtained for a less sum.

The Senate will observe that the language of the amendment does not require, of course, that the sum of $20,000 shall be paid for each of the sites, but merely mentions the sum of $20,000 as the maximum limit of cost of the site. If the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota be adopted, I fear it will have the effect of preventing the early commencement of the public buildings at those Western capitals, because difficulty may be encountered in securing eligible sites at some of those places for the sum of $5,000.

Mr. KYLE. Will the Senator from Louisiana allow me at this point? Does the Senator from Louisiana know the value of land in some of these Western towns?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I do not. I have never visited those cities.

Mr. KYLE. I will say to the Senator from Louisiana that between now and Saturday night I think I can get a pocketful of deeds for sites free of charge.

Mr. BLANCHARD. That may be, and it will be all the more to the advantage of the Government if that be done. But it is likely the Senator from South Dakota is mistaken. I have secured appropriations for several public buildings in Louisiana, and know that in country towns the same rule obtains that prevails in the larger cities when the acquisition of a site is sought for the erection of a public building. Whenever the Government wants a piece of property for Government purposes that property at once is worth one-third more than private individuals can purchase it for, and as a rule the Government is compelled to pay more than the actual cash value of ground it needs for its purposes. I believe that public buildings should be erected in those Western capitals, and I believe that if the Senate adopts the amendment limiting the cost of the sites to the small sum of $5,000 it will have the effect of preventing the acquisition in the early future of eligible sites for the public buildings. I venture the prediction that if the amendment be adopted the acquisition of some of the sites will be suspended waiting further legislation by Congress enlarging the limit.

I think the question which the Senator from South Dakota put to me in reference to the cost of land in those Western capitals can be better answered by the gentlemen who represent those States upon the floor of the Senate.

Mr. CAREY. I think the difficulty in this case with reference to sites is that neither the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE] nor the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] have read the amendment. It provides for the purchase of the sites and the commencement of the construction of buildings. It was not expected that in Boise City a site would cost $20,000, nor was it expected that a site in the capital city of my State would cost $20,000. We expected to have a little left with which to commence the construction of the building. It is the old story with reference to this amendment. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds agreed that these three States which had not within their boundaries a public building over which the flag of the United States floated each day should have a public building. The rule they laid down only applied to the States of Wyoming, Montana, and Idaho. The State of Washington has a public building. The State of South Dakota has a public building, and the State of North Dakota has a public building, but here are three new States which have no public buildings. It so happens that the principal cities in those new States were the capital cities. The Committee on Appropriations found that they had a precedent for originating on an appropriation bill legislation for public buildings for capital cities, and in that way I suppose Annapolis was placed in the amendment. But Annapolis has been ruled out because there has been no report made in its favor.

I say to the Senators from the other States that if their amendments remain on the bill they will prevent three sister States, young States, which have not public buildings, from obtaining public buildings at the present session of Congress. I know that that is true, because I was assured by the Committee on Appropriations of the other House of Congress at the last session that if the amendment for the three new States was placed upon the pending bill at this session it would be permitted to remain. Such a provision was on the bill at the last session, but it was stricken out. We all, in those Western States, have some pride about public buildings. My young State has erected a capital building, and has paid for it. It cost about a half million dollars. They have done their part. The city of Cheyenne is the principal town in that State, and the receipts of the post-office and the rents that are paid out by the Government justify the construction of a public building there. Senators from other States may weigh the bill down so that we will not obtain our public building. I ask them in this case to be a little considerate of us, as South Dakota and the State of Washington have both been supplied with creditable public buildings.

Mr. WOLCOTT. May I ask the Senator from Wyoming a question before he sits down, referring to a suggestion made by the Senator from Louisiana, that as soon as there was talk of the construction of a public building the price of real estate appreciated in the place where the land was to be bought? The proposed appropriation is only $56,000 for the purchase of the land and the commencement of the construction of three public buildings. I ask the Senator if it is not a fact that in the case of every public building that has ever been constructed in the West, three-fourths, or four-fifths, or nine-tenths of the value of the land is not invariably raised by private subscription? Is it not a fact that the Government gets the land for its public buildings usually at from 10 to 15 cents on the dollar of its value?

Mr. CAREY. The question of the Senator from Colorado can be answered only one way. If this provision passes without an appropriation for the purchase of a site in my own town, I know that one man by the name of J. M. CAREY will have to contribute two or three thousand dollars. We can not obtain a suitable site for less than fifteen or twenty thousand dollars.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The amendment of the Senator from South Dakota is to reduce the maximum limit of cost of the sites from $20,000 to $5,000. I oppose the amendment on the ground that the maximum limit of cost, $20,000, should be left as it is, in order to give the Secretary of the Treasury more latitude in the way of securing an eligible site.

I ask the Senator from Wyoming if, in his opinion, it will be possible in the capital city of his State to secure for $5,000 an eligible site for the public building which has been authorized there.

Mr. CAREY. It will not be possible.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I will state further, if the Senator from Wyoming will allow me, that the amendment does limit the cost of the site to $20,000, and—

Mr. CAREY. I will tell the Senator from Louisiana why that limitation was put in the amendment. It was to prevent one town from getting all the money.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I am a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and I know why it was put in. I was merely defending the action of the committee in recommending that the cost of the sites shall not exceed $20,000. I am opposing now, in the interest of the construction of these buildings and in the interest of the Government, the reduction of that amount to $5,000.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, it is a well-recognized precedent; it has been recognized ever since I have been here, at any rate, in late years, that when any Senators, by careful attention to the interests of their constituency, have gone to the proper committee and procured a favorable recommendation of a bill, when any other Senator desired similar legislation and attempted to ingraft it on that bill he went to the Senators who had done the work and asked them if it would jeopardize the passage of their bill, and if they said it would, I have never known an instance when a Senator did not decline to put his amendment on their bill.

I take no credit to myself for having these three Western States put in the bill. The chief credit is due to the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY]. He has worked steadily for two or three years for this legislation. The Senator from Montana [Mr. POWER] has also been earnest and constant in his endeavors to secure these public buildings. At the last session of Congress we received from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds a favorable report for three buildings. We had it put in the appropriation bill at the last session. It was weighted down with other measures and beaten. At the present session we have not only secured the favorable report of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, but have passed through the Senate a bill for the erection of public buildings in these three Western States.

Neither one of the gentlemen now offering amendments has been before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds or before the Committee on Appropriations. They have done no work at all; and now after ours is almost completed they ask that their States be admitted, knowing full well, as they ought to know, that it defeats us.

There are several reasons why we should have public buildings. There is not one in our States. We have at these capitals the United States court, the United States land offices, the surveyor-general's office, marshal's office, district attorney's office, and the offices of the collector of internal revenue and Weather Bureau, besides the post-office. There is not a public building in the State, and it would be a saving to the Government in the matter of rental to erect these. I think it is unfair, now, after we have done this work, after we have gone to the Committee on Appropriations and convinced them that $20,000 was not too much and that these buildings ought to be put in our capital towns, that Senators who know nothing about it, who have paid no attention to it, should come in here and antagonize not only our appropriation of $20,000, but ask that they themselves be taken care of, when they have done nothing whatever in regard to it.

Mr. KYLE. The Senator from Idaho is mistaken in that statement. I wish to say that we have done just about as much work as the Senator from Idaho or the Senator from Montana. For the past five years I have been endeavoring to get a public building at the capital of my own State, and I have had it reported on favorably by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. The bill has passed the Senate heretofore, but it failed to get through the other House. The Senator is mistaken when he says we have not worked. I know the Senator from Idaho has worked to get his measure through. We have also worked to get ours through; and it is just as deserving in our State as in the other States.

Mr. DUBOIS. Has the Senator been before the Committee on Appropriations and labored with them in regard to his State?

Mr. KYLE. I have got in a good deal of work before the Committee on Appropriations, but I am sorry to say that I have not been as successful as some members from the Northwest.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE] to strike out "twenty," before "thousand," and insert "five," in line 24.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I move to insert after the word "Wyoming," in line 17, page 9, the words:

In the city of Bismarck, the capital of North Dakota.

I will state in this connection that the city of Bismarck contains between five and six thousand population. Besides being the capital of the State, there are located there a United States land office and the United States Weather Bureau. A term of the United States court is held there once or twice a year. I will state further that a bill has passed the Senate on two occasions locating a public building at the city of Bismarck, but it has failed to pass the other body. For that reason I offer the amendment.

Mr. KYLE. Will the Senator from North Dakota allow as a modification of his amendment the addition of the following proviso?

Provided, That the cost of the site shall not exceed $5,000.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I could not hear the Senator.

Mr. KYLE. In my amendment making provision for South Dakota there was the proviso, "Provided, That said site shall not cost to exceed $5,000." Will the Senator allow such a modification of his amendment in reference to North Dakota?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I think a site suitable for the location of a public building can not be had in the city of Bismarck for $5,000.

Mr. KYLE. I wish merely to state that I know the city of Bismarck; I know the State of North Dakota; and I know that a suitable site can be had there for $5,000.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Then if that is the case the Senator knows more about my own State than I do. I do not believe he knows it.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I am astonished at these amendments, and for the reason which I must state frankly. The matter of public buildings at the capitals of these new States was fully considered by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. As a matter of course those of us who did not reside in those States and did not represent them deferred largely to the Senators from those States, respectively. The amendments adopted this morning on the report of the Committee on Appropriations represent the result of the deliberations of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. That committee heard each of the Senators who chose to appear there and incorporated in their recommendation to the Committee on Appropriations the provisions that come from that committee to the Senate.

I am not a member of the Committee on Appropriations but I want to state distinctly, as my opinion, to the Senators from the Northwestern States that in loading on these additional amendments they will defeat all the appropriation. That will be the end of it. If they choose to take that risk let them try it.

Mr. DUBOIS. I wish to ask the Senator from Missouri what we can do about it?

Mr. VEST. I do not know what the Senator can do. As chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds I did what I conceived to be my duty in the matter. I have no explanation or apologies to make, but I want the Senators to understand now that putting on this accumulation of appropriations will result in increasing the appropriations for public buildings to such an extent that none of those States will get the appropriations to which I think they are entitled.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Mr. President, replying to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS], I think he will do me the justice to remember that I had no opportunity in this body to present the claim of the capital of the State I in part represent for a public building at that place. My colleague, the senior Senator, presented an amendment looking to an appropriation for a public building at that place, and I had intended to leave the matter entirely with him. I regret that a sense of duty, after the distinguished Senator from South Dakota had called up an amendment for Bismarck and had it passed, constrained me, in the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Washington, to offer an amendment for an appropriation at the capital of the State of Washington.

I desire also to state that in the last Congress an amendment was placed on the sundry civil appropriation bill not only for the three sites appropriated for in this bill, but for the city of Spokane, in the State of Washington. This amendment is the same except that one of the large cities in my State was stricken out. We have at Spokane a United States court and land office, and the postal receipts are greater than the receipts of all the Presidential post-offices of the State of Wyoming. In Seattle we have over $100,000 of postal receipts, and there is no public building either at that place or in the city of Tacoma.

However, if it is going to embarrass the Senator from Idaho and the Senator from Wyoming, and if my friend, the Senator from South Dakota, is willing to withdraw the amendment for an appropriation looking to the purchase of a site in Bismarck, I shall be only too glad myself to withdraw the amendment looking to an appropriation for a public building at Olympia. I do not wish at this early stage to do anything that will embarrass the Senators from those States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from North Dakota to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. In view of the fact that the Senators from Wyoming and Idaho have, as I know, labored long and ardently in favor of the establishment of a public building in their States, and in view of the further fact that there is a public building located in the State of North Dakota and that they have none in their States, if the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE] will withdraw his amendment I will agree to withdraw mine.

Mr. KYLE. My amendment is in the bill. It was voted on and adopted with a provision that the site shall not cost over $5,000, which is embraced in none of the other amendments. Therefore I think I am entitled to have my amendment retained.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 10, after line 2, to insert:

That permission be, and the same is hereby, granted to the mayor and city council of Baltimore to erect on the lot or parcel of ground in the city of Baltimore described as follows: Beginning for the same on the corner formed by the intersection of the west side of North street and the south side of Lexington street and running thence south, binding on the west side of North street 112 feet; thence west parallel with the south side of Lexington street

70 feet; thence north parallel with the west side of North street 112 feet to the south side of Lexington street, and thence east, binding thereon 70 feet, to the place of beginning, a two-story brick building, to be used by the State of Maryland for the purpose of holding therein the sessions of the State courts within said city, for a period not to exceed five years from the time said building shall be begun, and that during said period concurrent jurisdiction, so far as the same may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, ceded to the State of Maryland for said purpose, so that the sessions of the said courts in said building, upon said lot, may be during said period fully legalized: Provided, however, That the mayor and city council of Baltimore will enter into a contract with the United States of America, to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury before the erection of said building shall be begun, that within three months after the expiration of the said period of five years the said building shall be entirely torn down and the materials thereof removed, and the said lot restored to the same condition in which it now is, and in default thereof that the said building may be removed and the lot restored to its present condition by the United States at the expense of the municipality of Baltimore.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANDERSON. I offer at this time an amendment to come in at the end of the amendment first agreed to. While it is true that it is not an amendment to a committee amendment, I think perhaps the Senator in charge of the bill will be glad to have it made at this time rather than later.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Insert after line 7, page 11:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to select, designate, and procure, by purchase or otherwise, a suitable site and commence the construction of a public building provided by law to be erected at South Omaha, in the State of Nebraska, the sum of $250,000; and if the said site shall be obtained by purchase, the cost thereof shall not exceed the sum of $10,000.

Mr. MANDERSON. I will state that this amendment is to carry out a provision of existing law, the bill providing for the erection of a public building at South Omaha having passed both Houses and been approved by the President.

Mr. COCKRELL. What was the limit in the law?

Mr. MANDERSON. One hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. COCKRELL. Had not the Senator better authorize a contract?

Mr. MANDERSON. Contracting for the whole amount?

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest that that is a better way.

Mr. MANDERSON. I will withdraw the amendment for the present.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it read "And the Secretary is authorized to contract for the completion of the building within the limits prescribed by the law."

Mr. MANDERSON. I will so modify the amendment and present it again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8388) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes, further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 91, 114, 115, and 116, upon which the committee were unable to agree; agrees to the further conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois, Mr. DOCKERY and Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the joint resolution (H. Res. 277) in reference to the free zone along the northern frontier of Mexico and adjacent to the United States.

MEXICAN FREE ZONE.

Mr. HARRIS. May I be indulged a second to ask the Chair to lay before the Senate a joint resolution which has been returned by the House of Representatives in reference to the free zone along the northern frontier of Mexico. I simply desire to have it referred to the Committee on Finance, which meets to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a joint resolution returned by the House of Representatives in compliance with the request of the Senate, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (H. Res. 277) in reference to the free zone along the northern frontier of Mexico and adjacent to the United States.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senate to reconsider the vote by which that joint resolution was passed, and the vote by which it was ordered to a third reading, and that it be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Tennessee? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8518) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of Committee on Appropriations was, on page 11, after line 7, to insert:

For the purchase of all the right, title, and interest of Harriet Stanwood Blaine to the premises in the city of Washington, D. C., known and described as lot numbered 9, and the north 24 feet 6 inches front of lot numbered 8 by the full depth of said lot in square numbered 221, said premises being hereby appropriated for the use of the United States, the sum of $150,000; which sum shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury to Harriet Stanwood Blaine, her legal representatives or assigns, upon the execution and delivery by her of a proper deed to be approved by the Attorney-General conveying her title to said lot, subject to a ninety-nine-year lease thereof executed by her to one Paul D. Connor, to the United States. And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to acquire by purchase or condemnation the interest of said lessee, his legal representatives and assigns, in said premises; and in the event that no agreement can be made with the said lessee as to the compensation to be paid him, the Attorney-General, on behalf of the United States, or the lessee, his legal representatives and assigns, may, within three months, commence a proceeding by petition in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and have the amount of the compensation which the United States shall pay said lessee fixed and determined; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay the amount agreed upon by said Secretary, or the amount so fixed and ascertained by the supreme court of the District of Columbia, as compensation for the interest of said lessee, out of any moneys not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. GEORGE. My attention has been called to the peculiar wording of this amendment. It seems to establish a new rule for the acquisition of property by the United States. It only provides for a quitclaim title to this property by Mrs. Blaine. I would take it that the Congress of the United States desire, when they make a purchase of property, to have a perfect and complete title to that property. With a view of carrying out that idea, I propose an amendment to the amendment of the committee. I move to strike out in line 8 all after the words "for the purchase of" and line 9 and line 10; so as to read:

For the purchase of lot No. 9, and the north 24 feet 6 inches front of lot No. 8, by the full depth of said lot, in square No. 221, in the city of Washington, said premises being hereby appropriated for the use of the United States, the sum of $150,000; which sum shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury to Harriet Stanwood Blaine, her legal representatives or assigns, upon the execution and delivery by her of a proper deed to be approved by the Attorney-General.

I also move to insert in lieu of the word "her" in line 19, the words "a complete and perfect title;" so that the provision as I propose to amend it shall provide for the purchase of this land at the sum of $150,000 upon Mrs. Blaine executing a deed to be approved by the Attorney-General conveying a complete and perfect title to the United States instead of merely conveying her title, whatever it may be.

Mr. MILLS. Suppose she refuses to make a deed, then what? I ask my friend from Mississippi to answer that question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Mississippi to the amendment of the committee will be read.

The SECRETARY. In line 8, page 11, after the words "purchase of," strike out "all the right, title, and interest of Harriet Stanwood Blaine to the premises in the city of Washington, D. C., known and described as;" after the word "twenty-one," in line 13, insert "in the city of Washington;" after the word "conveying" in line 19, strike out the word "her" and insert the words "a complete and perfect title;" so as to read:

For the purchase of lot numbered 9, and the north 24 feet 6 inches front of lot numbered 8 by the full depth of said lot in square numbered 221, in the city of Washington, said premises being hereby appropriated for the use of the United States, the sum of $150,000; which sum shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury to Harriet Stanwood Blaine, her legal representatives or assigns, upon the execution and delivery by her of a proper deed, to be approved by the Attorney-General, conveying a complete and perfect title to said lot, subject to a ninety-nine-year lease thereof executed by her to one Paul D. Connor, to the United States.

Mr. MILLS. I asked the Senator from Mississippi a question which I should like for him to answer. Suppose Mrs. Blaine refuses to deliver the deed, then what are we to do about acquiring title to the lot?

Mr. GEORGE. There is no provision in the amendment as prepared by the Committee on Appropriations for a condemnation of the property, and therefore I have made no provision on that subject. I have endeavored merely to perfect that part of the amendment which referred to a voluntary sale by Mrs. Blaine.

Mr. GRAY. In answer to the Senator from Texas I will state that it would be very easy to amend the clause beginning in line 24. It reads:

And in the event that no agreement can be made with the said lessee as to the compensation—

Then proceedings in condemnation shall take place. Let it read:

And in the event that no agreement can be made with the said Harriet Stanwood Blaine or the said lessee.

Mr. GEORGE. That amendment does not affect the amendment which I have offered.

Mr. ALLEN. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Mississippi to the language in line 18, "upon the execution and delivery by her." It should read "by her or them."

Mr. GEORGE. I think the words "or them" should be added.

Mr. GRAY. That phrase ought to be inserted.

Mr. ALLEN. Then I suggest that the words "or them" be added.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Mississippi to the amendment of the committee will be modified by the insertion of the words "or them" after the word "her," in line 18.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, I would not think of interesting myself in this amendment if it were not that some constituents of mine are interested in the lessee. They do not want to have the lessee part with the lease, and in representing them I oppose the amendment. We are all familiar with the present condition of that property, and know that it has been leased by its present owner for the term of ninety-nine years. The lessee is about to erect a theater upon it, and he does not want to part with his right to do so. However, I would not have opposed the amendment even for that reason if I could see any possible necessity for the acquisition of this property.

So far as I know there is no public necessity for its acquisition. I have heard it said that it is not desirable to erect a theater so near the Executive Mansion and so near the Department of Justice. I am not able to appreciate the force of that sort of reasoning. The distance from the Executive Mansion is very considerable, and the Department of Justice, I think, would be benefited by a slight infusion of mirth and good feeling. That Department is the temporary official home of old lawyers, who might as well be allowed to amuse themselves as anybody else.

I repeat, seriously, what is the public necessity for securing this property? If it is intended as a mere extension of Lafayette Park it is unnecessary; and the sort of sentimentality that would protect the Executive Mansion from proximity to a theater or would protect the Department of Justice from the contagion of a theater has no force in my mind.

I am not sufficiently acquainted with the rules of this body to know whether the amendment is in order or not. I raise the point of order against this amendment.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, as I had the honor of introducing this amendment and having it referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, by which committee it was reported favorably and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and now appears upon the report of that committee in the bill as a committee amendment, it is proper that I should say a single word.

I do not think that anyone who has taken the pains within the last two weeks to walk around that vicinage and observe the relative position of the buildings now owned and occupied for the purposes of the United States Government and a public park can adduce a single argument or reason for the passage of this amendment.

The public reasons, it seems to me, which should control the Senate in acting upon the amendment are absolutely overwhelming. Historically, that portion of this capital city has become dedicated to the uses of the Government and to those features of the capital city which most adorn and embellish it. The Executive Mansion, with its surrounding grounds; that beautiful Treasury Department, the most beautiful work of architecture in the city; right opposite, the Department of Justice, which soon must give place to a larger, a better, and a more fitting building; Lafayette Park, with all its associations of history and of sentiment, seem to have dedicated that corner, if not that entire square, to the public uses of the United States. We have recently embellished the corner of Lafayette Park, opposite the ground which is now proposed to be appropriated, with a beautiful allegorical and historical monument which all admire, and which adds to the beauty of that park.

I am not one of those, Mr. President, who are disposed to discard sentiment in dealing with the matter of building up this capital. There is sentiment connected with it, and the more sentiment which is connected with it, I think, the better for the country and the better for us who have to perform in our time legislative trusts here. It would be a desecration almost to have a building, such as is proposed to be built upon that square, erected, and that ground foreclosed for public use for all future time except at an immense outlay of money.

I do not mean to say that the mere building of a theater anywhere is a public nuisance; but it is a building which exnecessitate brings about it and in connection with it associations and matters which will be not only offensive to the tastes and to the sentiment of the people of this city and to the people of this country, but will materially interfere with the future development of the public buildings of this capital city.

Mr. President, I have no prejudices against theaters. They perform a most important function in our civilization; they contribute as much as anything not only to the gayety of nations, but to the gayety of individuals, and to the innocent mirth and enjoyment of the population of every city, and are almost a necessity; but that is not the question. If a building for a different purpose was to be erected there, my reasons against it would be the same. They are, that if we build an expensive structure on property there to be acquired, we must in the future pay a much larger sum of money; and that it must be acquired for public uses I think will be apparent to anyone who examines it and simply looks at the surroundings of that place.

There is the Department of Justice and the Court of Claims, with all their valuable records, crowded into that inadequate building; so crowded that, I was told by one of the officers of that Department, they had been obliged to put lately 14 or 15 clerks in the law library in order to accommodate them. So that when that library is used by the Assistant Attorneys-General and the Solicitor-General they have to move around among the alcoves where the clerks are who have their desks there, and who are performing the duties they are required to perform in that Department. That is a work which in the near future must be done in order to accommodate that great Department and the Court of Claims, which must always exist, and always be an important judicial department.

Not only that—I do not know how that is—but the members of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have told me that in the near future it is inevitable that a new State Department must be built. The present quarters of the State Department are needed by the War and Navy Departments, and no place, it seems to me, would be so appropriate and so convenient for the building of the State Department as right in that vicinity. I think eventually, as time goes on, that whole square will be appropriated to public uses, and it is merely a matter of business forecast to obtain the title of this property now, before a million dollars' worth of bricks and mortar have been erected upon it, for which at some day we shall have to pay.

It is a matter of clear prudence and forecast to lay our hands upon it now, doing no injustice to anybody, no injustice to the owner of the lot, and no injustice to the owners of the lease. It may be a disappointment to these worthy gentlemen not to carry out the plans they have formed, but that is no more than they must submit to, as everybody must submit to, where a public need interposes. We can not make a public necessity subordinate to the wishes of those who are interested in this theater. Because these gentlemen propose to build a temple to the muses is no reason why the public necessity should be subordinated to their purposes. It is a private interest, which must give way, as in all such cases, to a public interest, just compensation, of course, being made to them. Nothing is unsatisfied, except perhaps their wish to build in that particular place. I do not know that we have arrived at the point where any private individual, for however worthy an object, can settle down upon any portion of this city and say that this Government shall not lay its hands upon him. I have no disposition for any other reason to interfere with it, but I do not think that I or any other Senator should be prevented from performing what I consider, or he considers, to be a public duty in obtaining for this Government a most important local advantage, by the mere private interests which are sought now to be interposed.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair inquires of the Senator from Illinois if he was properly understood to make a point of order against this appropriation?

Mr. PALMER. I do make the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will submit the point of order to the Senate, on which the Senator from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. VEST. I ask pardon. I did not know the Senator from Illinois desired to take the floor.

Mr. PALMER. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I simply want to call the attention of the Senate to the very plain facts in regard to this matter, and I think it proper that I should submit what I have to say now in advance of the action of the Senate upon the point of order raised by the Senator from Illinois, because it is the experience of all of us who have served any length of time in this body that we generally declare in order what we propose to enact. It is important, therefore, that the facts should be known now.

Eleven years ago I advocated the purchase of what is known as the Blaine mansion, the historic building which is included in this amendment. We then had an option upon it for $65,000, with a fee-simple title, clear of all incumbrances and of all doubt. I pressed this proposition upon the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds in order that we should have a suitable location for the Supreme Court building, in connection with the Attorney-General's Office, and for a law library. We could have obtained it then at $65,000. It is now proposed that the Government shall pay $180,000.

This is a fair illustration of the advance of real estate in the city of Washington and what was lost to the Government by our non-action at that time. It is perfectly useless to indulge in reminiscences; I am aware of that; and it is equally as useless to say that the price now demanded for the property is too much. In my judgment that property is worth about $100,000, and that would be a large price for it. But we have waited until complications have arisen and the property has passed into the hands of other parties. Mr. Blaine was not the owner of the property at the time of which I speak. A lessee has acquired a lease for ninety-nine years from Mrs. Blaine; he has torn down the building; and Congress is confronted with the alternative of allowing a theater to be erected there in front of Lafayette Square, in sight of the Executive Mansion, and just across the street from the Treasury building, and to the injury of all property which is already owned by the United States. The actuary's estimate of Mrs. Blaine's interest in the ninety-nine years' lease at the rental she is to receive is $175,000—

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. BERRY. Does the amendment contemplate that we shall pay Mrs. Blaine $150,000, and then pay to the lessees whatever they have paid?

Mr. VEST. Yes; it does.

Mr. BERRY. How much is that supposed to be?

Mr. VEST. Thirty thousand dollars, I understand to be what the gentleman, Mr. Connor, the ostensible party who has this lease, estimates what he has expended and what the lease would be worth to him.

Now, let us look at the proposition squarely and see what side of it we shall take. If this amendment is voted down the theater will be erected, and we shall have fronting Lafayette Square and across from the Executive Mansion an ordinary theater, with all the accompaniments of such an institution, which it is not necessary for me to name. Besides that, we shall have on the corner—I might say, of all the property we now own the best in the city of Washington, known as the old Freedman's Bureau bank building, which we purchased at $250,000—this theater, obstructing the light to the building which must be erected there for the use of the Attorney-General's Department, for the present building is utterly unsuitable both as to size and construction; and, as a matter of course, the property there will be injured for all time to come by the erection of that theater.

My friend in front of me [Mr. MORGAN] suggests the danger from fire. As a matter of course, if we erect a public building there, the 40-foot fire limit, which we have as to all public buildings, must be preserved; but still we shall have this theater, and we know what that means. It is a question for the representatives of the people to determine as to whether a theater should be erected there in front of Lafayette Square, in that vicinity to the White House, and in immediate proximity to the property already owned by the Government, for which, as I have said, we paid $250,000 twelve years ago, and it was the best purchase in the way of real estate that this Government has ever made.

Mr. President, I shall support the amendment, knowing that the price is too great, but it is all we can do. If we do not adopt it now that theater will be erected; and when there, and we undertake, if we ever do, to condemn that same property, we shall pay not $180,000, but possibly $500,000 for it. We have already delayed, and we are now paying three times as much for the property as we could have obtained it for eleven years ago. A further delay means additional expense, unless we come to the conclusion that that theater ought to be erected there and that the United States Government is not interested in preventing its erection.

For myself, I consider it an outrage, and have always thought so, that the Government should not have owned the property known as the Blaine mansion, as it squares out our holding and makes the Government property run up evenly to the alley, which separates this property from that which is immediately north of it. It ought to have been purchased years ago, and we are now obliged to pay this amount, which I consider much too large, by reason of the delay which we deliberately adopted.

The present building for the Department of Justice is inadequate, badly constructed, and must be removed. It is a mere question of time when we must utilize the property which we own there, now the most beautiful lot in the city of Washington.

Mr. HARRIS. Will this property front on Fifteen-and-a-half street, facing Lafayette Square, and then run clear back as far east as the alley owned by the Government and the vacant lot?

Mr. VEST. Yes; it runs right up to the east line. If the Government of the United States own this property we shall then have a compact and properly proportioned piece of real estate, fronting upon Pennsylvania avenue on the one side and fronting on Lafayette Square on another, running to the alley upon the east. As it is, the Blaine property comes in and cuts out one corner, I might say, of the Government holding; and upon that it is proposed to erect this theater, with all the accompaniments of a theater, which I need not particularize.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I simply desire to make one remark, so that the Senate may understand what it is doing.

The proposition of the amendment is to pay $150,000 for the remainder of this property after the expiration of the lease for ninety-nine years. It will be a good while before we can get any use of the property under the purchase.

Mr. PALMER. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] intimates that the question of order will be of no possible consequence, and, as I believe the opinion of a parliamentarian of his experience ought to govern my conduct, I withdraw the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is withdrawn; and the question recurs on the amendment to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE].

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, I have a protest in my hand signed by the party interested in this property, which I ask may be read at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the paper will be read.

Mr. MANDERSON. I have corrected the amendment I offered a moment ago, and I should like, before the vote is taken on the pending amendment, to have it acted upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska desire the amendment to be read now?

Mr. MANDERSON. I should like to have the amendment read now. It is to come in at the end of page 11, after line 7.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 11, after line 7, it is proposed to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to select, designate, and procure, by purchase or otherwise, a suitable site, and commence the construction of the public building provided by law to be erected at South Omaha, in the State of Nebraska, the sum of $25,000; and if the said site shall be obtained by purchase, the cost thereof shall not exceed the sum of $10,000; and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to contract for the erection of the entire building, its cost not to exceed the sum of $100,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Nebraska.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. What became of the amendment I offered, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is still pending.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from Missouri that the Senator from Illinois has asked for the reading of a document in connection with the pending amendment, which will now be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I desire to enter a protest against the adoption of the item in the sundry civil appropriation bill to seize the lot known as the "Blaine" lot, which was leased by Mrs. Blaine to Paul D. Connor and subsequently assigned by Connor to me for a term of ninety-nine years at the yearly rental of $5,000 for the first thirty-nine years and $8,000 for each of the remaining sixty years.

Immediately upon the execution of the lease and its assignment I raised the necessary money to build an opera house and secured attractions for the next season, among others, five leading European troupes, and have expended large sums of money in prosecution of the enterprise.

I have contracted with Wood & Lovell, the most eminent theatrical architects in the world, to construct a building which shall be absolutely fireproof, and fireproof because no combustible material is to enter into its construction either upon the stage or the auditorium. A building provided with exits that will admit of the largest audiences leaving inside of two minutes, a building artistic and classic in its exterior and interior, a building superior in architectural beauty to anything now on Lafayette Square, and in all probability superior to anything that will be constructed by the Government in the near future.

I respectfully protest against any legislation for the arbitrary interference with my vested rights.

First. Because there does not exist any need or demand, or any reasonable probability of any need or demand for said property for the uses of the Government.

Second. Because the condemnation will entail a very large expenditure by the Government which in the depleted condition of its Treasury would be improvident.

Third. Because the erection of the building would give employment to at least 100 men for the next nine months, with food to their families (and with the great want and poverty now existing in Washington among the laboring classes this opportunity for employment should not be taken from them), and after completion employment to at least 50 men.

Fourth. That the Government should not interfere with any legal enterprise or business, unless there is an absolute need of the property for the immediate uses and purposes of the Government.

Fifth. Because it has not been the custom or policy of the Government to acquire property for possible future needs.

Sixth. Because the building now occupied by the Department of Justice (and marked on city plat lot 4) is more than ample for its present needs and there are now a large number of rooms unused and unoccupied; and because there are vacant lots adjoining (marked on plat Nos. 5, 6, and 7) belonging to the Government, containing nearly 15,000 square feet, sufficient to erect a building upon more than double the size of the present building.

Seventh. Because there is an alleyway (shown on city plat) 25 feet wide between the present building of the Department of Justice and the Blaine lot, and because the building proposed to be erected thereon, and for which permission has been given by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia under the authority of Congress upon plans submitted, showing the proposed building absolutely fireproof, and far superior in this respect to the present Department of Justice building, all questions of danger to the Department of Justice building from fire are therefore eliminated.

Eighth. Because, in the preparation of the plans of the proposed building, due regard was had to the location of windows, the style and character of architecture, the avoidance of unsightly blank walls and of windows overlooking those of the Department of Justice building, everything having been duly considered and the greatest care exercised to avoid making the building objectionable in the slightest degree.

I respectfully suggest that there has been created by the action of Congress an almost universal demand for an opera-house in the city of Washington which would be artistic and modern in design, fireproof in construction, and safe in its exits, and with first-class acoustics.

I respectfully ask to be allowed to proceed in the erection of a building which, in the matter of safety, would be in advance and in elegance equal to any theater in this country; and will be so constructed that if at any time hereafter the Government should desire to acquire it there would be nothing to be done to render it available for offices except the insertion of some floors, which could be done at a moderate cost, as nothing in the building now being built would have to be eliminated except the galleries, which are so built that they can be easily detached from the outside frame of the building.

If by the action of Congress I am not allowed to build this opera house so as to enable me to carry out my contract with attractions I will be injured in credit and caused financial loss far in excess of any damages I can reasonably hope to obtain by any award of condemnation. I respectfully state that for years the Blaine property has been on the market and repeatedly offered to the Government, who as repeatedly refused to purchase it upon the ground that it had no use for it, and that not until the purpose of building this opera house was announced, and the buildings heretofore erected upon the property removed, was there any pretense that the Government wanted or needed the property. The exercise of the right of eminent domain on the part of the Government is an unwarranted interference with my rights and against which I am helpless and without adequate remedy, unless Congress protects me, as they are in duty bound to do if there is to be equality for all before the law.

I am, very respectfully,

J. W. ALBAUGH.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 22, 1895.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, this statement on the part of this lessee presents all that can be said in opposition to this appropriation, and it presents it from a standpoint of an interested and at the same time a practical man.

I concede that the Federal Government has the power to deprive this man of his property and defeat his just expectations; I concede that we may anticipate a possible necessity for the acquisition of this property for public purposes; but there is no power which belongs to this Government or to a State government more subject to abuse than that of eminent domain. I conceive that unless this property, or any property which is sought to be taken for public uses, is actually demanded for public uses, to take it by the exercise of the right of eminent domain is pure despotism and has no justification.

Of course the courts and legislatures have never found a limit to the exercise of this power. It is like the police powers of the State. It does not admit of exact limitation, and the courts rarely allow the question of necessity for the property to be raised, it being in the nature of a political question. But surely the Senate will realize that unless this property is actually needed for public purposes the citizen ought not to be deprived of his property and the advantages he promises himself by his enterprise.

I have seen a plan of the proposed building, and although I am no architect myself, and am scarcely able to anticipate what the building will be from the architectural drawing, yet this will be a building of taste and beauty. I understand it will be an ornament to the city. The statement is made that that building, if it is hereafter required for public uses, can be easily converted to those uses by a slight alteration in the building itself. If the Government should hereafter be required to take the property for public uses, if it becomes necessary, it will take the property in a condition for public uses. It will not be, as I understand the statement of the protestant, to take the property and destroy it, as is often done; but it will be useful to the public. It can be converted into use for any rational and reasonable purpose by slight alteration.

Mr. President, one word in reply to the Senator from Missouri. He speaks of the acquisition of the property in the future and mentions the fact that it could have been acquired years ago for $65,000. It was not acquired then because it was not needed, and if acquired it would not have been used probably until this day. But if you attach to it the interest on the cost you will find, as is always the case, that when a man buys that for which he has no use he makes a bad bargain, and that when an individual needs property and is able to pay for it he pays no more than it is worth. If the Government requires this property twenty years hence it will pay its value and no more.

Mr. McPHERSON. Will the Senator from Illinois please inform me as to the dimensions of the property and its frontage?

Mr. PALMER. I have not the figures before me. I have a diagram which has been printed and laid upon the table of all Senators, I presume, giving an exact description of the property, with the plan of the building proposed, and showing its relation to the adjoining property. I will say to the Senator from New Jersey that the information he seeks can be furnished very easily.

But the public necessities or wants of the public, its real wants and its imaginary wants, when presented in opposition to the claim of a citizen, ought to be carefully and deliberately considered. I know of nothing more offensive than that a citizen who owns property which he values, or who is engaged in an enterprise, should suddenly find himself interrupted and his plans thwarted; and unless there is some clear and distinct public necessity for it it ought never to be done.

Now, what are the facts here? Senators tell us that at some time or other, under some real or imaginary conditions which may exist hereafter, the United States will need this property. It is that imaginary necessity which is asserted and opposed to the real necessities of a citizen who is about to engage in an enterprise which he supposes will result in producing profit to him. Ought that imaginary necessity to be asserted against the real necessities and real purposes and plans of a citizen? Why should it be? I do not contest the question of the price of the property to be paid to the owner of the fee. That is a matter for those who better understand the value of the property than I do. I am insisting that the lessee shall not be deprived of his rights on account of imaginary necessities, necessities that scarcely admit of definition.

The Senator from Delaware says that hereafter we will need further accommodations for the Court of Claims and the Attorney-General's Office. I understand that those wants may be distinctly met by the use of property which the Government now owns. But without regarding that I complain of the lack of exactness. I protest that this enterprising citizen who has acquired a lease to this property which has been accessible to the United States for years, and who now has a distinct plan for its use, who has made all his arrangements, who has invested large sums of money or has entered into contract which will involve large expenditures, who has a real, substantial interest—I protest that he ought not to be compelled to surrender those interests to any imaginary want of the Government. That is the question. That is when the rights of the citizen are simply sacrificed to the paramount authority of the Government. I concede the value and the importance of the right of eminent domain, but I protest that this is a tyrannical and arbitrary exercise of that power.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, the amendment was sent to the Committee on Appropriations from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds in somewhat different form from that in which it is presented here, but in substance recommending the acquisition of the property. I differ with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER] in his suggestion that this acquisition on the part of the Government is one looking to the shadowy future as to its occupation. The circumstances that surround this property are peculiar. In the first place, the Government of the United States owns a large plot of ground on the corner of Pennsylvania avenue and Fifteen-and-a-half street or Madison place. That property was acquired some years ago by purchase. Upon it is a brick structure now occupied by the Department of Justice; but a large portion of it is vacant ground. There lies immediately north of it the tract of land involved in the proposed acquisition. Immediately north of this tract of land is an alley. So if the Government shall acquire this property it will own to the alley, which will enable it to erect such a structure as it may desire to erect and have an open space with which no one can interfere.

In the construction of public buildings we have uniformly provided that adjoining it there shall be either an open street or a vacant space of at least 40 feet, in order to minimize the danger of destruction of Government property by fire. If the property sought to be purchased or acquired shall have placed upon it a building, the effect of it practically will be to destroy 40 feet of the property which the Government now owns. So, in erecting a structure for Government uses upon property now owned by the Government we shall practically be confined to a comparatively small tract of ground. When my attention was called to the matter it seemed to me that the Government had the alternative of acquiring this property or depreciating and practically destroying the property which it now has. If the property is acquired it will be an easy thing to erect a structure upon this ground that will be of utility and advantage to the Government of the United States. That such a structure is required will appear from the fact that we are paying a rental of $140,000 per annum for property in this city for Government uses, because of the scarcity of public buildings. That being so, I was willing and am willing to purchase this ground, although it may eventually or at this time cost a little more, perhaps considerably more, than it would have cost a year ago.

My recollection is that the Committee on Appropriations, some years ago, when it was suggested that a public building should be erected upon this ground, put a proposition in one of the appropriation bills to purchase this property for $95,000. But it was finally struck out in conference. If we do not make this purchase now there will be a costly building erected for private uses and purposes, and properly so, and if in two or three or five years we shall desire to utilize the property we now have, it will be found that it is impossible to do so without acquiring this property.

Then we would be required to pay a very much larger sum, I am sure, than we are to be required to pay now, because then added to the value of the lessor of this property will be added the cost of the structure which is about to be erected. It seemed to me on every ground that this was a wise thing to do; and manifestly if we do it we must do it substantially in the way here proposed, because the interest of the owner of this property has been practically fixed by the rental value for ninety-nine years.

So, Mr. President, I regard it as a necessary thing for the Government at this time to utilize what we have and to save a larger sum in the future.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, whatever the Senate does with this proposition, either voting it in or striking it entirely out, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi is not for a moment to be thought of. The owner of this property, Mrs. Blaine, is not seeking to sell it to the Government. She is not proposing to give a good guaranty warranty deed. She is proposing nothing. I do not know that the owner, Mrs. Blaine, could give a guaranty warranty deed such as the Senator from Mississippi desires that the Government shall have. She has not in any way indicated that she can.

Mr. GEORGE. If the Senator from Maine will allow me, I do not propose that she shall guarantee against the lease which she has made for ninety-nine years, but against everybody else.

Mr. HALE. I do not mean that, Mr. President. I take into account the exception that is made subject to the lease, but aside from that the owner of this property is not urging it upon the Government. She is not proposing to sell it to the Government. She is not declaring that she can give a warranty deed, a good, valid deed, such a deed as is covered by the proposition of the Senator from Mississippi. If the owner was seeking to unload upon the Government it might be proper to say that the owner should give such a deed, but the interest that the owner of this land, Mrs. Blaine, has is just as clearly definable and appraisable as a note that is offered at the bank for the regular rates of discount of a long Government bond or a long annuity.

She has a lease which she has given in which she was not called upon to give covenants for warranty, but simply a lease of the property conveying what she had in it for ninety-nine years. For thirty-nine years she gets $5,000 per year; for the remaining sixty years she gets $6,000 a year. When that was done as a business transaction it defined her interest in the property just as clearly as though it were an annuity. The Senator from Missouri has said that, estimated by an actuary, it amounts to more than $150,000. The attitude of the owner is simply this—and that is why the clause was drawn, in conjunction and in consultation with her attorney, to protect her—that if the Government should decide, for the reasons given by the Senator from Missouri, the Senator from Iowa, and other Senators, to take this property, she is willing, on giving all the title she has, to take $150,000 and give up this valuable property that she has by virtue of the lease.

Mr. GRAY. May I interrupt the Senator from Maine a moment?

Mr. HALE. Yes; I am glad to have the Senator interrupt me.

Mr. GRAY. I merely wish to remark in the line with what the Senator is saying that there is nothing in the amendment, of course, that compels the United States to consummate this purchase from Mrs. Blaine if the Attorney-General should conclude that the title was not a satisfactory one.

Mr. HALE. Of course not. Mrs. Blaine does not want to be put in the condition of condemnation, for the reason that she has a definable interest.

Mr. GRAY. I am not speaking of condemnation. I say there is nothing in the amendment of the committee to preclude the United States if perchance the title was not satisfactory to the United States.

Mr. HALE. That suggestion is pertinent, because this would happen if the amendment to the amendment carries. Mrs. Blaine says: "I do not propose to give such a title to anybody; it may be I can not do it." She declines to proceed further, and the whole proceeding fails. If Congress chooses that this whole proceeding shall fail, then the owner of the property is simply referred to the lease, a copy of which I have here, which is very clear and distinct and gives, as I have said, $5,000 for thirty-nine years and $6,000 for the remaining sixty years. That is all there is about it. If you put in the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi the whole thing is destroyed. I would not advise the owner of this property, Mrs. Blaine, under any circumstances to give a guaranty warranty title against everything under the sun. I do not know that she can do it.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator state whether he has any reason to think that Mrs. Blaine can not give such a deed?

Mr. HALE. I have no reason to believe that there are any incumbrances upon the property that in any way will affect any interest that takes it hereafter; and yet as a lawyer, if she were my client, I would not advise her to give to anybody any such deed. Rather than that I would fall back upon the lease, which does not require any such guaranty and provides her with $5,000 a year for thirty-nine years and $6,000 a year after that time without being called upon to guarantee the title.

Mr. VEST. Does she acquire her title by devise?

Mr. HALE. She acquires it directly by devise from her late husband.

Mr. VEST. By will?

Mr. HALE. Yes, by will.

Mr. VEST. All the facts ought to go before the Senate, and I wish to state now that I was informed (I have never had occasion to examine it either as a Senator or as a lawyer) that some years ago when Mr. Blaine made this purchase there was an incumbrance upon the title. Some heir was an infant, the title in the heir had not been conveyed, and Mr. Blaine, who was then, I believe, Secretary of State, declined to pay the purchase money until that cloud was removed. I never looked into the details, as I have stated, but I heard the title had been made perfect. If his will is uncontested, as a matter of course the title of Mr. Blaine passed to his widow.

Mr. WHITE. Will the Senator from Maine allow me to ask him a question? I should like to get a little information.

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. WHITE. Does the Senator from Maine know whether the title of this property is clearly and absolutely vested in Mrs. Blaine? It appears to me that we ought to deal with this matter as we would if we were buying the property ourselves. We ought to know that the title is correct, and not buy upon the hypothesis that it is valid.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly the property is vested in Mrs. Blaine by the last will of her husband, the late Mr. Blaine. It is a good title. It is a good and sufficient title to justify the purchase. There was some such incident as the Senator from Missouri has referred to, where there was a very small fractional interest which was outside, in the case of some person who by minority or disability could not act in conveying the property. Mr. Blaine thought it worth while to purchase the property, considering that of no practical account, as I do not. I would not have advised Mr. Blaine on any price to guarantee the title to the Government if he had been living, nor would I advise Mrs. Blaine, all the more, as I repeat, that she has now a most valuable, clearly defined, and estimable property in the lease. Therefore I say the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi is not to be thought of unless you propose to vote out the whole thing.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I think the Senate will vote under a misapprehension of the true state of the case if they take the statement of the Senator from Maine as he represented it. In the first place, in my amendment there is no proposition for a guaranty or warranty title. It is a proposition simply that instead of buying Mrs. Blaine's title, whatever it may be, the Attorney-General shall look into the title and only purchase when he can purchase a complete title. Now, bear that in mind.

There is not a single suggestion that Mrs. Blaine shall make any warranty, but there is a provision, necessary for the protection of the United States, that the Attorney-General shall not buy property to which the vendor has no title. I do not think that any complaint can be made to that.

There is another view of this case to which I desire to call the attention of the Senate; and what is it? Mrs. Blaine, under the amendment, is only to convey by deed her title to the property subject to a lease made to a third party. Under that lease she gets $5,000 a year, I understand, for thirty-nine years and $6,000 a year for the remainder of the ninety-nine years. Under the amendment she surrenders no right and no title to any claim she has under that lease. So if the amendment is adopted the attitude of the case in law will be exactly this: That we give Mrs. Blaine $150,000 for the reversion after the expiration of a term of ninety-nine years of this property, allowing her to retain all the rights, all the privileges, all the advantages which are secured to her by this lease of ninety-nine years.

Mr. GRAY. Does not the rent follow the reversion?

Mr. GEORGE. Not unless it is granted.

Mr. GRAY. It used to be considered so when I was a practicing attorney.

Mr. GEORGE. Not unless it is granted. But if that were true, as a general proposition of law, is it excepted out of this amendment? "Upon the execution and delivery by her of a proper deed to be approved by the Attorney-General conveying her title to said lot, subject to a ninety-nine year lease thereof." That reserves to her every right and every privilege which is secured to her by the lease. In other words, here is a carefully prepared amendment to the bill by which Mrs. Blaine is to receive $150,000 for the reversion after ninety-nine years, and expressly reserving to her all the rights and privileges that she has under this lease. That is exactly the legal attitude of the case.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to submit one other thought. When we pay this $150,000 we have but commenced our troubles about paying for the property. Here comes the lessee, Mr. Albaugh, protesting against it, saying he has made large contracts for the erection of a very expensive building. Now, what are we going to do when we force him to violate his contract with those parties? Are we going to pay damages to him for it? That is exactly what we would have to do, sir. So I take it that when we go to the condemnation proceedings, after paying $150,000, Mr. Albaugh will bring before the jury his contracts and agreements with those parties and insist upon compensation, which he will be entitled to receive.

Mr. VEST. If the Senator from Mississippi will permit me, I am informed by members of the Committee on Appropriations that Mr. Albaugh states the whole amount of damages to which he would be entitled under condemnation proceedings at $30,000.

Mr. GEORGE. Then suppose we put in the bill here "not exceeding the sum of $30,000."

Mr. VEST. I do not know about that.

Mr. GEORGE. I will state that under the agreement there is a probability of the damages of Mr. Albaugh running up to hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from Mississippi will permit me, I will state that my information, which may not be very accurate, is (and I have talked with Mr. Albaugh himself) that his claim will be very largely in excess of $30,000, and may be as large as the purchase money that is proposed to be paid to Mrs. Blaine. He has made contracts, as I shall endeavor to show hereafter, not only for the construction of this building, but with theatrical and operatic troupes, and he will have to settle with them.

Mr. GEORGE. That shows upon what a doubtful and extravagant sea we are about to launch our bark.

Mr. PALMER. Will the Senator from Mississippi allow me?

Mr. GEORGE. I will yield in a minute. In the first place, I want the Senate to remember as a proposition of law that the language is "subject to a ninety-nine year lease thereof executed by her to one Paul D. Connor;" and after you have paid Mrs. Blaine the $150,000, she is entitled to have carried out with Mr. Connor every single stipulation contained in that lease, her $6,000 a year for so many years, and her $5,000 a year for so many years. I predict that if we go into this matter and make this contract it will not cost the Government less than $1,000,000.

Mr. PALMER. I will now ask the Senator from Mississippi the question which I proposed to ask him before. I ask the Senator whether the bill contemplates anything more than a quitclaim deed from Mrs. Blaine?

Mr. GEORGE. Without the amendment which I have offered it means nothing but a quitclaim deed, as I have stated before.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I merely desire to say that I am in favor of the acquisition of these lots, but not in favor of doing anything that will diminish the value of the property of Mrs. Blaine. If she has made a good bargain she is entitled to it. So far as the Congress of the United States is concerned, we have made a sufficient amount in the value of the property we have already purchased near it to compensate for paying a high price for any addition. The Freedman's Bank and the additional land that was purchased with it, not quite as much as the acquisition of Mrs. Blaine's property, was paid for by the United States Government at a price of $250,000. Unquestionably, it is worth a great deal more now.

There is only one point upon which I wish to protest, and that is the idea suggested by the Senator from Missouri that we shall want it for the purpose of a Supreme Court building. I think he will alone enjoy the idea of placing the Supreme Court, a coordinate branch of the Government, on the corner of one of our streets. We have a sufficient demand for it in many other cases, as was suggested by the Senator from Iowa. Unquestionably the State, War, and Navy Departments now need all the accommodations there are in that building; and when we provide any accommodations for the Supreme Court I trust that we shall do it in a decent manner, and give them a position that shall be commensurate with that body as a coordinate branch of the Government.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, I do not wish to prolong the consideration of this amendment, but I merely rise to reply to a vein of criticism that my friend from Illinois [Mr. PALMER] fell into in regard to the purpose of this amendment. I wish to repeat what I said before, that I do not think anyone who has visited those premises and looked at the vicinage, who has observed the position of the Department of Justice, the situation of Lafayette Square, the Executive Mansion, and the Treasury Department, will fail to be convinced that there is not an imaginary, but a real need that the United States should own this property, and that they should not be foreclosed from owning it by the erection of such a structure as is contemplated by the lessees from Mrs. Blaine.

Those who favor this amendment do not intend to do any injury or wrong to the lessees. They can not be wronged, for under the Constitution of the United States they are protected by that provision which provides that private property shall not be taken for public use except upon just compensation. All that we do is perhaps to disappoint Mr. Albaugh or Mr. Connor, whoever the lessee is, of the fulfillment of his expectations, and it is the first time that I have ever heard that the wishes, capricious or otherwise, of a citizen of a State or of the United States should be set up as an obstacle to the acquisition by the Government of property that was needed for public use. Mr. Albaugh or Mr. Connor will, if this amendment passes, have to give way, as every other private citizen has to give way, in order that the paramount interests of the public may be subserved.

I merely wish to say that it seems to me it does not require any argument to show that this is not a wanton or capricious attempt on the part of anyone to acquire for the United States this title, but it is to accommodate a real, pressing, and present need of the Government of the United States.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. May I ask the Senator from Delaware a question?

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator from Delaware allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. GRAY. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. If Mr. Albaugh has made valid contracts with other parties for the erection of this building and he by this action of the Government is prevented from carrying them out, what remedy and what rights have the other parties and against whom?

Mr. GRAY. They have not any.

Mr. GEORGE. All right, then.

Mr. GRAY. It is only another instance in which private interests must give way to public interests. It seems to me that if Mr. Albaugh and Mr. Connor occupy the position in which they are sought to be put they are asserting a claim that is arrogant as opposed to the interests of the United States, and for the first time in the history of this Government, to settle down upon a piece of property and say that no public interest must be considered as opposed to the private interest that they suppose themselves to represent. They are not helpless, as they state themselves to be in their memorial. They are protected by the Constitution of the United States. No right is sought to be taken from them if the Congress of the United States shall decide that this is a public need and one that must be responded to by appropriate legislation.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I have been out of the Chamber during the discussion of this amendment, and perhaps the question which I wish to ask has already been answered. The amendment, I understand, provides for an appropriation of $150,000 for the purpose of purchasing certain property for the use of the United States. The amendment, so far as I am able to comprehend it, does not disclose the use to which this property is to be put. I wish to inquire what is the purpose? Is it for the purpose of providing buildings and grounds for the Department of Justice, or does it include a provision for the Supreme Court of the United States; or what is the purpose?

Mr. GRAY. I do not know that it is necessary to state the precise purpose, but I think it is apparent to all, and it might be so stated. It is for the purpose of public buildings of the United States for the use of the Government of the United States.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I may be entirely wrong about it, but it does seem to me if we make an appropriation of $150,000 for the purpose of either purchasing by private contract or by condemnation certain property for the use of the United States we ought to be advised as to what particular use the property is to be put. Why is it desirable? For what purpose? Is it for the purpose of a building for the Department of Justice, or is it for the purpose of providing for a site for a building for the Supreme Court of the United States, all of which I think very necessary to be provided for, or what is the purpose?

It seems to me that we are called upon to vote blindly upon this proposition, called upon to vote away $150,000 for the purpose of purchasing certain property, which, it is said, is for the use of the United States, but for what particular use, for what particular purpose, we do not know.

Mr. HALE. I wish to say, Mr. President, that, whatever may have been the views of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, I do not suppose they have decided to what purpose the Government should put this property, whether to erect a building for the Department of Justice or for the State Department, or whatever Department it may be. We have got so much property there now that this lot is necessary, and the uses to which it will be put by the Government will be settled hereafter. I do not think anyone will be prepared now—I know I am not for one—to say that the property should be used for one thing or another. Some day or other the Government will erect a fine building on that corner; but I do not think the Senator himself would say today for what purpose the property ought to be used.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I am decidedly in favor of making provision for a site for a suitable and proper building for the Supreme Court of the United States, but I have very grave doubts, and I presume the committee would have doubts, as to whether that would be a proper place on which to locate a building for the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator from Oregon will look at the map he will see that the property alluded to is a plat of ground which is naturally attached to a part of the piece of property which the Government already owns. We are only proposing to take the part of a prudent owner in acquiring this additional property in order to beautify the property we now have. That is all.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I wanted to find out, if I could, what was the purpose of the committee. It looked rather singular to me that it was proposed to appropriate $150,000 to buy this property for the use of the United States without disclosing for what particular purpose it was to be used. So far as this amendment is concerned, it discloses the fact that the United States owns no property contiguous to that which it is proposed to purchase. That does not appear from the amendment, although it does appear from the statement of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON]. That being so, there may be good reasons—and I am not disposed to combat them if it is a proper thing to be done—why this property should be bought; but for the committee to simply come in with an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill, proposing to appropriate $150,000 to buy certain property which is described, and which is not described as being contiguous to any property now owned by the United States, which states that it is for the use of the United States, but does not state for what purpose the United States requires it, seems to me to be rather vague and unsatisfactory.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to offer an amendment, which I ask may be stated at the desk. It is designed to meet one of the objections urged by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE].

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO in the chair). The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 11, line 21, in the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations, after the words "United States," it is proposed to insert:

And also conveying the rent, issues, and profits of said property from the date of said purchase.

Mr. GEORGE. That is a very proper amendment, and is similar to one I have just drawn.

Mr. HALE. I do not think that amendment is needed. I think that is included as a matter of course, but I can, on glancing at it for a moment, see no objection whatever to it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am not vain enough to suppose that any word I can say against the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations will result in its rejection, because I take it that it is already arranged that the amendment shall be voted into this bill so far as the Senate is concerned, but being opposed to the amendment I will take the liberty of briefly stating my reasons for opposing it, and in so doing will give a little sketch of the history of this particular piece of property.

The Blaine mansion was bought by Mr. Blaine in 1890, as I understand, for $65,000. It contains less than 10,000 square feet of ground, being 67.9 feet front and 145 feet deep. An alley 25 feet wide runs between it and the Department of Justice on the west line of that building.

I have been told, and I presume that my information is correct, that on the death of Mr. Blaine, two years ago, his widow endeavored to sell the property, on which Mr. Blaine had spent about $20,000 in addition to the original purchase money, making it cost then, as it stood, $85,000.

I noticed that the sign of Fitch, Fox & Brown, real-estate dealers, was planted in the front yard, where it remained until the lease was made in December last, and I am also informed that Mrs. Blaine never received in the two years it stood idle any offer for the purchase or lease of that property.

I understand that prior to its purchase by Mr. Blaine its then owner, a Mr. Stoughton, of Philadelphia, offered it to the Government for $65,000. I believe it was also offered to the Senate Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, of which the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] is chairman, for the same amount, but its purchase was declined.

This house being idle, as well as Mrs. Blaine's Dupont Circle house, and failing to sell the property, she leased the Lafayette Square house for ninety-nine years at an average rental of $5,700 per annum, the lessee putting up a deposit of $30,000 as security to provide for the reconstruction of the house he was allowed to tear down unless he at once constructed a fireproof opera house covering the entire lot, which house was to revert to the heirs or assigns of Mrs. Blaine at the expiration of the lease.

The lessee, Mr. John W. Albaugh, of Baltimore, put the building of an opera house under contract to Wood & Lovell, of Chicago, last December, and made contracts for various dramatic troupes for the season of 1895-96 and 1897-98, and has agreed to furnish a fireproof opera house, seating 1,800 people, ready for occupancy on the 23d day of September next, at which date an operatic company is already engaged to open the house. The Blaine mansion and outbuildings were leveled to the ground by the contractor, and the very next day a bill was introduced into the Senate for the purchase of the property by the Government.

The damages to Mr. Albaugh, it strikes me—and I have some information on the subject—will be very largely in excess of the amount stated by the Senator from Missouri, because if Mr. Albaugh is compelled to abandon his project he must settle with his contractors, and he must settle with the troupes he has already engaged, or else his reputation as a business man and a manager will be destroyed. Reputation is valuable capital to any man, and especially to a man like Mr. Albaugh, who is said never to have broken his word in thirty years of business and professional experience.

I agree with the contention that, when the public necessities require it, private interests must give way to public interests. The Government can practically confiscate private property; but, after all, my feeling of justice and right compels me to say that I have a great deal of sympathy for the man who leased this property when the Government would not purchase it, and who is now going to be dispossessed by the action of Congress, if this amendment becomes a law.

My impression is, and I have talked with some experts on this question, that expert testimony will show that, to enable Mr. Albaugh to settle with his contractors and indemnify the troupes with which he has made contracts, it will take a sum as large as that which is proposed to be paid to Mrs. Blaine for this property. So the Government will be fortunate, in my judgment, if it gets out of this business at a cost of $300,000, or $30 a square foot for that piece of property, which was offered to the Government for about $6 a foot, and declined time after time.

Let us look, Mr. President, a little further. The Corcoran Art Gallery property, with a fireproof building covering nearly the entire ground, having a frontage of 107 feet, with a depth of 160 feet, making over 17,000 square feet in all, or nearly twice the amount of land in the Blaine property, is in the market, and can be bought, with the building, for less than $300,000.

I have heard a great deal of talk about erecting a magnificent building, and have read a great deal about it, for the Department of Justice in the city of Washington. It has been proposed to put it on the ground opposite the present magnificent Library Building. The three squares of ground north of the present Library Building have been talked of for that purpose, and when the streets there are closed, whenever those three squares are acquired, so as to make the same area as the Library building site, it will give an area of over 400,000 square feet, or forty times as much as there is in the so-called Blaine lot, and all of that property, I understand, can be purchased for about $700,000. The Library building site cost $565,000.

I have observed that the Senate Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have previous to this Congress reported in favor of the purchase of that ground for the purpose of constructing a building for the Department of Justice, in which is to be located, in addition to the Attorney-General's Office, the Supreme Court of the United States, the court of appeals, the Court of Claims, the Interstate Commerce Commission the law library now in the Capitol building, a set of the United States Government publications, and the publications of the various States, so that there will be one place in the United States where the publications of the Federal Government and the various States can be found under one roof for the use of lawyers and others coming to the capital. I believe that building will be erected, sooner or later, whether we buy this property or not.

Mr. MORRILL. I will say to my friend from New Hampshire that there is an amendment pending for that purpose in this bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Precisely. Hence the contention that this property is to be bought because we wish to enlarge the present building for the Department of Justice falls to the ground. No such purpose, I apprehend, is contemplated. There is a vague and shadowy and gauzy feeling in the mind of somebody that some time in the dim and distant future the Government may want this property for some purpose or other. Nothing practical has yet come to this project for the reason that the Treasury has been short of money, and I believe the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] who has just addressed the Senate on this subject, and others who are interested in this project, while an amendment will be offered to this bill looking to the acquirement of this property, do not expect to get it this year, but will wait another year, or until such time as the Library building is completed, and then ask for the purchase of this most desirable tract for this most desirable purpose.

Mr. President, as a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I have contended in season and out of season that the places of amusement in this city should be made absolutely safe for the men, women, and children who go there to be amused. We have made some improvements in that direction, but I say here to-day that investigations which I have recently made have fully satisfied me that there is not in the city of Washington a place of public amusement which is safe against a great calamity which may overtake, and will overtake, this community sooner or later.

Mr. Albaugh leased this property in good faith, has pulled down the buildings, and made his contracts. He has now a force of men at work preparing the ground for the construction of an iron fireproof opera house, which will be modern in all its appointments, and which will, for the first time in the history of Washington, give the people of this great city, as well as the nonresidents who are temporarily here, a place of amusement where they can safely take their families of an evening.

Mr. President, some Senators talk about the accessories which will surround a building of this kind. It must not be forgotten that every detail, so far as the building is concerned, is under the control and direction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and I do not apprehend that in the constructing of an opera house in that part of the city the Commissioners will fail to see that every precaution is taken to abate anything and everything which could possibly become a nuisance to the people residing in that part of the city or to the people of the District of Columbia in general.

I said in the beginning, Mr. President, and I will repeat it, that I am not vain enough to suppose that any words of mine will lead to a rejection of this amendment; but having, after careful consideration, felt it my duty to vote against the amendment, I have felt it also my duty, in these few moments, to give my reasons for voting against it. I wish that it might be rejected, as I regard the amendment as unnecessary and mischievous, but have little hope that my views will prevail.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, I have but one suggestion to make with reference to this amendment. It seems to me that it is not a good business transaction for the Government of the United States. If I understand the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] Mrs. Blaine, the would-be vendor in this contract, is not willing to make a warranty title, she is not willing to warrant the conveyance she makes to the United States Government. If I understand the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], in the ninety-nine-year lease which she has made to Paul D. Connor, and which he has subleased to Albaugh, there is a provision that the remainder shall go to her heirs. If that be true, then she has no title or interest in this property except the right to the rents, issues, and profits for the next ninety-nine years. So if the Government of the United States acquires her title—and that is all which is provided for in the amendment—the Government of the United States will only have a lease of ninety-nine years after the property shall have been condemned, the interest which Albaugh has in it, and for which he has paid the sum of $30,000 or $100,000, or whatever it may be as being the value of his interest in the lease.

It does not seem to me that it is good policy for the Government of the United States to acquire any real estate, unless it acquires a fee-simple title. It does occur to me that in a transaction of this kind, where the Government is not to receive a warranty title, where it is only to receive a quitclaim title of some person, I do not know whom, there ought to be by the Department of Justice an examination and investigation of the title, and the judgment of that Department should be passed upon the question of what kind of title the United States is getting. It seems to me that before Congress shall vote an appropriation of money that much ought to be done. Surely, I would not make such an arrangement if it was my own private property; surely I would not expend $150,000 for the purchase of a quitclaim, or any other kind of title, unless I had investigated it or employed my attorney to investigate and pronounce upon the title I was acquiring.

Mr. President, I wish to call attention to another provision of this amendment, and I ask Senators to examine it, and that is, the amendment leaves no option with the Secretary of the Treasury, the Department of Justice, or anybody else, as to what shall be done under this section if it ever becomes a law. It will then be his duty to pay the $150,000 for whatever title Mrs. Blaine has, or whatever interest she may have in the title to this land. If it is a ninety-nine-year lease for the rents, profits, and issues for ninety-nine years, $150,000 will have to be paid by the Government. If she has no interest at all in it, neither the Department of Justice nor the Department of the Treasury can raise any question of her right to receive this $150,000, because that will have then become a law, and she will be entitled to receive it upon her executing a deed conveying whatever title and interest she has in this property. Let us see how the amendment reads:

Which sum shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury to Harriet Stanwood Blaine, her legal representatives or assigns, upon the execution and delivery by her of a proper deed to be approved by the Attorney-General—

Not the title to be approved, but the deed to be approved—conveying her title to said lot, subject to a ninety-nine-year lease thereof executed by her to one Paul D. Connor, to the United States.

Upon her executing a deed, which deed, not the title, is to be approved by the Attorney-General, it is the duty then of the Government to pay her $150,000. It does seem to me that a careful drawing of this provision ought to have left out all after the word "lot," in line 20, and before the word "and," in line 21. If it provides for the conveyance of her title, and her title only, then it is not only subject to a ninety-nine-year lease, but subject to any other claim in equity or any other conveyance that she may have made. If this is done, it would be subject to the remainder, which would go to her heirs, because she has conveyed that away. If the Senator from New Hampshire is correct in his statement of his belief of what this lease contains, she has conveyed everything away, except her right to the rents, issues, and profits for the next ninety-nine years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BERRY in the chair). The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] to the amendment of the committee. [Putting the question.] The yeas seem to have it.

Mr. McLAURIN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McLAURIN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON], but I transfer that pair to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY], and vote "yea."

Mr. PALMER (when his name was called). As the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH], with whom I am paired, is not present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WASHBURN. I am paired on this vote with the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. GIBSON. On this question I am paired with the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. COKE. I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH]. Not knowing how he would vote if present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. McLAURIN (after having voted in the affirmative). I announced a transfer of my pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON] to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY]. The Senator from South Carolina having since entered the Chamber and voted I withdraw my vote.

Mr. MORRILL (after having voted in the negative). I ask if the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] has voted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted.

Mr. MORRILL. Then I withdraw my vote, as I am paired with that Senator.

Mr. McLAURIN. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON] to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] and will let my vote in the affirmative stand.

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 29; as follows:

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE] to the committee amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. After the words "United States," in line 21 of the committee amendment, insert:

And also conveying the rent, issues, and profits of said property—

Mr. HALE. I suggest that we insert right there "under said lease."

The SECRETARY—
under said lease, from the date of said purchase.

Mr. HALE. That is right. There is no objection to that amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4507) for the relief of Witherby & Gaffney, with amendments; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 444) making the surveyor of the District of Columbia a salaried officer, and to provide for more efficient service in the surveyor's office.

WITHERBY & GAFFNEY.

Mr. PASCO. I ask that the action of the House of Representatives on the bill for the relief of Witherby & Gaffney may be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the bill (H. R. 4507) for the relief of Witherby & Gaffney, agreeing to the amendment of the Senate, with amendments.

The first amendment of the House of Representatives was, in line 30 of the first amendment, after the word "aforesaid," to insert:

Provided, That in no event shall a sum exceeding $5,414.28 be allowed against the Government.

The next amendment was, in line 35 of the first amendment, after the word "appropriated," to insert "not exceeding $5,414.28."

Mr. PASCO. The amendments do not essentially change the bill. They are proper amendments, and I ask the Senate to concur in them.

The amendments were concurred in.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLACKBURN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8272) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, and 4, and agree to the same.

On the amendment of the Senate numbered 3 the committee of conference have been unable to agree.

JO. C. S. BLACKBURN,
A. P. GORMAN,
JOHN S. HENDERSON,
EDW. J. DUNPHY,
E. F. LOUD,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment and ask for a further conference with the House of Representatives. There is only one amendment upon which the conferees have not agreed.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. BLACKBURN, Mr. GORMAN, and Mr. CULLOM were appointed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8479) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes; asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HOLMAN, Mr. ALLEN, and Mr. PICKLER managers at the conference on the part of the House.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the Indian appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the bill (H. R. 8479) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes, disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill and amendments.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and accede to the request for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. CALL, Mr. COCKRELL, and Mr. TELLER were appointed.

PROPOSED EVENING SESSION.

Mr. COCKRELL. While the Senate is quite full, I desire to state that about 6 o'clock this evening I shall hope that the Senate will take a recess until 8 o'clock, and then continue in session until 10 or 11 considering the pending bill.

Mr. BLACKBURN. And nothing else.

Mr. COCKRELL. And nothing else.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri to make the recess from 5 or half past 5.

Mr. BLACKBURN (to Mr. COCKRELL). Make it from half past 5 o'clock.

Mr. COCKRELL. Six o'clock.

Mr. GALLINGER. That gives us a very short time.

Mr. HALE. Say half past 5 o'clock.

Mr. COCKRELL. About that time.

Mr. HALE. That is better.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8518) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes.

Mr. PALMER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] to the amendment having been rejected, I beg to know if I am now giving the proper construction to the amendment:

Which sum shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury to Harriet Stanwood Blaine, her legal representatives or assigns, upon the execution and delivery by her of a proper deed to be approved by the Attorney-General conveying her title to said lot.

I ask now if any Senator is prepared, if the Committee on Appropriations or any other committee of this body is prepared to say that the title of Mrs. Blaine to this property is absolutely perfect? By the terms of the amendment all that she can be required to do is to execute a quitclaim deed, as we say in Illinois. The amendment provides that she shall, by a proper deed, convey her title to the United States. Unnecessarily, I think, the very important duty has been delegated to the Attorney-General of inquiring whether her quitclaim deed is in proper form—a duty that might be delegated, I think, to any fairly respectable notary public or justice of the peace. But the Attorney-General is not charged with the duty of investigating her title. We are paying here $150,000 for the quitclaim deed of Mrs. Blaine to this property.

I ask the question, is any Senator prepared to say that her title is perfect? I think in all the bills that we have passed in relation to the acquisition of property by the United States for the construction of public buildings it is provided that the sufficiency of the title shall be determined by the Attorney-General. In this case we walk by faith. We do not propose to delegate to any person the duty of passing upon the title. One hundred and fifty thousand dollars of the money of the United States Government is proposed by the amendment to be given for the quitclaim deed of Mrs. Blaine. I ask if there is a Senator here who will consent in his own proper person to buy property in that way? Is this $150,000 of so much less consequence than the acquisition of a site for a public building in any of the minor towns in any of the States of the Union?

I have said all I desire to say in regard to the condemnation, but I observe that my friend from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] is present, to whose remarks I shall reply briefly. The Senator from Delaware has the reputation of being, as he is in fact, a distinguished lawyer. He has had occasion often, no doubt, to proceed or prepare proceedings, or examine proceedings for condemnation in the courts of his own State, perhaps in the Federal courts also. I ask that Senator this question, he may answer it if he pleases: Did any lawyer ever prepare a petition for the condemnation of property for public purposes without stating in the bill or petition what the purpose was? I have had very considerable connection with condemnation proceedings in Illinois, and I have always supposed it to be necessary that the distinct and exact public purpose for which property is taken shall be stated. How much it may be contested I am not prepared to say, but I venture to say that no lawyer in this body ever prepared a petition or bill for the condemnation of property for public use without having stated what that use was.

I submit to the Senate and the lawyers of the Senate, if any Senator here was about to prepare, under the pending bill, a petition to a court in the District, what purpose would he indicate as being that for which the Government seeks to acquire the property? Would he say for a Supreme Court building; for the extension of the Department of Justice; or would he state that it was desired or sought to be acquired because it was thought that the theater would be offensive to the President, or that a theater would be injurious to the neighborhood? What would it be? There would be a negative condemnation there—condemned because the owner would employ it for some improper purpose. That seems to me to be the statement of this argument. It is not that the property is needed now, but the public purpose for which this amendment is proposed is because the property may be used offensively to some interest of the public.

Of course, Mr. President, I am deploring the necessity of this attempt to condemn the interests of this lessee. I do not know what the rule of damages would be in such a case. I do not know how to determine the value of the lease. It has been suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire that contracts have been made. I do not know whether that would come within any just rule of condemnation or not. I know what the friends of this measure may define as being of public use. The phrase "public use" is rather negative than otherwise. It is to preserve it from private use, or an improper private use. I say what these purposes are for which these men must give up their rights I do not know.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. May I suggest to the Senator from Illinois, in addition (because I agree fully with what the Senator has been saying as far as I am concerned), that in order to condemn this property it is necessary in the complaint to state not only that the property is desired for public use, but the particular use for which it is desired must be stated. Then if the court hold that that statement designates a public use, that is an issue that is not traversible, but in order to make it an issue that is not traversible it must be stated.

Mr. PALMER. I understand the law to be well settled that where the proper authority has determined upon the appropriation of private property, that is not traversible.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. It is not traversible.

Mr. PALMER. But I understand it must be stated, because the court must proceed without a jury. It is not a question for the jury, but the court must, from the bill or complaint, determine whether the use is public or not.

I wish to submit gravely to the Senator from Delaware if, as a lawyer, he were to-day the Attorney-General of the United States (and he deserves a much better place, for I should much prefer seeing him a judge rather than the Attorney-General), and if he were to undertake to prepare a petition to show the particular use the judge might pass upon, what would he say?

Mr. GRAY. I do not know that the point of the criticism of the Senator from Illinois is just, but I would suggest that the explanation made by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] a while ago would seem to come within the four corners of a good reason why this language is sufficient for a proceeding in condemnation. The Senator from Iowa has stated that the Government of the United States already owns the vacant corner adjacent to the Department of Justice, and that this lot separates it from a public alley some 50 or 60 feet away; and that unless the Government of the United States owns the property that is now in question it will practically diminish the area of available building space already owned by the United States, because it is a policy pursued invariably, so far as I know, in regard to buildings of the United States in other places than the city of Washington, that there is required to be at least 40 feet space all around a public building, that it may be protected from the risks of fire and may have that area in which to protect itself from encroachment otherwise. So unless we can describe as a public use the acquisition of land that will increase the holding, we have already for the purpose of giving us this required area a public use worthy of consideration. It would seem that the United States is more hampered and handicapped in this matter than we have here supposed it to be, and that from reading the language of the memorial by the lessee, it is the United States that is helpless and not this lessee.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, the United States is not helpless, but the public use must be first determined by law. It may be said arguendo that this property would be convenient for many purposes, but until this Legislature has declared the legal necessity either in express terms or by some necessary implication, no condemnation can take place. I venture to say as a matter of law that no proceeding for the condemnation of the rights of this lessee is possible upon the existing state of the law. Why condemn his interest?

Mr. GRAY. Will the Senator from Illinois allow me?

Mr. PALMER. With great pleasure.

Mr. GRAY. Admitting the force, as I did a while ago, of the criticism in some respects, although I do not think a court would adjudge the petition void or incompetent by reason of not more specifically stating the use, I do think that there ought to be a specific statement of public use; and I propose to insert as an amendment, in line 15, after the word "dollars" and before the word "which," the following:

For the erection of the buildings for the Department of Justice or for the transaction of other public business of the United States.

Mr. PALMER. I am not prepared to say whether that would bring the case within the established legal rules or not.

Mr. HALE. It reads in line 13, "said premises being hereby appropriated for the use of the United States for such buildings." That is a direct designation of the use to which it shall be put, without describing the particular building. I think that will cover the point.

Mr. PALMER. I am not prepared at this moment to determine whether that would be a sufficient designation by the legislative authority of a public use. But that is not the purpose for which I took the floor originally. I insist, as a wise, precautionary measure, that some investigation of this title should be had. I had hoped that the proper committee had given the matter some attention, and that some member of the committee could say we are buying a fee-simple title when we buy something subject to the lease. I felt no embarrassment about the provision being subject to the lease.

Mr. HALE. The Senator and the Senate may as well understand that the only flaw upon the title is a technical flaw that can not be removed, if it exists at all. It is a small fractional part, represented by an elderly person who is insane, who has no power of removing it. Mr. Blaine bought with the knowledge of that, not believing that it was significant in the purchase. But if the amendment to the amendment, which requires an absolute unqualified title is put through and the matter is submitted to the Attorney-General, he will undoubtedly decide that it is not a perfect title. While it is good enough and complete enough, and there never will be any trouble, there never will be any risk, it will not, under the practice of the Attorney-General's Department, be decided to be what is called a perfect title. The Senate may as well understand that if the amendment is left in that way it is the end of the whole proposition.

Mr. FRYE. I ask my colleague if that was not inspected by the lessee?

Mr. HALE. Fully, completely, both by Mr. Blaine when he bought and by the lessee, and it was not considered, although it technically exists, as of any account in fixing the value of the land.

Mr. LINDSAY. I will ask the Senator from Maine if Mr. Blaine received a warranty deed?

Mr. HALE. He did not get this that I speak of. Nobody could give this title; nobody could make it.

Mr. LINDSAY. Did the vendor to Mr. Blaine convey the entire property and did he warrant the title to Mr. Blaine?

Mr. HALE. No; there was this nominal, and only nominal, flaw.

Mr. WHITE. Will the Senator from Maine allow me to ask him a question? If the Senator has examined the deed from the grantor of Mr. Blaine, did the deed simply purport to transfer the right, title, and interest of the vendor, or did it purport to convey the title to the specific property?

Mr. HALE. I have not examined it lately. I think it gives a warranty deed with the exception of that small interest which stands in this disabled person.

Mr. WHITE. Then it would appear that there is an actual exception of an interest; that is, that there is upon the face of the Blaine deed an exception of an interest.

Mr. HALE. The title carries the reversionary interest whenever that falls in. That is all complete. But during the life of that person the interest of that person can not be conveyed by anyone.

Mr. STEWART. Such a condition would not prevent the United States from getting a good title. Proceedings can be had and the court can take care of any title that may be out.

Mr. HALE. If necessary that can be done afterwards. Of course it is not a real obstruction.

Mr. STEWART. Where there is public necessity to have the property for public use, no matter how the title is situated, the court can make a perfect title.

Mr. PALMER. I supposed we were making just compensation. The Senator's proposition is that the United States may hereafter perfect its title by condemnation proceedings.

Mr. STEWART. They can do it in this proceeding. They can condemn this particular property and close out every interest.

Mr. PALMER. The amendment does not so provide.

Mr. STEWART. They can provide for it; and that is usual.

Mr. PALMER. But this person, whose name has not been mentioned, but whose condition has been described, would be entitled to compensation for whatever his or her interest may be; and that would be a sum to be paid in addition to the $150,000. I grant if the public use is declared it operates for all time, and that the public right is paramount to every species of title or interest; but here we are to get Mrs. Blaine's title. We may perfect that title by proceedings against others, but we pay her $150,000, a sum which the Senator from Missouri says is too much. We may get title by buying of other people, by condemnation proceedings. How much would it cost to extinguish this other title? I repeat that none of us would engage in an operation the twentieth part of the importance of this without assuring ourselves by all the appropriate means of the absolute perfectness of the title.

In respect to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware, making some formal declaration of a public use, I have not yet examined that amendment and am not prepared to express an opinion as to whether it is proper.

Mr. GRAY. I offer that amendment.

Mr. HALE. Let us see where it comes in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," line 15, page 11, insert:

For the erection of buildings for the Department of Justice, or for the transaction of other public business of the United States.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I think it is obvious—it is at least obvious to me—that this property ought to be acquired by the United States. I judge that from an inspection of the ground. But I differ somewhat with reference to the procedure to be employed and the details suggested for carrying out the plan. Under ordinary circumstances it seems to me that the way a business man would act in this affair would be to provide for a condemnation suit, making all parties in interest defendants or respondents, as the case may be; to bring them into court and force them to set up their respective titles and then apportion the money to be paid, taking as a basis the absolute fee of the whole estate. Of course the lessee can not expect to get more money than is paid to the owner of the fee. On the other hand, the owner of the fee ought not to get more for her title than the entire value of the whole estate.

It appears that the objection to the amendment suggested by the Senator from Mississippi is that if we submit this matter to the scrutiny of a lawyer he will report that the title is not perfect; and it appears that the imperfection consists in the fact that there is a portion of the title vested in some other person. How much we are not informed.

Mr. President, it appears to me that this is a most slipshod manner of purchasing or attempting to purchase real estate. Certainly we would not in our private affairs proceed in such a way. There is not a Senator upon this floor who knows, or if he knows he has not told us, how much of this title is in an uncertain condition. We are told that it is a small interest. How small? How great? What appears small to the Senator from Maine may seem very great to me, or vice versa. At least we ought to know what we are buying. If we are getting a good title to three-fourths, or five-sixths, or nineteen-twentieths of this estate, all right. Then we should provide for the Government proceeding to condemn the balance.

I am in favor of acquiring title to this property, but I am not in favor of proceeding in such a way as to leave an interest entirely apart from these proceedings vested in some individual and concerning which there may be trouble hereafter. No lawyer would advise a client to do such a thing as that. Is there any Senator here used to passing upon titles to realty who would say to his client, "Why, John Jones has some interest in this property, but I have heard from Bill Smith that the interest is a small one; go ahead, and probably you will never be annoyed hereafter; and if you are annoyed I am assured by a friend of mine around the corner that the annoyance will be of a small character?"

Mr. HALE. Let me remind the Senator again that in the last four years two very shrewd transactions were conducted and this property was examined into, and it was not considered that this technical incumbrance was of any account or abated in any degree from the value paid for the property. It is not a vague, conjectural thing, as the Senator indicates, that may swamp almost the entire value of the property or embarrass the Government. When Mr. Blaine bought he went into it thoroughly. He found there was this technical defect, and only technical, that could not be removed, and he never paid a dollar less for the property because of it. Nobody ever will.

When the contract was made with the present owner, Mrs. Blaine, for the lease upon which the parties bought and proposed to put a valuable property, they examined into it very thoroughly and found that while it was there existing and could not be removed it amounted to nothing. It was not estimated at all; it did not reduce the value. If the Government takes it it will never be troubled; there will never be any necessity of any proceeding; but it is right and proper that I should have stated there is this defect, which amounts to nothing as a barrier.

Mr. VOORHEES. Let me ask the Senator from Maine a question. Has this flaw in the title ever prevented a sale between private parties or any transaction in regard to this property between private parties heretofore?

Mr. HALE. Not in the least. Whoever has investigated it has found it has faded away and has not been considered as worth a moment's consideration, although it does stand there and will stand for the few remaining years of the life of this person, an old woman. I do not even know the exact proportionate part. It is very small, so small that it has never cut a figure.

Mr. WHITE. If the Senator from Maine could guarantee that this insane lady would remain so (and it seems that it is a chronic case) and that there would be no guardian appointed, perhaps we might rest in security; but I suggest that the mere fact that the owner of the property is not mentally competent would not make the average person feel secure in his estate if proceedings might be taken to a probate or surrogate court to have an inquiry instituted and redeem or recover the fractional part of an estate which she owns.

Mr. HALE. All the other parties to whom this lady's interest would descend have joined; the title is all closed up; it is only dependent upon that short life; and, as I have said, it does not cut any figure really. Of course, if Senators want to defeat this proposition and throw it off entirely, and do not think we ought to buy this property, they can take one reason or another for opposing it, and if it is thrown out then the present owner, Mrs. Blaine, will be thrown back to her lease. But it may as well be understood that if this is insisted upon no Attorney-General will certify that it is technically a complete and perfect title.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to say to the Senator from Maine that I am not antagonizing this purchase. I am in favor of it and expect to vote for it; but I am trying to make the matter as nearly perfect as practicable. In other words, I would dislike very much to be a party to a transaction which would result in the Government of the United States afterwards ascertaining that it had not obtained the absolute title to property for which it had paid the full value, the generous value. For that reason I have made these suggestions.

Let us grant even that the Attorney-General can not report that the title is perfect; at least he can tell us how much we have. No one here can do that. We know that the interest is small, because other parties have bought, but it is a purchase upon faith, which ought never to be advised by any intelligent lawyer. We are here paying for it, because some one else has done certain things in reference to the real estate, and for that reason I believe we are acting improvidently.

I suggested some time ago an amendment which was practically adopted, which removed the objection that was raised by the Senator from Mississippi concerning the rental value of the estate. I believe the purchase will prove a good one for the United States. If we ascertain that there is an outstanding interest in somebody there is no provision made by the amendment for condemnation proceedings. If we adopt the amendment we will provide that the lessee's interest may be condemned, whatever that may be. I think it would be greatly over $30,000, but that is not by any means determinative with me of the merit of the proposition. There is no provision made here for the acquisition of anything save Mrs. Blaine's title and the lessee's title.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It seems to me the suggestions of the Senator from California, while they sound important, are really rather trifling. Here are some individuals who have time and again negotiated with each other for the purchase of this property; people who could not condemn under the law. They were not corporations who acquire the right to avail themselves of the exercise of the right of eminent domain. The title was good enough for them, and they have bought just as if there were no question of a leasehold interest or anything else. This property, we will say, was still owned by Mrs. Blaine as it was immediately after Mr. Blaine's death, and if the Government wanted to buy it as an addition to the ground which might be eventually needed for the Attorney-General's Office, we would not be haggling over the terms of the title. If it was a title good enough for these other people it will be good enough for us. There is not a railroad corporation or any institution in the country that can exercise the right of eminent domain that does not again and again avail itself of just such titles.

The Senator from California would suggest that this is the last time we can ever exercise the right of eminent domain. I do not suppose he seriously intends for us to believe that if there is some small outstanding title left in this property the Government is liable to be ousted of its title, for I suppose there will be future sessions after this and after he and I have passed out of Congress, and if it is necessary to exercise further the right of the Government a law can be passed for that purpose.

It may be true, possibly it is true that this is not the cleanest and best title we could wish it to be. There are very few titles in cities of any age that are exactly what we would like them to be. But this has been good enough for very intelligent and clever people to rest purchases and sales upon.

Mr. STEWART. For sixty years.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I do not think it looks well in us if we really favor the purchase of this property to try to find some way out of it by imaginary obstacles which do not seem to have any practical existence in deterring people from dealing with the property.

Mr. VOORHEES. Will the Senator from Colorado allow me to make a single suggestion? Certainly the Government has just as much power to condemn for public use the title or interest of an insane person as anybody else.

Mr. WHITE. There is no doubt of it.

Mr. VOORHEES. They can come into court and be made parties and the transaction closed as to her just as well as to the rest.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That is correct.

Mr. VOORHEES. If one-half of this property was owned by an insane person, let alone a mere fraction, it is just as easily dealt with as the rest of the title. I see no difficulty about this matter. The government that wants property exercises its right of eminent domain and takes it. It does not make any difference whether the party is in condition to trade, compos or non compos, the government takes care of her interest in the whole transaction and takes the whole title, whatever it is. That is the way out of this. If the provision is not in shape to carry out that idea it should be put in shape, and there is very little trouble in doing it.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I do not dispute the proposition laid down by the Senator from Indiana. Of course it is familiar learning, if it can be called learning at all, that the interest of an insane person may be condemned in appropriate proceedings. Nor do I think that the Senator from Colorado could have understood me to say that this was the last chance to obtain such a title as the insane person might have. I made no such statement. My criticism upon this provision is that there is no arrangement made or suggested for the acquisition of this outstanding title. I suggest an amendment which will meet my views, because notwithstanding the remarks lately made I am in favor of the amendment and expect to vote for it whether I get my amendment to it adopted or not.

Mr. HALE. Let us see what the Senator proposes.

Mr. WHITE. After the word "premises," in line 24, page 11, I propose to insert:

Or any outstanding interest in the premises that may not be included in or transferred by a deed as aforesaid from the said Harriet Stanwood Blaine.

Mr. HALE. That is all right.

Mr. WHITE. In other words, this amendment confers the direct authority upon the officers of the Government if they find that there is any outstanding interest to proceed and to condemn it. If it is of a trivial value there will be a trivial recovery.

Mr. HALE. There is no objection to that amendment to the amendment. Let it be adopted.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President, we have this case here. So far as Mrs. Blaine is concerned it is to be a matter of bargain and sale. Mrs. Blaine is to be paid the full value of the property, and we are told that whilst there is a technical defect in her title it is so infinitesimal that it does not depreciate the value of the property at all. Yet we are asked to pay the full purchase price in cash, and the vendee is to take the chances of the outstanding title rather than the vendor.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the Senator from Kentucky allow me to make a suggestion to him?

Mr. LINDSAY. Certainly.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I have not heard anybody, except the Senator from Missouri, who gave a general estimate of values, say that Mrs. Blaine was to be paid the full value of the property nor do I think it is a fact. I think the Senator from Kentucky should understand, if he does not already, that Mrs. Blaine does not want to sell her interest in this property. She is not here to sell the property. She prefers to be let alone, so far as she personally is concerned. She is not here as a suitor to Congress to pay her any sum for this property. She is secured in an annuity on the property paying her $5,000 a year. The value of that annuity running for ninety-nine years is said by actuaries to amount to $175,000. That is her position. We are not an eleemosynary institution for the benefit of Mrs. Blaine. That is not the purpose or the object of this amendment.

Mr. LINDSAY. I have not yet heard it disputed that $150,000 is the full market value of this property.

Mr. HALE. That is disputed.

Mr. GRAY. By the computation of an actuary.

Mr. HALE. The value not of the entire property, but of the owner's property, not the lease. The value of Mrs. Blaine's property can be computed by an actuary as the value of any annuity can be computed, and it amounts to many thousands of dollars more than the sum fixed here, saying nothing of the right that the lessees have beyond that. Nobody can claim that the value of that property having been fixed by a fair trade it would ever be estimated to be less than $150,000 or considerably more than that amount. So I say it is disputed that this property is not worth $150,000. It has proved to be worth a great deal more than that.

Mr. LINDSAY. I think I may safely say that during the last five years it could have been bought for much less than $150,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, it has been on the market for two years at a very much less price, and has not found a taker.

Mr. LINDSAY. The point I want to make is that here seems to be a case of bargain and sale—and I will show it is not before I am through with it—in which the vendee pays the money and undertakes to risk the defect in the title, and the vendor receives the money and declines to warrant the title. If this property has been sold time and again, and this outstanding defect has been regarded as infinitesimal, I want to know whether, in each case, the vendee has taken the risk and the vendor has declined to warrant, or is the United States to be the first vendee that undertakes to risk the outstanding title and to accept a deed that does not contain a warranty.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The vendee has not accepted.

Mr. LINDSAY. The lessee has accepted a lease, and the Government of the United States now proposes to buy a new title subject to the lease, and to take the chance, without a warranty title, that this outstanding defect amounts to nothing. This presents another very curious phase. This amendment does not show that Mrs. Blaine has agreed to sell, but it puts the Government at her mercy, to buy at her will if she chooses to sell, without any guaranty whatever that she will sell in case the Government chooses to buy. Why this unilateral agreement which binds the Government and leaves the vendor of the property absolutely free to sell, or not to sell, at her option?

Why has not a commission been appointed to negotiate with Mrs. Blaine and ascertain what she is willing to do? Why has not a contract, which binds Mrs. Blaine as well as this amendment binds the Government, been entered into, so that we shall deal evenhanded with the vendor of this property? Why should the Government be bound and the vendee left absolutely free? I take it that Mrs. Blaine has not agreed to sell, and I take it that she will not agree to sell. This lease was made to Albaugh for an express purpose, and his intentions were known to Mrs. Blaine at the time the lease was made. It can not be that she intends voluntarily to enter into an arrangement with the Government whereby the Government will be able to defeat the very purpose for which the lease was made.

Mr. HALE. Let me say there to the Senator that, so far as the uses of the property were concerned, it was not known at the time of the lease what was contemplated to be done with the property by the lessee; the project for a theater had not then been mooted; other things had been suggested, but not that. So that is an answer to what the Senator says about any purpose at the time of the lease to devote this land to the building of a theater.

As to whether Mrs. Blaine is willing to sell the property and of the desirability of negotiating and making a contract with her, I will say to the Senator that this amount was fixed by the committee because there had been full conference with Mrs. Blaine and her attorneys, and she has stated, as I have stated before, and as the Senator from Colorado stated, that she was not pushing this matter, but was willing to take this amount of $150,000, and deed the property to the Government for that. So there is no need for negotiations; it is plain sailing, and the Senate ought to understand it. It is desirable to take this property at a fair rate, and the Government will get it and get the deed and get the remainder by condemnation. There need be no question about title. Mrs. Blaine's interest is different from any other interest, and ought not to be put into condemnation. It is clearly estimated, and that is why the committee have taken this process for acquiring the property.

Mr. LINDSAY. It was known at the time the lease was made that Albaugh was a theater man, and the public prints for the last twelve months—

Mr. HALE. Albaugh did not get into this transaction at the time. The lease runs to Paul D. Connor, and the talk was that the property was to be used for another purpose. Albaugh had nothing to do with it. He came on later. I never heard of Albaugh at that time, nor did anybody else. The talk was that the property was to be for some other structure, perhaps an apartment house, or something of that kind. The theater project came in afterwards.

Mr. LINDSAY. I can not speak from personal knowledge of any of those things, but it is a notorious fact that the public press has been full during the last year of statements in regard to Albaugh's attempt to secure property in the city upon which to build a theater.

Mr. HALE. Not this property.

Mr. LINDSAY. Not this particular property; but as soon as Albaugh came into the case and became the beneficiary of this lease it was announced that the property would be used for theatrical purposes. But that is immaterial.

The Senator says that Mrs. Blaine is willing to sell. She has made no contract to sell and she can change her mind to-morrow. Even if she had put her agreement in writing to sell it would not have bound her, because nobody representing the Government had the right to contract with her. So the Government agrees to buy and makes it the imperative duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase and to pay, and it leaves Mrs. Blaine perfectly free to sell or not to sell.

Now, we come to the question of condemnation. Whilst I raise no question of the power of the Government to condemn any and all property which may be necessary for public use, I do deny the power of the Government to take the property of the citizen against his will, even for just compensation, merely upon the supposition that five years hence, or ten years hence, the Government may want to use the property for a public purpose. The statement made by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], that the propriety of a present condemnation was apparent because five years hence the property would be worth much more, is the very reason we should not condemn at the present time. The Government may take property when it needs it, but if property is likely to enhance in value during the time the Government does not need it the citizen is entitled to the benefit of that enhancement and not the Government, and any attempt of the Government to intervene to take the property in advance of the public necessity for the use of it is an arbitrary exercise of power which the Congress of the United States ought not to countenance, and which the Constitution does not countenance or contemplate.

This is not merely the right of this man to have his interest in the realty paid for; but if he has made lawful contracts looking to a future use and those contracts are valuable he is entitled to be paid for them also, and if the deprivation of his power to control this property results in his violation of contracts which he may be required to answer in damages, the Government must pay him for that injury as well as for the value of the property. So, if Mrs. Blaine's interest in this property is worth $150,000, the interest of this man in the lease can not be worth less, as it is to run for ninety-nine years.

I hold to this: If this be a present use let us declare what that use is, and the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware that at some time some public building may be, or will be, put upon the property, is not a sufficient designation of the public use to which it is to be put. If there be a present necessity for this property let us declare what the use is to be, and let us condemn the interest of all those with whom we can not agree.

Mr. PUGH. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BUTLER in the chair). Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. LINDSAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. PUGH. Mr. President, I am in favor of acquiring this property for public use, either by the exercise of the power of purchase or by a proceeding in the courts to condemn it to the public use. If it becomes necessary, as I am satisfied it will, to perfect this title and to get the fee for which the Government pays, it will be necessary to institute proceedings in court. It is indispensably necessary to give the court jurisdiction of that subject-matter that the person who has the title shall be named and that the character of the title shall be specified in the proceedings for the purpose of enabling the court to ascertain its value or for a jury to ascertain it upon evidence; and if the bill of proceeding to condemn does not disclose the character of the title sought to be condemned, how can the court proceed to have the value of it ascertained upon evidence?

Then, again, the court would have no jurisdiction at all, its action would be coram non iudice and void, unless the public use was specifically stated in the bill. You could not give the court jurisdiction to condemn unless you stated specifically the public use for which it was condemned.

I agree with the Senator that the specification in the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware is wholly insufficient to give jurisdiction to the court to condemn this for a general, possible, future, contingent public use. You have to specify the use in order to give jurisdiction to the court.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, all this talk about condemnation, so far as the interests of Mrs. Blaine are concerned, amounts to nothing, and we are fighting windmills in regard to that matter. Mrs. Blaine, through her attorney, agrees to take $150,000 for her interest, and the only question before us is, what is that interest? That is the whole of it. This amendment, which is not the amendment proposed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, but one drawn by Mrs. Blaine's attorney, changes the nature of the proceeding as to her interest. The original amendment provided for acquiring her interest by purchase or condemnation; but her attorney struck out "upon condemnation" and put in the simple sale of her interest, whether it was one thing or another, and it amounts simply to a quitclaim conveyance. I do not think any lawyer will doubt that.

Mr. McLAURIN. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. McLAURIN. Is it denied, as stated by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], that Mrs. Blaine in the lease to Paul D. Connor conveyed the remainder to her heirs?

Mr. VEST. I never examined that lease critically. I glanced over it, and saw it was in the ordinary form in which leases are drawn in the District of Columbia.

Mr. McLAURIN. If that is true, then would the Government get anything more than the rents, profits, and issues for ninety-nine years, or anything more than the interest Mrs. Blaine has in this property for ninety-nine years?

Mr. VEST. I am not prepared to say that it would. But I was about to go on, when interrupted, to say that—for I am not in any sense responsible for this amendment, and it is not the one which passed through our Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds—I propose to strike out in line 8 of the amendment of the committee the words "all the right, title, and interest of" and insert "fee simple from;" and, then, in line 9, after the name "Blaine," to insert "and all others interested;" so as to read:

For the purchase of a fee-simple title from Harriet Stanwood Blaine, and all others interested, to the premises in the city of Washington.

Then follows the description.

For the sum of $150,000.

Then in lines 16 and 17 I move to strike out certain words and insert "upon the execution and delivery by the owners of said property of a deed to be approved by the Attorney-General, conveying title in fee to said property to the United States Government."

It seems to me unnecessary to worry ourselves about condemnation proceedings as to Mrs. Blaine's interest.

Mr. LINDSAY. Those words are not in the amendment.

Mr. VEST. I propose to insert them.

Mr. LINDSAY. The Senator from Maine says that if those words be put in Mrs. Blaine will not convey.

Mr. VEST. Then the United States will not purchase, and that will be the end of it.

Mr. LINDSAY. That is what I wanted to ask.

Mr. VEST. As a matter of course we do not propose to pay Mrs. Blaine $150,000 for a quitclaim.

Mr. LINDSAY. That is exactly what you get and nothing else.

Mr. VEST. This is a fair and reasonable construction of the meaning of the contract, because Mrs. Blaine in the lease she has made claims that she is the fee-simple owner; and if she could lease the property she has a right to convey it, and she ought not to make any objection to conveying in fee what she has leased, claiming to be the fee-simple owner.

I said before very frankly, and I repeat it now, that $100,000 is not only a reasonable, but a large price for this whole property, including the interest of these lessees, whoever they may be. I state here on the authority of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], who is a member of the Appropriations Committee and of the subcommittee having this matter in charge, that the lessees estimate their interest, if the transaction was stopped now, at $30,000. Some gentleman has sent me a paper stating that Mr. Albaugh would not give up his interest for $30,000 nor $130,000. That is absurd. The whole property at $100,000 would be well sold; and for us to pay Mrs. Blaine $150,000, and then go into a condemnation proceeding, and have Mr. Albaugh or Mr. Connor, or whoever are the lessees, to prove up $100,000 in this kind of contingent damages, of which the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY] speaks, would be robbery, and hardly under the forms of law.

Mr. FRYE. Does the Senator from Missouri think that $150,000 is any too much for Mrs. Blaine to receive for the surrender of her rights there?

Mr. VEST. Yes, I do think so.

Mr. FRYE. And I say the actuaries make it $175,000, and they do that counting interest at 4 per cent; and for the next fifty years the Senator knows interest in this county will not be 4 per cent, and it will not be 3 per cent, for as a country grows larger and richer the interest always goes down; it is inevitable. I believe Mrs. Blaine's interest is worth $200,000 to-day.

Mr. VEST. If Mrs. Blaine should take $150,000 for her interest, whether more or less, at 4 per cent, it would be $6,000 a year interest, and under this lease I have heard it estimated that her income would be about $5,000 a year.

Mr. FRYE. It would be $4,500 a year.

Mr. VEST. It would average $5,000 a year.

Mr. FRYE. But the Senator understands Mrs. Blaine on the $150,000 would be obliged to pay taxes, whilst under this agreement she would pay no taxes whatever.

Mr. VEST. That makes a difference, as a matter of course.

Mr. FRYE. Then, again, I should like to ask the Senator how he is going to get a fee-simple title from the insane woman who has been referred to?

Mr. VEST. That can be very easily done. There can be a guardian ad litem appointed to answer in any proceeding upon the part of this insane person, and title can be vested in that way just as well as by a conveyance in fee from an insane person.

Mr. FRYE. If the Senator will permit me, he forgets another thing. In estimating Mrs. Blaine's interest the whole property reverts at the end of ninety-nine years to the family.

Mr. VEST. It makes no difference whether there is a reversion or not; unless the United States Government gets title in fee it is robbery to pay this amount of money, $150,000 down, for a quitclaim, and then, in addition, to go into a court in this District with every jury against the Government. We have had our experience in regard to condemnation proceedings here. I was on the subcommittee on the bill to locate the post-office property on Pennsylvania avenue, which we were compelled to have, and we were offered that property by the owners at five and six dollars a foot, but the very minute they found the United States wanted it they would not take $12 nor $15 a foot for it. You could bring in the real estate men here and they would swear that was a reasonable price for the property. If you should to-morrow want any piece of property in this District it would go up immediately treble and quadruple, and a jury would find against you because it is the Government of the United States, and there is no limitation to the amount of money that you can take out of the Treasury if you can get it.

Mr. SQUIRE. I would ask the Senator from Missouri if he knows, or, if he is not prepared to state, perhaps the Senator from Maine or some other Senator may be, as to whether it is true or not that Mrs. Blaine is unwilling that this property shall be disposed of and pass to the Government, and if the arrangements which have been made with Mr. Albaugh can be changed.

I have heard statements which are very contradictory upon that subject. The first statement I heard was that Mrs. Blaine was very much opposed to it, as it is very much against her interests; and for that reason I was urged to vote against this proposition. I have learned to-day from a Senator on this floor that she is not averse to the obtaining of this property by the Government in accordance with the terms to the amendment to this bill.

Mr. VEST. I do not know anything about Mrs. Blaine's wishes or opinions, but I have been informed—in fact it has been stated on the floor—that this amendment was brought to the Committee on Appropriations by Mrs. Blaine's lawyer, and brought there by her friend, the Senator from Maine, and he has stated here that she was willing to take $150,000. Now, I wish to say once for all for myself—and then I shall be done with the matter—I was willing to support, as chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, the original amendment, which provides for obtaining a fee-simple title of Mrs. Blaine, and of everybody else, by the condemnation or purchase of this property. I have never had but one opinion about the matter, and that was that it ought to belong to the Government of the United States.

As to this talk about not being able to condemn property without specifying that it was to be used for a post-office or for some specific public building, I do not think that is the law. If the Government of the United States is prepared to go into court and say it wants property for its own purposes, for public buildings, that is sufficient, that is a public use, and we are not bound to file a bill of particulars in advance as to what the Government will do with it. We have a right to exercise eminent domain for the great purposes of carrying on the Government for the people of this country.

Eleven years ago I pleaded with the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to buy this property at $65,000—not a quitclaim, but a fee simple. It was offered to us then with a warranty deed for $65,000, but the majority of the committee, for fear that the Supreme Court building would be put there, instead of being put opposite this Capitol on the square just east of us, voted down my proposition, and now we are asked, at the lowest calculation, $180,000—$150,000 for a quitclaim deed, and an estimate of $30,000 for the damages which will come to Mr. Albaugh or Mr. Connor, or the other gentlemen interested. I am willing to pay $180,000, which is nearly twice, in my judgment, the amount the property is worth, in order to acquire it, rather than to see a theater put there in that particular locality, and the property of the Government, which it already owns, where the Attorney-General's Office has been located, rendered almost worthless; but I am not willing to pay this large price for a quitclaim deed, and then go into a nebulous and uncertain litigation, with what I know of juries in this District in condemnation cases, in order to obtain the rights of this lessee.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Missouri, the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, whether at present the status of this matter is such that he thinks it would be better to proceed to condemn the entire interest of all parties, so that we might know just exactly what we should have to pay? I understand that the present appearance of the matter is such that, in his judgment, there is risk that the Government may have to expend two or three times more than the property is worth. I should like to know exactly whether the committee is in favor of the amendment as it now stands, with the information we have before us?

Mr. VEST. Every member of the committee is acting for himself on this new amendment. I was authorized to report the other amendment, which provided for the condemnation of all interests; but this is a very different proposition, and, of course, I can answer for no one but myself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. FRYE. Let the amendment be again stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," in line 15, on page 11, it is proposed to insert:

For the erection of buildings for the Department of Justice or for the transaction of other public business of the United States.

Mr. HALE. I thought that had been adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has not been adopted. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. Now, let us have a vote on the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE], which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "premises," in line 24 of the amendment, it is proposed to insert:

Or any outstanding interest in the premises, which may not be included in or transferred by a deed as aforesaid, from the said Harriet Stanwood Blaine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. I move, in line 8, to strike out the words "all the right, title, and interest of," and to insert "a fee-simple title from," so as to read:

For the purchase of a fee-simple title from Harriet Stanwood Blaine.

Mr. HALE. That is precisely what the Senate has already voted upon, and voted down.

Mr. VEST. Let us have the question of order decided. I do not think the Senate has voted that amendment down.

Mr. HALE. It has been voted down once.

Mr. VEST. That amendment has not been offered in these words.

Mr. HALE. Not this amendment, but substantially that proposition. Let us have a vote on it, however. I shall not take up the time of the Senate.

Mr. LINDSAY and Mr. GEORGE called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GIBSON (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. PROCTOR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. WHITE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. COKE. I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH]. I do not know how he would vote, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. CAFFERY. I am paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. POWER].

Mr. CAREY. I desire to inquire whether the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL] has voted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted.

Mr. CAREY. I withhold my vote, as I am paired with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL] and do not know how he would vote.

Mr. GALLINGER. The junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] was called from the Chamber a few moments ago and asked me to pair with him, saying he was in favor of the general proposition. I presume if he were present he would vote "nay" on this amendment and I should vote "yea."

Mr. BLACKBURN. I desire to inquire whether the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] has voted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am paired with the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] and withhold my vote in his absence.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER].

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am assured that if the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] were present he would vote "nay." Therefore I will vote. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 27; as follows:

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. WHITE. I offer a substitute for the committee amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all from and including line 8, page 11, down to and including line 10, on page 12, and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to acquire by condemnation, in the same manner and in the method provided for the condemnation of certain real estate in the city of Washington by sections 8, 4, 5, and 6 of the "Act to authorize the acquisition of certain parcels of real estate embraced in square No. 323 of the city of Washington to provide an eligible site for the city post-office," approved June 25, 1890, the following parcels of real estate in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, namely: All of lot 9 in square 221, and part of lot 8 in said square adjoining said lot 9, said parcels of land being what is known as the James G. Blaine premises, situated on Lafayette Square, in the city of Washington aforesaid; and for this purpose a sum sufficient is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. WHITE. I desire simply to state that the substitute which I propose is the original amendment suggested by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. It proposes to condemn the interest of everybody in the property without in advance providing for the payment of any specific sum to any part owner.

Mr. HALE. I hope the amendment of the Senator from California will be voted down. We had much better do nothing. There could be nothing more unjust than that, with the clearly definable interest which Mrs. Blaine has, she should be put to the mercy of a jury. I do not believe there are many Senators here who desire to do that. I hope the amendment will be voted down. It would be better to do nothing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HALE and Mr. VEST called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAREY (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL]. Not knowing how he would vote I withhold my vote.

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

Mr. GIBSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS].

Mr. PERKINS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. ROACH]. Not knowing how he would vote upon this amendment I withhold my vote.

Mr. PETTIGREW (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. PROCTOR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

Mr. WHITE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP]. Were he present I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am paired with the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH]. If he were present he would vote "nay," probably, and I should vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 32; as follows;

Mr. CAREY. I offer two amendments to the pending bill, which I ask may be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 6870) for the relief of James Phelan, internal-revenue collector at Detroit, Mich.;

A bill (H. R. 8391) for the relief of Michael Ryan;

A bill (H. R. 8882) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Illinois River, at or near the town of Hennepin; and

A bill (H. R. 8884) granting a pension to Alexander M. Laughlin.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 8237) for the relief of William H. Buckley, late first lieutenant One hundred and ninety-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteers; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 6870) for the relief of James Phelan, internal-revenue collector at Detroit, Mich., was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The bill (H. R. 8391) for the relief of Michael Ryan was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (H. R. 8882) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Illinois River at or near the town of Hennepin was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (H. R. 8884) granting a pension to Alexander M. Laughlin was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8518) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 12, line 15, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ten" and insert "fifty;" so as to read:

For repairs and preservation of public buildings: Repairs and preservation of custom-houses, court-houses, post-offices, marine hospitals, quarantine stations, and other public buildings under the control of the Treasury Department, $250,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 19, after the word "dollars," to insert:

For artesian well, water and sewer connections, $1,200; in all, $5,400;

So as to make the clause read:

For quarantine station, Reedy Island, Delaware River: For improvement of grounds to protect from overflow, $4,200; for artesian well, water and sewer connections, $1,200; in all, $5,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 24, after the word "dollars," to insert:

For barracks for cabin passengers, $2,500; in all, $6,500;

So as to make the clause read:

For quarantine station, Delaware Breakwater, Delaware: For naphtha launch for boarding vessels, $4,000; for barracks for cabin passengers, $2,500; in all, $6,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 26, after the word "dollars," to insert:

But of this amount not exceeding $3,000 may be expended for personal services of mechanics employed from time to time for casual repairs only.

So as to make the clause read:

Vaults, safes, and locks for public buildings: For vaults, safes, and locks, and repairs to the same, for all public buildings under control of the Treasury Department, exclusive of personal services, except for work done by contract, $40,000; but of this amount not exceeding $3,000 may be expended for personal services of mechanics employed from time to time for casual repairs only.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, after line 20, to insert:

Spectacle Island range lights, Massachusetts: For establishing range lights on Spectacle Island, Boston Harbor, Massachusetts, $9,350.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, after line 3, to insert:

Kennebec River lights, Maine: For the establishment on Kennebec River, Maine, of a light, range lights, and fog signal at or near Doubling Point; a light at Ames Ledge; a light at or near the southwest point of Perkins Island; a light at or near Squirrel Point, and a day beacon on or near Ram Island; and for sites for same, not to exceed in all $17,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, after line 10, to insert:

Plum Beach light and fog-signal station, Rhode Island: For establishing a light and fog-signal station at or near Plum Beach, Narragansett Bay, Rhode Island, $25,000, and the total cost of establishing such light and fog-signal station complete, under a contract which is hereby authorized therefor, shall not exceed $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, after line 21, to insert:

Lower Cedar Point light station, Potomac River, Maryland: For reestablishing Lower Cedar Point light station, Potomac River, Maryland, $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. After line 25, page 16, I desire to offer an amendment coming from the committee. It is to rebuild a light-house which was washed away by the last ice flow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BUTLER in the chair). The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add after the amendment just adopted, line 25, page 16:

Smiths Point light-house, Chesapeake Bay, Maryland: For reestablishing the light-house at Smiths Point, Chesapeake Bay, Maryland, recently carried away by the ice, $80,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was on page 16, after line 25, to insert:

Maumee range-light station, Ohio: For establishing a new beacon at each end of the range, to form a range both outward and inward in the line of the channel in Maumee Bay, Lake Erie, Ohio, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, after line 17, to insert:

Detroit River lights, Michigan: For the completion of the lighting of the north and south ends of Grassy Island, Detroit River, Michigan, $9,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, after line 20, to insert:

Eagle Harbor, Lake Superior, Michigan: For fog signal at Eagle Harbor, Lake Superior, Michigan, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURN. I offer an amendment to come in at the end of line 23, page 17.

Mr. COCKRELL. The understanding was that we were to run through with the committee amendments unless it was an amendment to an amendment.

Mr. WASHBURN. It is an amendment I intended to submit to the committee. It was reported by the Committee on Commerce favorably.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us go through with the committee amendments before we commence the consideration of individual amendments.

Mr. WASHBURN. All right.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 17, after line 23, to insert:

Grand Marais harbor of refuge, Lake Superior, Michigan: For a light and bell at the Grand Marais harbor of refuge, now completed, on Lake Superior, Michigan, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, after line 3, to insert:

Tibbetts Point light station, Lake Ontario and St. Lawrence River, New York: For constructing and equipping, complete for service, a fog signal, $4,300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 17, on page 19.

Mr. COCKRELL. In lines 15 and 16, on page 19, there is a mistake. I move to strike out the words "the north end of;" so as to read:

For establishing a light and fog-signal station on North Manitou Island, Lake Michigan, Michigan, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 20, after line 11, to insert:

Tenders for the Light-House Service: For constructing, equipping, and outfitting two new steam tenders for buoyage, supply, and inspection purposes in the Light-House Service, at a cost not to exceed $75,000 each, $150,000, to be immediately available; and the Light-House Board is authorized to employ temporarily at Washington three draftsmen, to be paid at current rates, to prepare the plans for the light-house vessels herein provided for; such draftsmen to be paid from the appropriation for building said vessels; such employment to cease and determine on or before the date when the plans for such vessels being finished, proposals for building said vessels are invited by advertisement.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to strike out, in lines 13 and 14, the words "buoyage, supply, and inspection purposes in;" so as to read:

For constructing, equipping, and outfitting two new steam tenders for the Light-House Service.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 21, line 16, to increase the total of appropriations for "repairs of light-houses" from $490,000 to $500,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 21, to increase the appropriation for salaries of keepers of light-houses from $890,000 to $700,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 26, to increase the total of the appropriation for expenses of light vessels from $275,000 to $300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 2, after the word "buoys," to insert "of any and all kinds," and in line 5, before the word "thousand," to strike out "three hundred and ninety" and insert "four hundred and twenty-five;" so as to make the clause read:

Expenses of buoyage: For expenses of establishing, replacing, and maintaining buoys of any and all kinds, spindles, and day beacons, and for incidental expenses relating thereto, $425,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 13, to increase the appropriation for inspecting lights from $3,000 to $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 16, before the word "hundred," to strike out "five" and insert "six;" so as to make the clause read:

For one superintendent for the coasts of Maine and New Hampshire, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 18, before the word

"hundred," to strike out "five" and insert "six;" so as to make the clause read:

For one superintendent for the coast of Massachusetts, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 20, before the word "hundred," to strike out "eight" and insert "six;" so as to make the clause read:

For one superintendent for the coasts of Rhode Island and Long Island, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 24, before the word "hundred," to strike out "eight" and insert "six;" so as to make the clause read:

For one superintendent for the coast of New Jersey, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 26, before the word "hundred," to strike out "five" and insert "six;" so as to make the clause read:

For one superintendent for the coasts of Delaware, Maryland, and Virginia, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 2, before the word "hundred," to strike out "eight" and insert "six;" so as to make the clause read:

For one superintendent of the coasts of Virginia and North Carolina, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 5, before the word "hundred," to strike out "five" and insert "six;" so as to make the clause read:

For one superintendent for the life-saving stations and for the houses of refuge on the coasts of South Carolina, Georgia, and Florida, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 8, before the word "hundred," to strike out "eight" and insert "six;" so as to make the clause read:

For one superintendent for the life-saving and lifeboat stations on the coast of the Gulf of Mexico, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 11, before the word "hundred," to strike out "eight" and insert "six;" so as to make the clause read:

For one superintendent for the life-saving and lifeboat stations on the coasts of Lakes Ontario and Erie, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 14, before the word "hundred," to strike out "eight" and insert "six;" so as to make the clause read:

For one superintendent for the life-saving and lifeboat stations on the coasts of Lakes Huron and Superior, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 17, before the word "hundred," to strike out "eight" and insert "six;" so as to make the clause read:

For one superintendent for the life-saving and lifeboat stations on the coast of Lake Michigan, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 20, before the word "hundred," to strike out "eight" and insert "six;" and in line 21, before the word "hundred," to strike out "twenty-one thousand six" and insert "twenty thousand four;" so as to make the clause read:

For one superintendent for the life-saving and lifeboat stations on the coasts of Washington, Oregon, and California, $1,000; in all, $20,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 6, on page 26.

Mr. FRYE. I wish to call the attention of the Senator who has the bill in charge to the aggregate for life-saving stations and lifeboat stations, $35,000, in line 5, page 26. There have been three bills passed since that time, and become a law, one for a life-saving station on the coast of Massachusetts, and bills for two lifeboat stations, amounting, all three of them, to $8,000. The bills have passed both branches of Congress and been approved by the President, and I should like to increase that appropriation to the amount of $8,000.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendment be made. I see no objection to it if those bills have been passed.

Mr. FRYE. They were not estimated for, because the bills had not then become a law.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand.

Mr. LODGE. I have here—I will not detain the Senate to read it—a telegram from the Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service stating that that amount of money will be needed in addition to the appropriation estimated for on account of the passage of these additional bills.

Mr. COCKRELL. Making $43,000.

Mr. FRYE. Making $43,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri consent that the amendment may come in now?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be made now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 5, page 26, strike out "$35,000" and insert "43,000;" so as to make the clause read:

For establishing new life-saving stations and lifeboat stations on the sea and lake coasts of the United States, authorized by law, $43,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 27, after line 12, to insert:

For constructing a revenue steamer of the first class, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, for service on the Pacific coast, $75,000; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to contract for building said vessel at a total cost not to exceed $175,000.

Mr. SQUIRE. Mr. President, I wish to say one word in regard to this amendment. I submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by me, and it was printed, providing for an appropriation of $200,000 for this revenue steamer. I see that the committee have adopted the idea, but have not given the full amount. They have provided for a vessel to cost $175,000, of which only $75,000 is at present appropriated.

It may be that the facts justify this change, but I was informed by the Secretary of the Treasury that he desires a vessel to cost $200,000. I ask that there be read from the desk a letter from the chief of the division of the Revenue-Cutter Service, which will explain this subject in detail.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Missouri to insist that the committee amendments shall be first acted upon?

Mr. COCKRELL. But this is a committee amendment and it is proper for the Senator from Washington to offer an amendment to it. He wants the amount of the amendment increased, and such an amendment is perfectly legitimate at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the letter as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., February 19, 1895.

SIR: In compliance with your verbal request of yesterday, I respectfully submit the following statement, showing number of steamers of the Revenue-Cutter Service now stationed at ports on the Pacific coast of the United States:

Volcott, 199 tons, at San Diego, Cal.
Rush, 308 tons, at San Francisco, Cal.
Bear, 708 tons at San Francisco, Cal. (On duty in the Bering Sea and Arctic Ocean eight months of the year.)
Corwin, 213 tons, at Astoria, Oreg.
Grant, 216 tons, at Port Townsend, Wash.

In addition to the steamer Bear the steamers Rush and Corwin are withdrawn each summer from the stations named for duty in the Bering Sea and other waters of Alaska for the protection of fur seal and other interests of the Government in that Territory. Of the five vessels above named the Bear, Rush, and Corwin only are suitable for duty at sea, and the latter is too small for the work required of her or for general patrol duty.

The weather and sea on the coasts of northern California, Oregon, Washington, and the island of Vancouver are probably as severe and rough as can be found in the known world, and vessels expected to patrol these coasts should be as staunch and powerful as can be constructed.

As authorized by section 1536, Revised Statutes, the Atlantic coast, from Eastport, Me., to Charleston, S. C., is patrolled during the four winter months of December, January, February, and March by seven revenue steamers stationed within those limits, for the purpose of assisting disabled or distressed merchant vessels. Under section 2730, Revised Statutes, revenue cutters on the Great Lakes are specially charged with aiding vessels in distress. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, seventy distressed vessels, which with their cargoes were valued at $1,700,105, and having on board 658 persons, were assisted by this fleet, and during the ten fiscal years last past 1,918 vessels, which with their cargoes were valued at $30,235,823, and having on board 18,634 persons, have been assisted, and within this time 577 have been taken out of the water and saved from drowning.

No regular patrol service for relief purposes has ever been inaugurated on the Pacific Coast because of the lack of suitable vessels to engage in it and the demand for the services of such vessels as have been available for the protection of the revenue and the interests of the Government in Alaska.

During the present winter the Department has been called upon several times to send the cutters in search of missing vessels off the Northwest coast, viz, Ivanhoe, Montserrat, and Keeweenaw, and has responded to the best of its ability with the vessels available, but with more efficient and powerful steamers better service can be rendered.

The Northwest coast is sadly in need of an efficient steam cutter, and I sincerely trust that the amendment proposed by you to the sundry civil bill, making the necessary appropriation, may receive favorable consideration by the Senate.

Respectfully, yours,

L. G. SHEPARD,
Chief of Division Revenue-Cutter Service.

Approved:

C. A. HAMLIN, Acting Secretary.

Hon. WATSON C. SQUIRE, United States Senate.

Mr. SQUIRE. I now ask to have read a letter addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations by the Secretary of the Treasury approving the amendment as intended to be submitted by me to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 30, 1896.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt from the Senate Committee on Appropriations of an amendment to House bill No. 5818 "making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes," as follows: "For constructing a revenue steamer of the first class, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, for service on the Pacific Coast, $200,000," and my views are requested as to the necessity for said revenue vessel.

In reply, I have the honor to state that the revenue cutters at present on duty on the Pacific Coast were built many years ago, and are of an age when vessels require frequent repairs and they should, as soon as practicable, be replaced with new vessels of more modern type and machinery, to insure greater efficiency; also that under an act of Congress approved March 2, 1889, the Department has dispatched each summer to Bering Sea at least three of these vessels, thereby leaving the stations to which they are regularly assigned for the protection of revenue unprotected, and the collectors of customs without adequate means of enforcing and carrying out the customs laws and regulations. In addition to this, the condition of affairs in Alaska at the present time is such as to require a revenue cutter to be stationed permanently in the waters of that Territory. This will still further reduce the number of vessels available for duty on the coasts of Washington, Oregon, and California.

It is proper to add that during the present winter the Department has, in the interests of humanity, several times sent vessels of the Revenue-Cutter Service, stationed on the Pacific Coast, to search for missing vessels of the merchant marine. In order to perform said duty in an efficient manner the service should be provided with able vessels.

I therefore urgently recommend that the proposed amendment, which is herewith returned, receive favorable consideration.

Respectfully yours,

J. G. CARLISLE, Secretary.

HON. FRANCIS M. COCKRELL, United States Senator,

Chairman Committee on Appropriations,

United States Senate.

Mr. SQUIRE. Mr. President, I do not intend to add many words; but it seems that the amendment intended to be proposed by myself was approved by the Department and the reasons are fully given. It appears that there is at the present time no patrol vessel in the Revenue-Cutter Service on the Pacific Coast, while there are seven vessels performing a corresponding duty on the Atlantic coast.

Mr. COCKRELL. We have put in the bill a provision for the vessel. That is all you want, is it not?

Mr. SQUIRE. I am grateful to the committee for the action they have taken, and I shall be content with it if they can give good reasons for reducing the amount below that estimated by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. COCKRELL. The last appropriation contained a provision for constructing a revenue steamer of the first class under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury for service on the New England coast, $75,000; limit of cost, $175,000; and another one on the Great Lakes. We were told that they can build them much cheaper than they could even last year, and that they will build first-class vessels at $175,000.

Mr. SQUIRE. And due allowance made for the difference in the kind of sea and the kind of weather?

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, yes.

Mr. SQUIRE. And the kind of vessel needed for the Pacific coast?

Mr. WHITE. I was about to ask the Senator from Missouri whether it may not be that the construction of a vessel on the Pacific coast—

Mr. COCKRELL. It applies to all of them. The light vessels that cost $100,000, they said, if we gave them three or four of them, they would build now for $70,000, and the reduction of cost is in the same proportion wherever a vessel can be built. They are only too anxious to get employment. I have not a bit of doubt but that they can get a contract. We give them authority to contract for a vessel at $175,000 that two years ago would have cost $200,000 or $225,000.

Mr. WHITE. My inquiry is simply whether the committee had taken into consideration the fact that the vessels heretofore built, as stated, were constructed upon this coast, where possibly it may be practicable to construct them at less expense?

Mr. COCKRELL. I think so.

Mr. WHITE. I presume that fact has been considered.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think there will be no trouble about it.

Mr. WHITE. I will state that the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, who had been upon the Pacific Coast and had examined this matter, made a statement to me similar to that contained in the writing placed before the Senate by the Senator from Washington, and he informed me—

Mr. COCKRELL. That was the estimate; and you see that no stress is put on the $200,000. It is the vessel they want.

Mr. SQUIRE. May I ask the chairman one other question? Why is it that the amount appropriated now is only $75,000 out of the total amount of $175,000 that the vessel is to cost?

Mr. COCKRELL. That has been the universal rule in constructing all these vessels. It takes them some time to make the plans and specifications.

Mr. SQUIRE. With the explanation of the committee I am satisfied to let the matter go, if the Senator from California is.

Mr. PERKINS. I should like to ask the committee, in estimating $175,000 for this steam revenue cutter what tonnage they estimated and what speed?

Mr. COCKRELL. We took just whatever the Secretary of the Treasury estimated. The Secretary of the Treasury put in an estimate simply the way it has been estimated before, not taking into account the reduced cost. All the estimates were made in the same way.

Mr. PERKINS. Steam vessels, like houses, can be built for almost any price. The Treasury Department, I think, recommended $200,000 to be appropriated for building a suitable revenue cutter for the Pacific Coast. I have consulted with many nautical men, those who are in the revenue service on the Pacific Coast, and all agree that the vessel should not be less than 800 tons net, and if she was 1,000 or 1,200 tons so much the better, and that she should be able to attain a speed of 15 knots per hour. Such a vessel, and I speak advisedly, constructed in accordance with the bureau of construction under the rules of the Lloyds, would cost at least $200,000.

There is a necessity for such a revenue cutter upon the Pacific Coast. I heartily indorse all that was well said in the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury to the committee upon this subject-matter. We require a revenue cutter for the Pacific Coast that will steam 15 knots an hour if necessity requires it, and one capable of taking in tow a vessel that may be in distress and also of housing and comfortably caring for the crews of distressed vessels that may be wrecked upon the coast or disabled upon the ocean.

I wish to give my testimony, too, in favor of the many gallant deeds and good services that the revenue cutters have done to the merchant marine of the Pacific Coast. They have rescued hundreds and hundreds of shipwrecked sailors. In the summer months, as the Secretary of the Treasury states, the whole Alaska coast is dependent upon the revenue service for patrol duty as well as for the rescue of whalers and sealers who have been shipwrecked there. During the past four months the revenue cutters on the Pacific Coast have been sent out cruising three and four weeks for disabled or overdue vessels.

Only two months since one of these cutters returned from a cruise after one of the cheap vessels built upon the lakes, referred to by my friend from Missouri. The steamship Keeweenaw, a sister ship built upon the lakes, loaded with coal at Nanaimo, passed by Cape Flattery out into the ocean and has never since been heard of. It was the same way with the Montserrat, another steamship, which went down with all on board. A few months since the ship Ivanhoe sailed out of Puget Sound loaded with coal and carrying a number of passengers. She went down and not a soul has been heard from. But these cutters plying on the coast brought some of the wreckage which gave evidence of the fate that had befallen them.

We do not want any such revenue cutter like the Keeweenaw that can be built for $150,000 or $175,000, but we want a good, staunch, steel vessel, capable of withstanding the storms and waves of the Pacific Ocean. While we do not have the cold and sleet and storms that prevail upon the Atlantic, yet by reason of the great velocity of the winds that prevail upon the Northwest coast, and by reason of the tides and currents formed by those from the Japanese Sea and by promontories and capes projecting out into the ocean, we do have very heavy seas and very heavy storms. In order to have these cutters render the merchants service that has been of so much value to us it is necessary that they should have the proper vessels by which to perform the service. The three revenue cutters that we now have there are about 300 tons, with an indicated horsepower of about 300, wholly inadequate even to perform the duty which is assigned to them upon their stations in protecting the coast from smugglers and properly protecting the revenue service of our country.

I shall not weary the Senate, but I could cite instance after instance by the score of the great service and the great benefit to the merchant marine which the revenue cutters, even inadequate as they are, have rendered to us on the Pacific coast. I shall not weary the Senate by talking this bill to death, but I wish the committee would, of its own motion, agree to make the amount of this appropriation $200,000 instead of $175,000. The amount appropriated for this year is sufficient, and the coming Congress will make up the remainder for the completion of this cutter, which is so greatly desired in the interest of commerce on our coast. I hope the committee will accept the amendment, and agree to the recommendation made by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. SQUIRE. Mr. President, for the sake of testing the sense of the Senate, I move to strike out "$175,000" and insert "$200,000" in lines 17 and 18.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 17, on page 27, before the word "thousand," in the amendment of the committee, it is proposed to strike out "one hundred and seventy-five" and insert "two hundred;" so as to read:

For constructing a revenue steamer of the first class, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, for service on the Pacific coast, $75,000; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to contract for building said vessel at a total cost not to exceed $200,000.

Mr. GORMAN. I hope the Senator from Washington will not press that motion. The importance of having this revenue steamer on the Pacific Coast is perfectly well understood. The Assistant Secretary of the Treasury has stated—

Mr. COCKRELL. This is not estimated for regularly, and as a matter of course there will be determined opposition to it.

Mr. GORMAN. I would say to the Senator from California that after the establishment of the great works at San Francisco, with the reduction in the cost of materials, etc., it has been demonstrated that a vessel can be built for $175,000 now of the capacity of 700 tons, which would have cost three years ago, $225,000, with greater speed than any vessel now in the service on the coast. That has grown out of the additional facilities there and the decreased cost of material.

I want to say to the Senator that in the matter of constructing vessels for the Navy of about that class, for service in the Pacific Ocean, the cost of $250,000 has been reduced to $200,000; and I will say to the Senator that, in my opinion, because of the extravagance of the amount asked for, he will put in jeopardy the whole appropriation, which is absolutely necessary. The Senator will find, I think, on inquiry at the Department, that if a vessel is constructed with strength and without all the furbelows, which are not necessary on such a vessel, we shall get a better vessel than we could three years ago for $225,000. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. PERKINS. Such a vessel as we want—I speak advisedly, and I know whereof I speak—one of the speed and tonnage which is necessary for this service, will cost $200,000. We want a vessel which can make a speed of 15 knots an hour, and the Senator from Maryland understands as well as anyone on this floor that it is speed in a steamship which costs. While we could build a vessel for the figure he has named which would steam 12 knots per hour, perhaps even for less than $175,000, yes, for $150,000, we want one which is capable of developing 1,000 horsepower or 1,500 horsepower, one that is capable of driving through the water with a speed equal to that of our steamships now plying on the Pacific Coast. I know that a steel ship of 1,000 tons which will develop sufficient horsepower to drive her 15 knots an hour can not be built and properly equipped for $175,000.

I hope that the proposed amendment will prevail and that $200,000 will be appropriated for the construction of this revenue cutter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE].

Mr. SQUIRE. Mr. President, I simply wish to add one word. I believe that the amount appropriated ought to be $200,000. I have not any doubt in my mind about that, but I shall be very glad to get $175,000, rather than not get anything.

Mr. CHANDLER. May I ask the Senator from Maryland what the Secretary of the Treasury in his letter of recommendation says?

Mr. COCKRELL. The Department has made no estimate. It has sent letters here mentioning $200,000, putting no stress upon it, but putting a decided stress upon the necessity of a vessel there. We have given exactly the amount we gave for the construction of a vessel on the Atlantic coast and upon the Gulf, and that vessel was constructed. We have appropriated for the completion of it here, and it is a suitable and strong vessel. A similar one can be constructed now cheaper than it could then, and we appropriated for this purpose $175,000.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Missouri is quite right probably about a vessel for use upon the Atlantic coast, but there is a great deal to what the Senator from California has said about the Pacific Coast, to the effect that there ought to be a larger vessel there, a more expensive vessel; and if the Secretary of the Treasury says in this letter that $200,000 is necessary for that purpose, I suggest to Senators in charge of the bill that they allow that amount to go in. If in conference it appears that $175,000 is all that is needed, the amount can be reduced; but it does seem to me, as the Senators from the Pacific Coast, with the exception of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], have satisfied themselves that this vessel ought to be built, that we ought to vote upon it, and, for one, I believe that the committee ought to accept the sum of $200,000.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Mr. President, I should prefer that the Senator from New Hampshire would permit the Senator from Oregon to speak for himself. I have been myself long since satisfied as to the necessity of this appropriation, and I never was more fully satisfied than I am now. I believe that the amount appropriated ought to be $200,000.

Mr. CHANDLER. I thought the Senator would make that speech, and it was the only thing which was necessary to convince me, to make me strongly convinced, that the committee ought to take the larger sum at this time, because they can not enlarge an appropriation in conference whereas they can reduce it.

Mr. SQUIRE. Mr. President, I wish to say one word more and then I shall not take up the time of the Senate. I merely wish to relate one important incident that happened recently. A vessel from the port of Seattle for the port of San Francisco had for one of her passengers a gentleman who had recently been the minister of the United States at Bolivia, the lamented Mr. Frederick J. Grant. This vessel went out of the Straits of Fuca and encountered a storm. She was eventually lost, as we believe; but there was an effort made—and I endeavored to secure the assistance of the Treasury Department in making that effort—to ascertain whether that vessel had been lost upon the island of Vancouver or anywhere upon the coast of Washington or Oregon; as to whether there could be found any vestiges on shore or any wreck or flotsam on sea, or any possibilities of rescue existed. We induced the Treasury Department to send out one or two revenue cutters which were there on duty in Puget Sound or its vicinity, but it took some time to get those cutters ready for sea.

When they went out into the ocean they were only able to stay out a few hours, when they were compelled to return to the Straits of Fuca. Finally a vessel was sent from San Francisco, but she did not leave for ten days or two weeks, or perhaps a longer time after the vessel to which I refer, the ill-fated Ivanhoe, had probably been lost.

It seems to me there is an object lesson for us, and it is one of the reasons why this subject has come up and been prominent in the minds of people on the Pacific Coast. This is not the only instance of this kind—I mean the distress of vessels or their loss when assistance might have been rendered—but it is the most recent one, and the fact that such a notable person was on board gave a good deal of publicity to it and interested the people in this subject.

The mariners of that coast and the ship-owning people are well satisfied, and they are persistent in their representations that the revenue-cutter service on that coast, so far as the vessels are concerned, is far below the standard of efficiency which should prevail; that these revenue cutters there are a very inferior order of vessels, with inferior machinery, inferior in sailing qualities, and in everything which should make up a proper standard for such a vessel. They are of old patterns, obsolete, practically useless, and now it is believed the Government ought to have a proper revenue cutter, not simply to run into Puget Sound and the Golden Gate and perform service around some port of entry in detecting smugglers, but largely for the sake of patrolling that coast and aiding merchant vessels in distress.

You have heard read from the desk the letter of the chief of the division of the Revenue-Cutter Service of the Treasury Department, and you have learned the number of vessels which have been saved and the number of lives which have been rescued through this instrumentality, and the number of millions of dollars saved (about $40,000,000) in the last ten years alone in the preservation of the merchant marine of this country directly through the assistance rendered to vessels in distress by United States revenue cutters.

Now, it seems we do need such a vessel for the Pacific coast. Why not build the best? We have no "patrol" whatever by revenue cutters on the Pacific Coast, and why not build a vessel that will be serviceable, and one that may do duty not only as to the ports and coast of the States on the Pacific but that may go to the remote waters of Alaska? We have very important relations with the Territory of Alaska; they are growing every year, and we are sending three revenue cutters there every year, and they are not efficient either in power or speed for the service required of them. Let us have one first-rate vessel, a better vessel than any yet furnished for this kind of service. The nature of the seafaring interests peculiar to that coast demands it.

I hope that my original amendment providing the sum of $200,000 will prevail.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, one word more. I desire to appeal to the committee and to remind them of this fact, which has doubtless escaped their attention and thought. The proposed cutter must do service for 25,000 miles of shore line in our Alaska Territory.

There has been no coal developed in Alaska thus far which we have been able to utilize on any of our vessels. This cutter must carry coal for the round trip or she must be supplied by the sailing vessels or steam vessels carrying the coal as a tender to that vessel. When the Corwin and the Bear, two cutters now on the coast, rescued the wrecked sailors, they had on board of that cutter 100 sailors, and there was hardly standing room for them in the accommodations that the cutter Corwin had at that time. The officers and crew were not only inconvenienced, but they all suffered together in the cause of humanity until another vessel could be overtaken, and the shipwrecked sailors could be distributed between them.

We should have a cutter large enough to accommodate shipwrecked sailors or passengers taken from a disabled vessel; we should have a cutter, if we are going to build one, of sufficient power to make speed, and of sufficient power to tow a disabled passenger vessel if found in distress, as vessels are frequently found. The only question, therefore, between the committee and those of us who see the necessity for having a proper cutter is $25,000. I therefore again appeal to the committee to accept the amendment, and if the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, finds that he can build a proper vessel for less money, he certainly can do so, and the money will remain in the Treasury. I earnestly appeal to the committee, and ask them to make this a committee amendment, and appropriate the sum which has been recommended by the Department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE] to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment as amended.

Mr. FRYE. I ask the Senator in charge of the bill to allow this one item to be passed until to-morrow morning immediately after again commencing action on the bill. I desire then to offer an amendment to this item.

Mr. ALDRICH. What item?

Mr. FRYE. The building of a revenue vessel on the Pacific Coast.

Mr. GORMAN. Very well. Let us go on with the other amendments.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendment referred to by the Senator from Maine be reserved until the first thing to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered, in the absence of objection.

Mr. PLATT. I am instructed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to report an amendment to the pending bill, which I ask may be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That order will be made in the absence of objection.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 27, line 26, after the word "Treasury," to insert:

Provided, That hereafter no portion of this sum shall be expended for printing United States notes or Treasury notes of larger denomination than those that may be canceled or retired;

So as to make the clause read:

For labor and expenses of engraving and printing: For salaries of all necessary clerks and employees, other than plate printers and plate printers' assistants, $420,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That hereafter no portion of this sum shall be expended for printing United States notes or Treasury notes of larger denomination than those that may be canceled or retired.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 10, after the word "Treasury," to strike out:

Provided, That no part of the appropriations made by this and the preceding paragraph shall be used for printing gold certificates, and that so much of section 12 of the act approved July 13, 1882, entitled "An act to enable national banking associations to extend their corporate existence, and for other purposes," as authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to receive deposits of gold coin with the Treasurer or assistant treasurers of the United States, and to issue certificates thereon, be, and the same is hereby, repealed, and all such certificates hereafter received into the Treasury shall be canceled: And provided further, That from and after July 1, 1895, gold certificates shall not be receivable for customs, taxes, or other dues to the United States, and shall not be counted as part of the lawful reserve of any national banking association.

And insert:

Provided, That hereafter no portion of this sum shall be expended for printing United States notes or Treasury notes of larger denomination than those that may be canceled or retired.

So as to make the clause read:

For wages of plate printers, at piece rates to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, not to exceed the rates usually paid for such work, including the wages of printers' assistants, at $1.25 a day each, when employed, $330,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That hereafter no portion of this sum shall be expended for printing United States notes or Treasury notes of larger denomination than those that may be canceled or retired.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, line 19, after the word "harbor," to insert "and the approaches to;" and in line 22, before the word "thousand," to strike out "eighteen" and insert "twenty-four;" so as to make the clause read:

For survey of unfinished portions of the Atlantic coast from Maine to Florida, including Portsmouth Harbor and Piscataqua River; Hudson River to Troy; Charleston bar and entrance, South Carolina, and necessary resurveys, including Boston Harbor, and the approaches to New Bedford Harbor, Buzzards Bay; the bar and entrance to St. Simons Sound, and Savannah River bay, $24,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, line 16, after the word "continuing," to insert: "The researches in physical hydrography relating to harbors and bars, including computations and plottings, and for;" so as to make the clause read:

For continuing the researches in physical hydrography relating to harbors and bars, including computations and plottings, and for tidal and current observations on the Atlantic, Gulf, and Pacific coasts, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, after line 19, to strike out:

For establishment of a self-registering tide gauge at Reedy Island, on the Delaware River, $700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, line 24, after the word "examination," to insert "and including the employment of such pilots and nautical experts as may be necessary;" so as to make the clause read:

For examination of reported dangers on the Atlantic, Gulf, and Pacific coasts, and to continue the compilation of the Coast Pilot, and to make special hydrographic examinations and including the employment of such pilots and nautical experts as may be necessary for the same, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, line 15, after the word "positions," to strike out "including telegraphic connections with Montreal;" so as to make the clause read:

For determinations of geographical positions and to continue gravity observations, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, line 18, after the word "for," to strike out "completing" and insert "continuing;" so as to make the clause read:

For continuing the transcontinental geodetic work on the line between the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, $13,000, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, line 19, to increase the total appropriation for field expenses from "$110,500" to "$115,800."

Mr. COCKRELL. It is suggested that there is a necessity for an executive session, and I will move an executive session with the understanding that as soon as all the executive business we have to do is transacted, the Senate will take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator move that the Senate take a recess?

Mr. COCKRELL. No; that is the understanding.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A joint resolution (S. R. 109) to fill vacancies in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution;

A joint resolution (S. R. 117) granting permission for the erection of a bronze statue in Washington, D. C., in honor of the late Prof. Samuel D. Gross, M. D., LL. D., D. C. L.; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 138) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to deliver unserviceable or condemned cannon to the mayor of Burlington, Vt., to be used in decorating Battery Park.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and, on motion of Mr. GORMAN (at 6 o'clock p. m.), the Senate took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (H. R. 8892) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for prior years, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

FORT HAYS MILITARY RESERVATION, KANS.

Mr. MARTIN, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2799) granting to the State of Kansas the abandoned Fort Hays Military Reservation in said State for the purpose of establishing western branches of the Kansas Agricultural College and of the Kansas State Normal Institute thereon, and for a public park, reported it without amendment.

CLAIMS AGAINST NICARAGUA.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Select Committee to Inquire into all Claims of Citizens of the United States against the Government of Nicaragua, to whom was referred the following resolution, submitted by himself on the 10th instant, reported it without amendment:

Resolved, That the Senate having declared there is no jurisdiction to present the claims of citizens of the United States against the Republic of Nicaragua, and said claims having been long delayed, it is respectfully submitted to the President that the same be called to the attention of the Government of Nicaragua for proper adjustment and settlement.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be placed on the Calendar.

EMPLOYEES AT MALTBY BUILDING.

Mr. LINDSAY submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized to continue the present session employees at the Maltby Building, authorized under resolution of July 26, 1893, during the coming recess of Congress.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 8892) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for prior years, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8518) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 34, line 4, for pay of assistants employed in the field or office in the Coast and Geodetic Survey to strike out:

For one assistant, $4,000;
For one assistant, $3,500;
For three assistants, at $3,000 each;
For three assistants, at $2,500 each;
For seven assistants, at $2,200 each;
For seven assistants, at $2,000 each;
For three assistants, at $1,800 each;
For three assistants, at $1,600 each;
For two assistants, at $1,400 each;
For four assistants, at $1,200 each;
For aids temporarily employed at a salary not greater than $900 per annum each, $3,600; in all, $79,500.

And insert:

For two assistants, at $4,000 each;
For one assistant, $3,500;
For four assistants, at $3,000 each;
For four assistants, at $2,500 each;
For eight assistants, at $2,200 each;
For eight assistants, at $2,000 each;
For four assistants, at $1,800 each;
For four assistants, at $1,600 each;
For three assistants, at $1,400 each;
For four assistants, at $1,200 each;
For aids temporarily employed at a salary not greater than $900 per annum each, $3,600; in all, $98,300.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, I hope the amendment will not be adopted by the Senate, and that the committee will reconsider and withdraw the amendment. The Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, when the pending bill was before the House committee, wrote a letter which I will read:

UNITED STATES COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY,
Washington, D. C., January 2, 1895.

MY DEAR SIR: I have the honor to inclose you herewith the requisite number and salaries of assistants of the Coast and Geodetic Survey upon the basis of an appropriation for 1896 of similar character and amount to that of 1895.

At present there are 10 divisions in the office force. By distributing the work of 4 of these divisions among the rest the number has been reduced from 10 to 7, so that only 7 assistants will be required for the office force.

The reduced appropriations will necessarily reduce the number of assistants in the field from 32 to 27, so that the entire force of assistants in both office and field will be reduced from 42 to 34.

There will be sufficient for all the work appropriated for, and with this reduced appropriation the Coast Survey will not be hampered by such reduction of its assistants.

Yours, very respectfully,

W. W. DUFFIELD,

Superintendent United States Coast and Geodetic Survey.

On the basis of that the appropriations were reported by the House committee and passed by the House that are proposed to be stricken out by the committee of the Senate. Since that time General Duffield, the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, has written me the following letter:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY,
Washington, D. C., February 20, 1895.

MY DEAR SIR: Agreeably to the direction of Hon. JOSEPH D. SAYERS, chairman of the House Appropriation Committee, and having in view the House appropriation for 1896, I have after careful examination reduced the number of assistants of the Coast and Geodetic Survey from 40 to 34.

Since then I have reviewed this estimate and find it to be satisfactory as to its correctness.

Some of the work done by these gentlemen during former years has now been completed, and therefore 34 assistants are amply sufficient for the House appropriation of 1896. If the Senate, however, sees fit to retain the original number of assistants (42) in order to provide for those whose declining years have unfitted them for active duty in the field, it will be equivalent to placing them on the retired list.

Yours, very respectfully,

W. W. DUFFIELD, Superintendent.

Hon. A. J. McLAURIN,
United States Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

After that statement by the Superintendent, who was not before the committee, and I do not know whether he was invited to appear before the committee or not, the Committee on Appropriations has raised the number of assistants eight, and raised the appropriation $18,800, while it reduced the appropriation for the salary of the Superintendent $1,000. There is a statute providing for the salary of the Superintendent, making it $6,000 a year. The appropriation lacks $1,000 of being as much as the sum fixed by the statute as his salary.

Mr. HUNTON. Is the salary of the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey provided for in the sundry civil bill? My recollection is it is in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. GORMAN. No; it is in this bill.

Mr. McLAURIN. The provision is in the pending bill.

Mr. HUNTON. Not for the Superintendent's salary?

Mr. McLAURIN. Yes, sir; as the Senator will see in lines 24 and 25, on page 33. It says, "For Superintendent, $5,000."

The assistant superintendent was, I understand, before the Committee on Appropriations, the Superintendent not having been before them, and the estimate of the Superintendent has been disregarded by the committee. The assistant superintendent was before the committee in 1895, and stated as follows:

The nature of the services is such that necessarily a very large part of the amount appropriated is expended for pay of employees, and if we compare the number of men in the normal force and their aggregate pay with the amount to be expended in the execution of the work, this is very evident. I have frequently considered the matter, and I know that if the normal force was scaled one-third in numbers, and the office force one-tenth, and the aggregate of the appropriations kept at the present figures, under a new distribution, more work could be done.

Then the question was propounded to him:

Q. That is, you think it can bear a reduction of 30 per cent or more, and not impair its efficiency?

A. I think so.

That was the statement of the assistant superintendent in 1895. The assistant superintendent, I understand, was before this committee and made these estimates different from the estimates which are made by the Superintendent. If this amendment is adopted by the Senate, unintentionally, I am satisfied, on the part of the committee, it is a slap in the face to General Duffield, the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey. I do not think he merits it. I beg the indulgence of the Senate while I read an extract from Appleton's Encyclopedia of American Biography as to who General Duffield is. Under the head of "William Ward Duffield" it says:

Soldier, born in Carlisle, Pa., November, 1823, was graduated at Columbia College, New York, 1841.

He served in the Mexican war; was wounded at Cerro Gordo 18th of April, 1847, and also at Contreras August 20, 1847, while acting adjutant of the Second Tennessee Infantry and on Gen. Gideon J. Pillow's staff. After the close of the war he became a civil engineer. He was a resident engineer on the Hudson River Railroad 1851; chief engineer of the Oakland and Ottawa Railroad, Michigan, and located that line from Pontiac to Grand Haven; chief engineer of the Central Military Tract Railroad, Illinois, in 1854 (now part of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad), and built that line from Detroit to Port Huron.

Served as lieutenant-colonel of the Fourth Michigan Infantry in 1861, and was in the first battle of Bull Run. On the 10th of September, 1861, was appointed colonel of the Ninth Michigan Infantry.

He joined General Sherman at Louisville, Ky., and was sent by him to occupy and fortify the pass through Muldraugh Hill, West Point, Ky., on the 22d of January, 1862. He was appointed by General Buell commander of the Twenty-third Brigade, Army of the Cumberland, April 22, 1863, and brigadier-general and president of the Examining Board, under the act of Congress to test the efficiency of volunteer officers, May 2, 1862. He overtook the Confederate forces at Lebanon, under Col. John Morgan, and captured the place after a sharp battle.

He was assigned by General Buell to command all the forces in Kentucky May 8, 1862, and was relieved from this post September 10. He rejoined the Fourteenth Corps, Army of the Cumberland, under General Thomas, and served with it until the battle of Murfreesboro, where he was disabled by two severe wounds and captured. Unable to take the field at the time required by the act of Congress, he resigned and was appointed chief engineer of the Hudson River Railroad. He was employed in 1869 to survey the lands in Colorado; in 1871-72 was chief engineer of the Kentucky Union Railroad, and located that line from Paris to Hazard. He was elected to the Michigan State senate in 1880, and in 1882 was employed in surveying Government land in Dakota. In 1885 he was reappointed chief engineer of the Kentucky Union Railroad. He has published School of Brigade and Evolutions of the Line.

Without any solicitation on his part he was appointed Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey and confirmed by the Senate. I have read this extract to show his efficiency, his competency, and to show that he is—

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to correct the Senator from Mississippi. The Superintendent of the Coast Survey is not confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. McLAURIN. General Duffield was confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. It is an appointment which is not confirmed by the Senate according to the statute. That is all I know.

Mr. McLAURIN. General Duffield was confirmed by the Senate to my certain knowledge.

Mr. ALLISON. As Superintendent of the Coast Survey?

Mr. McLAURIN. As Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey.

Mr. HUNTON. Oh, yes; I think that is true beyond any doubt.
Mr. ALLISON. Then I stand corrected. My impression was that that officer was not confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. McLAURIN. Whether the law requires it or not I do not know and I do not pretend to say.

Mr. ALLISON. I stand corrected.

Mr. McLAURIN. The estimate made by General Duffield reduced the expenses $18,800, and a saving to the Government of that much would be effected. His salary has been reduced $1,000 in order, I suppose, to raise the appropriation $18,800.

Mr. HUNTON. I desire to say a word or two, sir, in the same line that has been followed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. McLAURIN]. I know General Duffield well, as you, Mr. President, know I do, and I do not know a more accomplished gentleman than he is. He is all that my friend from Mississippi described him to be. Why it is that the Appropriations Committee proposes to cut down the salary of the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey $1,000 the moment General Duffield enters upon the duties of Superintendent is more than I can explain.

The Coast and Geodetic Survey was established long ago; I think as early as some time in the forties. I am not certain about that, but I am certain that it was in existence as early as the 3d of March, 1853. In the very act establishing the office of Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey the salary of the Superintendent was fixed at $6,000 a year. From that day to this there has been no Superintendent of that office who has received a dollar less than $6,000 per annum. I will guarantee that that office has had no more efficient and accomplished gentleman at its head than General Duffield. The office was created by an act of Congress, and it forms section 4689 of the Revised Statutes. By that statute the compensation of the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey is fixed at $6,000 per annum, and the proposed reduction to $5,000 per annum is in contravention of the statute to which I have referred.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Virginia allow me to suggest to him that the Committee on Appropriations has done nothing in respect to the salary of General Duffield. The bill comes to us from the other House with an appropriation of $5,000. If that is to be changed, it can only be done by an amendment in the Senate.

Mr. HUNTON. Then I move to amend the amendment by striking out "$5,000" and inserting "$6,000."

Mr. HARRIS. That amendment is not now in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is not in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will entertain the amendment at the proper time.

Mr. HUNTON. I believe it is understood that the committee amendments are to be acted upon first.

Mr. HARRIS. That is right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is correct.

Mr. HUNTON. Then I shall not detain the Senate longer now, but will move the amendment after the committee amendments have been acted upon.

Mr. COCKRELL. We have simply restored the salaries of the present fiscal year according to the estimates.

Mr. HUNTON. Do I understand the chairman of the committee to say that the estimate for this officer's salary is $5,000 a year?

Mr. COCKRELL. No; I am not talking about that question. That is not at issue at all.

Mr. HUNTON. All right.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I have always taken great interest in this branch of the Government, as I think all who make any inquiry or examination into its history and usefulness will do.

I was disposed to vote for whatever liberal appropriation was made while I was in the other House, and I have done the same since I have been in the Senate. I had occasion during the war to serve nearly all the while along the coast, and I had reason to be grateful to the Survey for a week or two, or three or four weeks, when we crawled about over the islands along the southern coast by the aid of the Coast Survey, the coast guards at night, and the maps of the Survey.

The work of the Survey is not done. It never will be done. They have in the last three or four years been resurveying Long Island Sound, which was surveyed about forty years ago. The old survey was found to be erroneous and defective. There is not a scientific branch of the Government more creditable to us than that department, and as a rule it has had exceedingly capable men, men of scientific attainments and great executive and practical value, at its head. That is especially true of Professor Mendenhall, who has just left the department, to the great regret of all who knew him and his usefulness there. He has gone to a place more congenial, I suppose, and perhaps to higher rank and salary. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] calls my attention to the great, world-wide reputation of Professor Peirce, who used to be chief of it—a great astronomer. There are others, eminent in science, both here and in Europe.

Now there comes to the command of it a gentleman whom I do not know at all, but I find him saying that he has reviewed his estimate and finds it satisfactory as to its correctness. That is the reduction he made.

Some of the work done by these gentlemen during former years has now been completed—

As I said, the work of the Survey never will be done—and therefore, 34 assistants are amply sufficient for the House appropriation of 1896. If the Senate, however, sees fit to retain the original number of assistants, 42—

This is very fresh writing—

In order to provide for those whose declining years have unfitted them for active duty in the field, it will be equivalent to placing them on the retired list.

I do not quite enjoy the courtesy of that reflection upon the Senate. It comes from a gentleman who himself will shortly be 72 years old, and who has never had any experience in Coast-Survey work, according to the record which has been read. He had a very honorable record elsewhere and was wounded in two wars, but I do not think it was well for him, being a trifle older than I am, to reflect upon men of special acquirements and great value, and to say that if they are kept in the service it will be equivalent to putting them upon the retired list. I am willing to abide by the Committee on Appropriations in this matter.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President, I gather from the remarks of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] that the offense of General Duffield is that he has recommended a reduction of the expenses of the Coast and Geodetic Survey by discontinuing certain offices filled by men whose service he regards as not required to carry out the purposes of the law. I do not think that is at all presuming upon his position to lecture or advise the Senate. He is presumed to be acquainted with the details and the necessities of the Bureau.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator from Kentucky permit me to read one line on that question from Mr. Duffield himself?

Mr. LINDSAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. COCKRELL. He says:

Not being sufficiently familiar with the personnel of the office force, I can not reduce it advisably. Such reduction might lop off a valuable clerk and retain one of little or no value. But, being well satisfied that this force also needs reduction, I suggest (if the committee deem it advisable) the following amendment, to be added after "Pay of office force," at the foot of page 230, Book of Estimates:

"Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury may, upon the recommendation of the Superintendent of the Coast Survey, at any time abolish any position or reduce the salary of any position herein provided for under the office force that he may deem advisable."

He says he does not know anything about it.

Mr. LINDSAY. The committee, instead of accepting General Duffield's suggestion and leaving experience to enable him and the Secretary of the Treasury to reduce expenses, proposes peremptorily to restore all the officers that the other House discontinued and fixes their salaries. In other words, the recommendations of the chief of the Bureau are absolutely disregarded, and I take it there is no member of the committee who is able to say of his own knowledge that the services of any of these men are requisite.

Yet it is a little singular that nobody's salary is proposed to be reduced now except General Duffield's. It is true that it is not done by the action of the committee of the Senate. The reduction was made by the bill as it came here from the other House, but coupled with that reduction was the discontinuance of all these offices. Now the Senate restores the offices, provides pay for these men whose services are said to be unnecessary, and leaves the Superintendent's salary reduced. The result of all of which is to say to the heads of Bureaus, "Whenever you undertake to suggest a reduction of expenses the reduction in your own case will be made, but the salary of everybody else will be left as it was."

Mr. HAWLEY. I think it is rather to say that the probability is that 88 men are wiser than one, and we think there is work enough for those men to do.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I think the adoption of the amendment referred to, made by the Committee on Appropriations and proposed here, is essential. As soon as it was suggested by the other House that the reduction referred should be made, the most vigorous protests were forwarded to my colleague and myself, not from the persons themselves interested, but from all the mercantile interests of the Coast, the Board of Trade and the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco especially.

All the shipping interests were most irritated at the idea that these parties should be withdrawn from the public service. If it is important, in order to prevent the wrecking of ships, that those engaged in maritime enterprises should know where some rocks and shoals are, if it is important to have the ordinary functions of a coast survey carried out, the reduction proposed by the other House would have been utterly destructive. My friend from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY] perhaps does not appreciate the necessity, because it has not been called to his attention. When the head of the Bureau himself did not know where reductions should be made, certainly it was time to call a halt.

Now, the persons to whom I refer are perfectly cognizant of the character of the work that is being done. The Coast Survey has recently performed a most important labor, surveying the southern line of the Alaskan boundary along the British possessions. It is constantly engaged upon work on the Coast. If it were necessary to go into this matter in detail, my colleague [Mr. PERKINS], who is necessarily absent this evening, has a great deal of information upon the subject, because he is personally very familiar with it, which might be offered to the Senate. But until someone who knows can show us the specific reductions which can be made without detriment to the public service, it is certainly poor policy to attempt a reduction when we do not know where to begin and where to stop.

I regard the service performed by the Coast Survey upon the Western coast of this country as absolutely essential to the public safety; and in so far as concerns that portion of mercantile enterprise which is carried on through the rivers and oceans, I do not believe any change that could have been proposed in existing laws would so soon have evoked a vigorous and spontaneous expression from men of business, who draw no salaries in this matter, but who recognize the essential character of the work done by the parties who have heretofore received the support of the Government. There is no one better known in connection with this work than Professor Davidson. He is an authority all over the country, and yet this foolish, ill-advised reduction would have absolutely excluded him from employment. It was part of the programme, as I know.

Mr. COCKRELL. I feel very sorry for General Duffield. He got himself into the condition that bureau chiefs very often do when they go before the House Committee on Appropriations with great reforms. They recommend reforms in certain lines. Some of their suggestions are taken; some of them are not taken. I think it is not improper to say that a certain amount was fixed for the office force, and General Duffield was requested to go off and make an estimate of how that force should be arranged to come within the amount which had been fixed. Mr. Duffield says:

MY DEAR SIR: I have the honor to inclose you herewith the requisite number and salaries of assistants of the Coast and Geodetic Survey upon the basis of an appropriation for 1896 of similar character and amount to that of 1895.

At present there are 10 divisions in the office force. By distributing the work of 4 of these divisions among the rest the number has been reduced from 10 to 7, so that only 7 assistants will be required for the office force.

The reduced appropriations will necessarily reduce the number of assistants in the field from 32 to 27, so that the entire force of assistants in both office and field will be reduced from 42 to 34.

These will be sufficient for all the work.

Then he makes the estimate here. I understand he was required to fix it at a certain amount. Now, let me say to the Senator that when they were making up these estimates to be submitted to Congress after having been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, they estimated just as we have put it in the bill. Whether Mr. Duffield sent in those estimates or not I do not know. I do not remember when he took charge of the office.

Mr. McLAURIN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. McLAURIN. Was General Duffield ever before the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. COCKRELL. He was requested to send any statement he had to make in regard to it.

Mr. McLAURIN. Was his assistant before the committee?

Mr. COCKRELL. One of his assistants was.

Mr. McLAURIN. Was he invited before the committee?

Mr. COCKRELL. He was not. We have put in the bill the exact estimate.

Mr. McLAURIN. Is the committee amendment made upon the estimate of the Superintendent or the assistant?

Mr. COCKRELL. The committee amendment is made up upon the estimates of the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, as submitted to Congress by the Secretary of the Treasury, and the items are just as they were in the last appropriation act.

Mr. FRYE. What is the trouble, then?

Mr. COCKRELL. Last year we made a reduction of a very large number in the Coast and Geodetic Survey, a larger number than those familiar with the service believed it could stand without materially crippling its efficiency. We then provided that—

The Secretary of the Treasury shall reduce the number or compensation, or both, of said office force, so as to make the whole of said compensation equal to the sum of $135,000 for the fiscal year 1896: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed to affect the civil-service rules in so far as now applicable to the Coast and Geodetic Survey; and he shall submit estimates in detail for the said office force, as reorganized hereunder, in his annual estimates to Congress for the fiscal year 1896. And the Secretary of the Treasury shall examine and report to the next Congress, at its first session, what reduction can be made in the number and salaries of the employees of the Coast and Geodetic Survey without serious detriment to the service.

Under that law and those provisions we restore it and leave it to the Secretary of the Treasury to report at the beginning of the next session what greater reduction can be made than we made last year.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, I take it for granted that the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey is a competent and efficient officer; that he understands the business to which he was appointed, and understood it when he was appointed to that office. It occurs to me that it is very strange, when that officer has made an estimate of the appropriations that ought to be made for the assistants necessary to conduct the office, to have the Senate raise that appropriation $18,800; and that is exactly what this amendment proposes to do.

I want to enter my protest against it. I do enter my protest against it. If it is true that this is an economical Administration, if it is true that this is an economical Senate, if it is true that the Senate only proposes to expend that which is necessary, then it seems to me that we ought not to raise the estimate made by the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey $18,800, or any other sum, but we ought to make such an appropriation as he has asked.

Mr. HAWLEY. If this be an economic Administration, to use the language of the Senator from Mississippi, we are safe in following the recommendations of the Secretary of the Treasury. The committee has done that exactly.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I wish to say only a few words on this subject. I did not hear the letter read by the Senator from Mississippi, purporting to come from the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, but I understood from what little I did hear that the Superintendent of the Coast Survey criticises the present schedule of salaries as found in the bill as reported by the committee. Am I correct in that regard?

Mr. McLAURIN. The Senator has the letter before him.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I will read it.

Mr. PLATT. What is the date?

Mr. ALLISON. February 20.

Mr. PLATT. The bill was reported February 18. It was written after the bill was reported.

Mr. ALLISON. It was written after the bill was reported. He says:

I have after careful examination reduced the number of assistants of the Coast and Geodetic Survey from 42 to 34.

Mr. President, this careful examination of the Superintendent only dispensed with the services of Mr. Davidson, who for many years has had charge of the important work of the survey on the Pacific coast. The Committee on Appropriations, in examining the bill as it came to us from the other House, saw in the very first item under this head a reduction by forcing this valuable and important officer, who is engaged in this very important work, out of his place and by making no provision for his salary. In going on and looking over the details we found three or four others similarly situated and known to members of the Committee on Appropriations. We found from the Book of Estimates that the Secretary of the Treasury, who is the responsible officer for the Survey, and in whose Department the Survey exists, sent to us estimates of appropriation in accordance with the appropriations of last year.

I submit that it does not lie in the pathway of a gentleman so eminent as General Duffield, in private communications to committees of this House or the other, to override the omnipotent power of the Secretary of the Treasury as respects these questions and present these recommendations in the privacy of committee rooms without the assent and indorsement in writing of the Secretary of the Treasury. I submit to the Senator from Mississippi that the person responsible for the Coast Survey and for its organization has never intimated to the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate that he could under any circumstances dispense with the officers for whom we appropriated last year and for whom he has estimated this year.

Mr. President, there is a history connected with these reductions that has not yet been disclosed in this Chamber, a history which will connect not the Superintendent of the Coast Survey but other people employed there with this attempted reorganization, without the knowledge of the Secretary of the Treasury and without any reference made by him to either House of Congress on the subject.

Therefore, I submit that it is not just to this service or to those who have been employed in it for many years, and who are men of the highest skill in the scientific work of the Survey, to thus cut them down without a hearing from their superior officer, the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. PLATT. May I ask the Senator from Iowa one question before he sits down? I find that the salary of the Superintendent has been reduced $1,000 by the other House. I want to inquire whether the Superintendent recommended the reduction of his own salary when he was recommending the reduction of the salary of his assistant?

Mr. HAWLEY. He recommended the dismissal of his assistant.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no evidence, except the letter which appears here, that the Superintendent of the Coast Survey recommended the reductions.

Mr. COCKRELL. It will be found in the hearings before the House committee, on page 193. I will state to the Senator that he did not recommend the reduction of his own salary, but it is put specifically at $6,000. But all the other salaries are cut down.

Mr. McLAURIN. I will ask the Senator from Connecticut who has just taken his seat if he knows of any assistant or any officer the reduction of whose salary he recommended?

Mr. HAWLEY. He recommended to send them all away entirely.

Mr. McLAURIN. Though he did not recommend the reduction of the salary of any officer.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to say in response to the Senator from Connecticut that personally for myself I do not believe it is wise to reduce the compensation of the Superintendent of the Coast Survey. I think a highly scientific person fitted for this place deserves the salary now authorized by the statute.

Mr. STEWART. I have had the honor of an acquaintance with Professor Davidson for many years and have been familiar with his work on the Pacific Coast. I regard him as no ordinary man. He is a scientist whose ability is recognized throughout the world. He has a world-wide reputation. He has done great service to the Government and is still in full vigor. I do not believe that he would lose by a comparison with any officer who has done like service for the Government. In other words, I believe that he is at the head as a scientific, useful, and important officer. I would hate to see him cut down without knowing the reason why, for I do not believe there is any person in the service who could take his place and do as good service to the Government.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 40, line 21, after the words "United States," to strike out:

A report in detail of the expenses on account of the National Zoological Park shall be made to Congress at the beginning of each regular session. And of the sum hereby appropriated $5,000 shall be used toward the construction of a road from the Holt mansion entrance (on Adams Mill road) into the park to connect with the roads now in existence, including a bridge across Rock Creek.

So as to make the clause read:

National Zoological Park: For continuing the construction of roads, walks, bridges, water supply, sewerage, and drainage; and for grading, planting, and otherwise improving the grounds; erecting, and repairing buildings and inclosures for animals; and for administrative purposes, care, subsistence, and transportation of animals, including salaries or compensation of all necessary employees, and general incidental expenses not otherwise provided for, $55,000, one-half of which sum shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia and the other half from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to have the amendment of the committee to strike out the first part of the amendment which has been read agreed to, that portion referring to the report, because that is the law already, and the same thing was in the bill which passed last year, preceded by the word "hereafter." The second part of the amendment I desire to have disagreed to—that is, the part beginning "and of the sum hereby appropriated," and ending with the words "bridge across Rock Creek." I desire that part of the language retained as it came from the House of Representatives. The amendment was proposed under a misapprehension.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be divided as requested by the Senator from Missouri. The first division of the amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. After the words "United States," in line 21, on page 40, it is proposed to strike out:

A report in detail of the expenses on account of the National Zoological Park shall be made to Congress at the beginning of each regular session.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on striking out the words which have been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The second amendment will now be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "session," in line 24, on page 40, the Committee on Appropriations reported to strike out:

And of the sum hereby appropriated $5,000 shall be used toward the construction of a road from the Holt mansion entrance (on Adams Mill road) into the park to connect with the roads now in existence, including a bridge across Rock Creek.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 49, line 12, to increase the appropriation for "propagation of food fishes" from $91,250 to $108,750.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, after line 12, to insert:

For investigation and report respecting the advisability of establishing a fish-hatching station at some suitable point in the State of New Hampshire, $500, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, after line 21, to strike out:

For all other necessary expenditures, to enable the Commission to properly carry out the objects of the "Act to regulate commerce," including expenditures for counsel employed with the approval of the Attorney-General to give effect to the provisions of said act and all acts and amendments supplementary thereto, $184,000.

And insert:

For all other necessary expenditures, to enable the Commission to give effect to the provisions of the "Act to regulate commerce," and all acts and amendments supplementary thereto, $184,000, of which sum not exceeding $20,000 may be expended in the employment of counsel.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, line 4, after the word "of," to insert "the said act of August 5, 1892, as amended by;" in line 14, after the word "said," to insert "sundry civil act to carry out;" and in the same line, after the word "three," to insert "as amended;" so as to make the clause read:

That the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, under the supervision of the Secretary of the Treasury, be authorized to print upon the blank diplomas authorized by section 3 of the said act of August 5, 1892, as amended by the act of March 3, 1893, making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year 1894, the names of the persons to whom the diplomas are to be awarded by the World's Columbian Commission, and the language of the awards as furnished by the committee on awards of the World's Columbian Commission; and the expense thereof shall be paid from the appropriation of $105,000 contained in said sundry civil act to carry out section 3 as amended, which appropriation is hereby made available for such purpose until expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, line 19, to increase the appropriation for "Paper and stamps" from "$60,000" to "$65,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, line 14, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty" and insert "sixty;" and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to strike out "to be immediately available;" so as to make the clause read:

Transportation of silver coin: For transportation of silver coin, including fractional silver coin, by registered mail or otherwise, $60,000; and in expending this sum the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to transport from the Treasury or subtreasuries, free of charge, silver coin when requested to do so: Provided, That an equal amount in coin or currency shall have been deposited in the Treasury or such subtreasuries by the applicant or applicants. And the Secretary of the Treasury shall report to Congress the cost arising under this appropriation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, line 3, before the word "silver," to insert "uncurrent fractional," and in line 4, before the word "silver," to insert "fractional," so as to make the clause read:

Recoinage of uncurrent fractional silver coins: For recoinage of the uncurrent fractional silver coins in the Treasury, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, line 20, to increase the appropriation for "Distinctive paper for United States securities" from "$60,000" to "$68,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, line 5, to increase the appropriation for "Expenses of national currency" from "$10,000" to "$19,000."

Mr. COCKRELL. There are three amendments to go in the portion of the bill which is being read. On line 5, page 56, after the word "Columbia," I move to insert "including the buildings at Chicago."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 56, line 5, after the word "Columbia," it is proposed to insert "including the buildings at Chicago;" so as to read:

Pay of assistant custodians and janitors: For pay of assistant custodians and janitors, including all personal services in connection with the care of all public buildings under control of the Treasury Department outside of the District of Columbia, including the buildings at Chicago, $775,000.

Mr. COCKRELL. That may be necessary in view of the addition which has been made.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. In line 18, on page 56, after the word "hospitals," I move to insert the words "the buildings at Chicago."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 56, line 18, after the word "hospitals," it is proposed to insert "the buildings at Chicago;" so as to read:

Furniture and repairs of furniture: For furniture and repairs of same and carpets for all public buildings, marine hospitals, the buildings at Chicago included, under the control of the Treasury Department, and for furniture, carpets, chandeliers, and gas fixtures for new buildings, exclusive of personal services, except for work done by contract, $180,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. On page 57, line 9, after the word "hospitals," I move to insert the words "the buildings at Chicago."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 57, line 9, after the word "hospitals," it is proposed to insert "the buildings at Chicago;" so as to read:

Fuel, lights, and water for public buildings: For fuel, lights, water, electric current for light and power purposes, electric-light plants, including repairs thereto, in such buildings as may be designated by the Secretary of the Treasury, electric-light wiring, and miscellaneous items required for the use of the janitors, firemen, or engineers, in the proper care of the buildings, furniture, and heating apparatus, exclusive of personal services, for all public buildings, marine hospitals, the buildings at Chicago included, under the control of the Treasury Department, inclusive of new buildings, $875,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 58, line 7, after the word "laws," to insert:

Including $4,000 to make the necessary investigation of claims for reimbursement of expenses incident to the last sickness and burial of deceased pensioners under section 4718 of the Revised Statutes.

So as to make the clause read:

Suppressing counterfeiting and other crimes: For expenses incurred under the authority or with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury in detecting, arresting, and delivering into the custody of the United States marshal having jurisdiction dealers and pretended dealers in counterfeit money, and persons engaged in counterfeiting Treasury notes, bonds, national-bank notes, and other securities of the United States and of foreign Governments, as well as the coins of the United States and of foreign Governments, and other felonies committed against the laws of the United States relating to the pay and bounty laws, including $4,000 to make the necessary investigation of claims for reimbursement of expenses incident to the last sickness and burial of deceased pensioners under section 4718 of the Revised Statutes, and for no other purpose whatever, $80,000.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee what is the necessity, if any, for this proposed amendment?

Mr. COCKRELL. That is the usual appropriation. We simply restore what the law has been.

Mr. PLATT. The law has been so?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. It strikes me it would be quite as well to expend $4,000 to see why reimbursement for burial expenses has not been allowed. I make no objection, however, to the amendment if it is the usual provision.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask the Senator from Missouri if that provision has been in former laws?

Mr. COCKRELL. It has been.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is all right, then. It was left out of this bill by the House of Representatives I suppose?

Mr. COCKRELL. It was left out by the House of Representatives.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the committee, which has been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 60, line 9, before the word "thousand," to strike out "one hundred" and insert "seventy-five;" so as to make the clause read:

Enforcement of alien contract-labor laws: For the enforcement of alien contract-labor laws and to prevent the immigration of convicts, lunatics, idiots, and persons liable to become a public charge from foreign contiguous territory, $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 61, line 12, after the word "dollars," to insert:

And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to order investigations and reports by the inspector for the salmon fisheries in Alaska of the alleged taking and destruction of the eggs of game wild fowl in said Territory, as well also as to the alleged wanton destruction of game birds, deer, fox, and other animals, and also the advisability of adopting suitable regulations as to close seasons as in his judgment may be necessary to prevent such destruction in future.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, after line 11, to insert:

Payments on account of the Ford Theater disaster: For payment to the heirs and legal representatives of those who were killed by reason of the falling of the Ford Theater building on the 9th day of June, 1893, the sum of $115,000, of which sum there shall be paid to the legal or personal representatives of each of the following persons the sum of $5,000: George Q. Allen, George Michael Arnold, Samuel P. Banes, John Bussius, John E. Chapin, Jeremiah Daly, Joseph R. Fagan, Joseph Barker Gage, David Clark Jordan, Justus Boyd Jones, Frederick B. Loftus, J. Hirst McFall, Otto F. W. Meder, Howard S. Miller, Benjamin Franklin Miller, Burrows Nelson, Emanuel G. Shull, Frank M. Williams, Alfred L. Ames, Arthur Napoleon Girault, Michael T. Mulleday, George W. Roby, and Charles Best Sayers: Provided, That where the deceased died leaving a widow but no children the $5,000 shall be paid her; where the deceased left a widow and children, the widow shall receive one-half and the children shall share alike; and where the deceased was unmarried, the sum shall be paid to the legal heirs.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I simply wish to notify the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that my colleague on the Special Committee on the Ford's Theater Disaster [Mr. MANDERSON] has two amendments which he will ask leave hereafter to offer, not being present now. I ask that the right might be reserved to him to do so.

Mr. COCKRELL. He shall have the right to offer the amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the committee, which has been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 63, after line 8, to insert:

Payment to executors of Francis Wharton: To pay the executors of Francis Wharton, being balance due his estate for services rendered in preparing the Diplomatic Correspondence of the American Revolution, under a joint resolution of Congress approved August 13, 1888, providing for the printing of a supplement of Wharton's Digest of International Law, $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 63, after line 16, to insert:

The Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe regulations for the sampling and assaying of lead ores imported into the United States, and such regulations shall provide that the method of sampling and assaying such ores shall be the same as that usually adopted for commercial purposes by public sampling works in the United States; and he is authorized to incur the necessary expense out of the appropriation for the collection of the revenue from customs: Provided, That no part of the expense herein authorized and directed shall be incurred for the erection of sampling works by the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 64, after line 3, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to furnish Gen. James D. McBride, on his written requests from time to time as may be required, impressions on lithographic transfer paper, from the following engravings: The signers of the Declaration of Independence and portraits of the Presidents of the United States; and that the said McBride be, and he is hereby, authorized and permitted to print the vignette of the signers of the Declaration of Independence in connection with his historical publication (which he is now ready to issue) entitled "Important Periods in the History of the United States," and also to print said portraits in a group under the following title: "The Portraits of the Presidents of the United States." Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as authorizing the said McBride to print, or cause to be printed, copies of said engravings in any other manner than hereinbefore specified; and the cost and expense thereof shall be paid by said McBride.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 64, after line 21, to insert:

That the act entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the distribution of useless papers in the Executive Departments," approved February 16, 1890, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to include in its provisions any accumulation of files of papers of a like character therein described now or hereafter in the various public buildings under the control of the several Executive Departments of the Government.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. At this point the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], on behalf of the committee, has an amendment which he intends to propose relating to the bounty on sugar. The Senator from Kentucky is obliged to be absent during a portion of this evening, and I ask that the amendment may be passed over until to-morrow, as I think it may lead to some debate.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is to come in on page 65, at the end of line 5.

Mr. ALLISON. At the end of line 5. I ask that it may be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the request of the Senator from Iowa will be agreed to. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 66, line 1, after the word "force," to insert:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury may use not exceeding $900 of such unexpended balance for the experimental investigation of the treatment and prevention of smallpox in the laboratory of the Marine-Hospital Service.

So as to make the clause read:

PREVENTION OF EPIDEMICS.

The President of the United States is hereby authorized, in case of threatened or actual epidemic of cholera, yellow fever, smallpox, or Chinese plague or black death, to use the unexpended balance of the sums appropriated and reappropriated by the sundry civil appropriation acts approved March 3, 1893, and August 13, 1894, or so much thereof as may be necessary, in aid of State and local boards, or otherwise, in his discretion, in preventing and suppressing the spread of the same; and in such emergency in the execution of any quarantine laws which may be then in force: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury may use not exceeding $900 of such unexpended balance for the experimental investigation of the treatment and prevention of smallpox in the laboratory of the Marine-Hospital Service.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to add to the amendment the words "to be immediately available."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill what is the amount of the unexpended balance of the contingent appropriation to guard against these diseases?

Mr. COCKRELL. About $500,000—between four and five hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. HARRIS. It is quite enough, if it is that amount. It is a larger sum than I supposed.

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, yes; it is an enormous amount.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 66, after line 14, to insert:

To provide flags for the east and west fronts of the center of the Capitol, to be hoisted daily under the direction of the Capitol police board, $100, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 66, after line 18, to insert:

For continuing the work of cleaning and repairing works of art in the Capitol, including the repairing of frames, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 66, after line 21, to insert:

Senate wing of the Capitol: For repaving subbasement floor, rebuilding horizontal smoke flue from boilers to stack, and repairing and rearranging the Senate legislative electric bells service, repairing and enlarging hot well under boiler room and other work appertaining to same, to be expended under the direction of the Architect of the Capitol, $3,580.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 67, after line 9, to insert:

For repairs and improvements to steam fire engine and Senate and House stables, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the provision for "lighting the Capitol and grounds," on page 67, line 12, after the word "grounds," to strike out:

For lighting the Capitol and grounds about the same, including the Botanic Garden, and the Senate and House stables; for gas and electric lighting; pay of superintendent of meters, lamp-lighters, gas fitters, and for materials for gas and electric lighting, and for general repairs, $24,000.

The Architect of the Capitol, with the approval of the Committee on Rules of the Senate and House of Representatives, is hereby authorized to arrange for not exceeding one year with any existing electric lighting company in the city of Washington to furnish electric current for the Capitol building at a rate not to exceed 10 cents per 1,000 watt hours, lamp renewals included; and the Architect of the Capitol is also authorized to grant permission to said electric lighting company to lay an underground conduit through the Capitol grounds in order to connect its supply mains with the Capitol building with a view to furnishing current to the electric lights in said building, no expense to be chargeable to the Government for laying such conduit or mains; any injury to the grounds or appurtenances caused thereby to be repaired by the said company.

And insert:

For purchase of the electric-lighting plant in the Senate wing, $10,000; for repairs and extension of the same to meet the present requirements of the service, $10,000; and the Architect of the Capitol is hereby directed to have the electric plant, wiring, and fixtures put in place during the ensuing recess of Congress, under the direction of the Committee on Rules, in accordance with the plan adopted by said committee; for lighting the Capitol and grounds about the same, including the Botanic Garden and the Senate and House stables; for gas and electric lighting, pay of superintendent of meters, lamp-lighters, gas fitters, and for materials and labor for gas and electric lighting, and for general repairs, $24,000; in all, $44,000. The Architect of the Capitol, with the approval of the Committee on Rules of the Senate and House of Representatives, is hereby authorized to arrange, for not exceeding one year, with any existing electric lighting company in the city of Washington to furnish electric current for the Capitol building at a rate not to exceed one-half a cent per hour of burning of a nominal 16-candle-power incandescent lamp, or an equivalent thereof; and the Architect of the Capitol is also authorized to grant permission to said electric lighting company to lay an underground conduit through the Capitol grounds in order to connect its supply mains with the Capitol building with a view to furnishing current to the electric lights in said building, no expense to be chargeable to the Government for laying such conduit or mains; any injury to the grounds or appurtenances caused thereby to be repaired by the said company.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 70, line 10, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ninety" and insert "sixty," and in line 12, after the word "be," to insert "selected under the civil-service law, rules, and regulations, and shall be;" so as to make the clause read:

Depredations on public timber, protecting public lands, and settlement of claims for swamp lands and swamp-land indemnity: To meet the expenses of protecting timber on the public lands and for the more efficient execution of the law and rules relating to the cutting thereof; of protecting public lands from illegal and fraudulent entry or appropriation, and of adjusting claims for swamp lands, and indemnity for swamp lands, $60,000: Provided, That agents and others employed under this appropriation shall be selected under the civil-service law, rules, and regulations, and shall be allowed per diem, subject to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, in lieu of subsistence, at a rate not exceeding $3 per day each and actual necessary expenses for transportation.

Mr. BERRY. I move to strike out "sixty" and insert "one hundred and twenty;" so as to read "$120,000."

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the paragraph be passed over. The Senator from Arkansas can offer his amendment, and then let the matter be passed over until to-morrow.

Mr. BERRY. Why not dispose of it now?

Mr. BATE. There are one or two Senators who are interested in the matter, I will say to the Senator from Arkansas, who would like to be present when it is considered. If this clause can be passed over without losing its rights I have no objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. It will not lose its rights.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the clause on page 70, from line 3 to line 17, inclusive, will be passed over. The Chair hears none.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 71, line 11, before the word "thousand," to strike out "one hundred and seventy-five" and insert "three hundred;" so as to read:

SURVEYING THE PUBLIC LANDS.

For surveys and resurveys of public lands, $300,000, at rates not exceeding $3 per linear mile for standard and meander lines, $7 for township, and $5 for section lines.

Mr. DUBOIS. I move to strike out "three hundred" and insert "four hundred;" so as to read "$400,000." The Senate is entirely familiar with the argument which the representatives of the Western States make in regard to the survey of Western lands.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the paragraph be passed over for to-night, and be reserved.

Mr. DUBOIS. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the provision on page 71, from line 10 to line 13, inclusive, will be passed over. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, on page 72, line 16, after the word "exceeding," to insert "$15,000 may be expended for resurveys, and not exceeding;" so as to read:

And of the sum hereby appropriated not exceeding $15,000 may be expended for resurveys, and not exceeding $40,000 may be expended for examination of public surveys in the several surveying districts in order to test the accuracy of the work in the field, and to prevent payment for fraudulent and imperfect surveys returned by deputy surveyors, and for examinations of surveys heretofore made and reported to be defective or fraudulent.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 73, after line 3, to insert:

For the survey of the public lands lying within the limits of land grants made by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads, and the selection therein of such lands as are granted therefor, to enable the Secretary of the Interior to carry out the provisions of section 1 of the act of March 3, 1867, entitled "An act to provide for the adjustment of land grants made by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads, and for the forfeiture of unearned lands, and for other purposes," being chapter 576 of volume 24 of the Statutes at Large, page 556, the sum of $125,000 is hereby appropriated and made a continuing appropriation for the survey of lands within the limits of railroad land grants, and any money which shall be expended of such appropriation and reimbursed and paid into the Treasury is hereby reappropriated, and said sum shall remain a continuing appropriation, and so often as any part of the same shall, after being expended, be reimbursed by any railroad company as hereinafter provided, the same shall be again available for the purposes aforesaid: Provided, That any portion of said sum expended for surveying such lands shall be reimbursed by the respective companies or parties in interest for whose benefit the lands are granted, according to the provisions of the act of July 15, 1870, chapter 223, volume 16, pages 305 and 306, and act of July 31, 1876, chapter 246 of volume 19, page 121 of the Statutes at Large, requiring "that before any lands granted to any railroad company shall be conveyed to such company or any persons entitled thereto under any of the acts incorporating or relating to said company, unless said company is excepted by law from the payment of such cost, there shall first be paid into the Treasury of the United States the cost of surveying, selecting, and conveying the same by the said company or persons in interest;" And provided further, That whenever there shall have been reimbursed and paid into the Treasury of the United States, by the respective companies or parties in interest, any part of said appropriation expended for surveys within such grants, there shall be immediately available, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, an amount equal to the amount so reimbursed, and the same shall be available for the survey of the public lands lying within the limits of the railroad land grants made by Congress, until all of said lands shall have been surveyed: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent the use, within the limits of any railroad land grant made by Congress, of any part of any regular appropriation for surveying the public lands: Provided, That no part of the foregoing money shall be used for any land embraced in any grant to the State of Florida: And provided further, That the provisions of law requiring reimbursements to be made to the United States by railroad corporations claiming such grants, shall apply equally to the successors of such railroad corporations acquiring title to their lands and other property, under decree of foreclosure of any mortgage authorized by Congress. This paragraph shall be in lieu of the provision in the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 13, 1894, providing for the survey of such lands.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest to insert at the end of the paragraph a comma and the words:

and the Secretary of the Interior shall report to each regular session of Congress the results of his action under these provisions.

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope the chairman of the committee will explain what the purpose of this amendment is and how it changes existing law.

Mr. COCKRELL. This is simply a repetition of the act of last session, carrying it out more specifically and amending a defect that was discovered in it. We then appropriated $125,000 for the survey of lands within the railroad limits and provided that, as a matter of course, the railroad companies had to pay one-half. We intended it to be a regular permanent fund that might be used from year to year and from time to time as the railroad companies paid in, but the Treasury Department has decided that when the railroad companies paid in $50,000 for the surveys and the United States had expended that amount the money was not reappropriated. As soon as $125,000 was expended that amount would be in the Treasury on the part of the railroad companies, but there would be nothing there on the part of the Government to pay one-half of the expense. We have simply made the $125,000 available all the time, one-half of it coming from the railroad companies and the other half from the Treasury, and that was the intention of the provision.

Mr. ALDRICH. Can the Senator from Missouri tell me, without very much trouble, what is the area of lands now held by the land-grant railroads?

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, millions upon millions of acres. I do not know.

Mr. ALDRICH. That have not been surveyed?

Mr. COCKRELL. Millions upon millions of acres that have not been surveyed.

Mr. DUBOIS. I will state to the Senator from Rhode Island that all through the State of Wyoming, for instance, there are unsurveyed public lands on both sides of the tracks. It is so in Washington and Idaho, and also along the Union Pacific, the Central Pacific, and the Northern Pacific as well.

Mr. SQUIRE. This paragraph, on page 75, is of very great importance also in reference to the use of the money for surveys within the limits of railroad land grants. I understand that the First Comptroller of the Treasury decided that no part of the $375,000 appropriated under the act of August 5, 1893, "for surveys and resurveys of public lands" could be used for the survey of public lands within the land grants.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is all arranged satisfactorily.

Mr. SQUIRE. It is specifically provided for by an appropriation of $125,000 made in the same act. This seems to be a very important paragraph. I have a letter from the surveyor-general of the State of Washington urging that a provision to this effect be enacted, and I think the reasons he gives are very conclusive. It is a very important matter. The proviso on page 75 of the bill reads:

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent the use, within the limits of any railroad land grant made by Congress, of any part of any regular appropriation for surveying public lands.

It is very important otherwise. They would not survey any of the railroad lands within the limits of the grants.

Mr. DUBOIS. I will say to the Senator from Washington that that is fully provided for in this amendment.

Mr. SQUIRE. The surveyor-general of Washington says that one-half of all the applications for surveys of public lands are within the limits of the railroad grants. His letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF UNITED STATES SURVEYOR-GENERAL
FOR THE STATE OF WASHINGTON,
Olympia, January 11, 1895.

DEAR SIR: I want to call your attention to a matter of very vital importance to a great number of settlers on unsurveyed public lands lying within the limits of the railroad grants in this State.

The sundry civil appropriation act of August 18, 1894, appropriates $250,000 for public surveys.

Of this sum to the State of Washington is apportioned the sum of $39,000.

In the letter of instructions from the honorable Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated December 7, 1894, I am directed to award contracts to this amount in lands situated outside of the limits of the land grants made by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads.

The sundry civil appropriation act of August 18, 1894, makes provision for surveys within the limits of railroad land grants, as follows:

"For the survey of the public lands lying within the limits of land grants made by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads, and the selection therein of such lands as are granted therefor, to enable the Secretary of the Interior to carry out the provisions of section 1 of the act of March 3, 1867, entitled 'An act to provide for the adjustment of land grants made by Congress to aid in the construction of and for the forfeiture of unearned land, and for other purposes,' being chapter 376 of volume 34 of the Statutes at Large, page 656, the sum of $125,000, which was appropriated therefor by the act approved August 5, 1892, entitled 'An act making appropriation for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893, and for other purposes,' is hereby reappropriated and continued, and any money which shall have been expended out of such appropriation and reimbursed and paid into the Treasury, is hereby reappropriated; and the said sum shall remain a continuing appropriation, and so often as any part of the same shall, after being expended, be reimbursed by any railroad company, as hereinafter provided, the same shall be then available for the purposes aforesaid: Provided, That any portion of said sum expended for surveying such lands shall be reimbursed by the respective companies or parties in interest for whose benefit the lands are granted, according to the provisions of the act of July 15, 1870, chapter 283, volume 16, pages 305 and 306, and act July 31, 1876, chapter 246 of volume 19, page 121, of the Statutes at Large, requiring 'that before the lands granted to any railroad company shall be conveyed to such company or any persons entitled thereto under any of the acts incorporating or related to said company, unless said company is excepted by law from the payment of such costs, there shall first be paid into the Treasury of the United States the cost of surveying, selecting, and conveying the same, by the said company or persons in interest:' Provided, That no part of the foregoing moneys shall be used for any land embraced in any grant to the State of Florida."

The First Comptroller of the Treasury on August 22, 1892, decided that no part of the appropriation of $375,000 appropriated by the act of August 5, 1892, "for surveys and resurveys of public lands" could be used for the survey of public lands within the land grants, as the survey of lands within such grants was specifically provided for by the appropriation of $125,000 made in the same act.

I am informed by the honorable Commissioner that under date of October 17, 1894, he requested a decision by the Comptroller of the Treasury as to whether the reappropriation of the said sum of $125,000, and making the same a continuing appropriation, should be regarded as specifically providing for surveys within railroad grants to the exclusion of the regular appropriation. Under date of November 7, 1894, the Comptroller replied as follows:

"The original appropriation of $125,000 made in the act of August 5, 1892, and which by the provision of the above clause of the sundry civil appropriation act of August 18, 1894, has been reappropriated and continued, was considered by Mr. Matthews, when First Comptroller of the Treasury.

"He held that it was the intention of Congress that that appropriation should be exclusively used for the survey of the public lands lying within the limits of railroad grants, and consequently, that the regular appropriation for the survey of the public lands was not available for the purpose of surveying any of the public lands lying within the limits of railroad land grants.

"I see no reason why the construction placed upon the original appropriation should not be applied to the present appropriation, although by its terms the appropriation is now made continuous.

"It is true, as explained by you, that as the railroads are only entitled to alternate sections, or one-half of the land covered by the survey paid for out of said appropriation, when the amount paid for the cost of the surveys of the land selected by the railroads are reimbursed, only one-half of the total cost of the surveys made under said appropriation will be available for future surveys, and that, therefore, in process of time the appropriation would become exhausted.

"That fact can not change the construction which should be placed upon the appropriation. It may be and is probably true that Congress in enacting this provision did not realize that only one-half of the appropriation would be reimbursed by the railroads, and probably presumed that the entire sum of $125,000 would again become available for the purpose of surveying other lands after having once been used for similar purpose.

"But if so, their failure to understand the effect of the clause in question would not authorize the Comptroller to change the intention which Congress seemed to have had in making one appropriation for survey of public lands within the limits of land grants and another appropriation for the survey of the public lands generally, and which latter appropriation has been construed to relate to the survey of the public lands other than those specially provided for in the appropriation for the surveys of the public lands lying within the limits of railroad grants.

"My answer to your question, therefore, is that the continuing appropriation for the survey of the public lands lying within the limits of railroad land grants operates to prevent the use, within the limits of railroad land grants, of the regular appropriation for surveys of the public lands."

In view of this construction of the law by the Comptroller I am instructed to take due care that in awarding contracts to be paid for out of the $39,000 apportioned this State, the lands fall without the railroad land grants.

Of the $125,000 originally appropriated by the act of August 5, 1892 (and which by the act of August 18, 1894, has been reappropriated and continued), for the survey of public lands within land-grant limits, this State was apportioned the sum of $19,000 for surveys for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893. Contracts were entered into and approved for the full amount. Had these surveys been executed, the notes turned in and platted and accepted, the Northern Pacific Railway selected all lands which they were entitled to, and reimbursed the Government there would be now available only the sum of $9,500 which could be used for future surveys, under the act of August 18, 1894, for lands within the railroad land-grant limits.

As a matter of fact, however, with the exception of a contract of $35.23, none of the surveys to be paid for out of this apportionment have been accepted.

You will therefore see that we have practically no funds available for surveys in said limits for this year. I do not suppose this State is behind any other of the States or Territories in the matter of delayed surveys, and consequently I venture to say the amount of money available out of this reappropriation of $125,000 (which, by the way, could not be greater than $62,500 for the whole United States in case every survey had been accepted and the railroads had reimbursed their cost of their proportion of lands) is insignificant, too small to take into consideration.

This office has on file petitions from bona fide settlers aggregating a total cost of over $90,000, estimating the cost of surveying in this State at the former maximum rates (some of these in the eastern part of the State of course can be surveyed for less than the high rates).

I roughly estimate that we can have surveyed 40 per cent of land petitioned for. Fully one-half of the petitions for surveys on file are from settlers living within the railroad land-grant limits.

I do not presume for an instant to think that it was the intention of the members of the Committee on Appropriations when the clause in the act of August 18, 1894, reappropriating the $125,000, and making it a continuing appropriation would be so construed, to really retard the survey of the public lands.

The intention clearly was that the sum of $189,000 (act deducts from the $250,000 appropriated $45,000 for examinations and $16,000 for certain resurveys in Nebraska, leaving $189,000 to be apportioned to the several surveying districts) should be used for surveying the public lands by the different surveyors-general, under the direction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, wherever in his judgment he saw it most needed. In the reappropriation of the $125,000 in the same act it clearly was intended that whenever the railroads reimbursed the Government such funds should become immediately available for surveys within the railroad limits, as it is only just to restrict this fund there, as the roads pay for their own surveys.

As a large part of the most available land for settlement in this State lies within the limits of the railroad land grants, you will at once see that an unjust discrimination is made against settlers within said limits, as a very inadequate sum (this year almost nothing) will be available for the surveys for such.

This, too, will be the case with other States governed by like conditions, and the Senators and Representatives of such will doubtless readily join in having this at once corrected.

Very respectfully,
WM. P. WATSON,
United States Surveyor-General, Washington.

HON. WATSON C. SQUIRE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the words proposed by the chairman of the committee as an amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. Add after the word "lands," at the end of line 17, page 75:

And the Secretary of the Interior shall report to each regular session of Congress what has been done under the foregoing provision.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 76, after line 2, to strike out:

For the purpose of a survey and segregation of the coal fields on the San Carlos Indian Reservation in Arizona, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 76, after line 11, to insert:

To pay Edwin H. Van Antwerp and Charles H. Bates, United States deputy surveyors, for surveying the west boundary of the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation, as per contract with the Commissioner of the General Land Office, $461.21.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 76, after line 16, to insert:

That the governor of the State of Wyoming, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, is hereby empowered and authorized to select and enter of the public lands contained within the boundaries of the abandoned Fort McKinney Military Reservation, in Johnson County, State of Wyoming, not exceeding in all two sections, on which are situated the buildings heretofore used for military purposes; that the lands so selected and entered, with the buildings thereon, are hereby granted and donated to the State of Wyoming: Provided, That the entry and selection of lands under the provisions of this act shall be construed as being in part satisfaction of the grant of lands to the State of Wyoming for charitable, educational, penal, and reformatory institutions under the provisions of section 11 of the act of Congress of July 10, A. D. 1890.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 77, after line 7, to insert:

That the lands in the Fort Rice Military Reservation, in the State of North Dakota, except such tracts as may be occupied by bona fide settlers, may be selected at any time within one year after the passage of this act by the State of North Dakota as a part of the lands granted to the State under the provisions of an act to provide for the admission of North Dakota into the Union, approved February 23, 1889, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior; and when said lands are selected as herein provided the Secretary of the Interior shall cause patents to be issued to the said State of North Dakota: Provided, That if the State of North Dakota shall select said lands such selections shall embrace any land in said reservation except those hereby reserved on account of settlement, the amount so selected not to exceed the amount of land granted to said State by the said act of admission.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 77, after line 23, to insert:

That any citizen of the United States, or any association of citizens of the United States, or any ditch or water company, under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and with his approval, shall have the right to purchase lands suitable for reservoir purposes, not to exceed one quarter section of unoccupied public lands not reserved for public use, at the price of $2.50 per acre: Provided, That when lands so purchased are within a mining district such lands shall be considered mineral lands, and the patent to such lands shall not authorize the purchaser to extract mineral therefrom, but all such mineral shall be reserved to the United States, which reservation shall be inserted in such patent.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. At this point I submit an amendment that would be subject as a matter of course to a point of order, but the Interior Department seems anxious to have it placed in the bill, and it is perfectly right and just. If there is no objection to it I ask that it be inserted.

Mr. ALLISON. Where does the Senator propose to insert the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. Add after line 11, page 78—

That hereafter timber-culture claimants shall not be required, in making final proof, to appear at the land office to which said proof is to be presented, or before an officer designated by the act of May 20, 1890, within the county in which the land is situated; but such claimant may have his or her personal evidence taken by a clerk of any court of record of the United States or of any State or Territory, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

Mr. ALDRICH. Would not that allow a person in New York to enter a claim for timber lands?

Mr. COCKRELL. No; it is simply to make proof when they are absent, to make affidavit before a certain officer instead of having to go to the land office near the timber-culture claim. It is recommended by the Secretary of the Interior and by the Committee on Public Lands, and is simply to facilitate the transaction of business.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 80, line 4, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifteen" and insert "twenty;" so as to make the clause read:

For the preparation of the report of the mineral resources of the United States, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 80, line 7, before the word "thousand," to strike out "two" and insert "three;" so as to make the clause read:

For the purchase of necessary books for the Library, and the payment for the transmission of public documents through the Smithsonian exchange, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 80, line 9, before the word "thousand," to strike out "sixty-one" and insert "sixty-five," and in same line, after the word "dollars," to insert "and the Director of the Geological Survey, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, is authorized to sell copies of such maps at cost and 10 per cent added;"

So as to make the clause read:

For engraving and printing the geological maps of the United States, $65,000; and the Director of the Geological Survey, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, is authorized to sell copies of such maps at cost and 10 per cent added.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to strike out "such" and insert "topographical" at the end of line 11, and after the word "maps," in line 12, to insert "with text;" so as to read:

And the Director of the Geological Survey, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, is authorized to sell copies of topographical maps with text at cost and 10 per cent added.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SQUIRE. I desire to offer an amendment to come in after the amendment of the committee on page 80, at the end of line 12. I move to add:

For an investigation of the coal and gold resources of Alaska, $5,000.

If there is likely to be any discussion upon it I ask that it may go over until to-morrow.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it simply be reserved. It is not an amendment to the amendment. It is a new proposition to be offered at any time the Senator desires when we get through with the committee amendments.

Mr. SQUIRE. I only want to get it in in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. It will be in order at any time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Only committee amendments are now in order.

Mr. SQUIRE. I wish to present it so that it will not be ruled out on the ground that it is not in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. It will not be on the ground simply that it was not offered at the proper time. I do not know whether it will be in order at any time or not. That will be another question.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 80, line 16, before the word "sections," to strike out "semiarid" and insert "semiarid," and in line 17, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twelve thousand five hundred" and insert "twenty-five thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

For gauging the streams and determining the water supply of the United States, including the investigation of underground currents and artesian wells in arid and semi arid sections, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 80, line 21, to increase the total appropriation for the United States Geological Survey from $417,600 to $440,100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 81, after line 22, to insert:

For additional accommodations for the insane, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 83, after line 7, to insert:

For the construction and completion on the Howard University grounds, District of Columbia, of a suitable brick building for its use in giving practical instruction to its students in mechanics arts, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 84, after line 23, to insert:

For renewing the superstructure of the Rock Island Bridge at Rock Island, Ill., including alterations of the masonry thereof and repairs thereto for a double track, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 85, after line 2, to insert:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be renewed and changed to a double track the superstructure of the Rock Island Bridge at Rock Island, Ill., and to make all necessary alterations of the masonry work thereof and repairs thereto, as recommended by the Chief of Ordnance: Provided, however, That the total cost of such renewal, alterations, and repairs shall not exceed the sum of $490,000, and authority to contract for the whole work is hereby given: Provided further, That before any money is expended by the Government for such renewal, alterations, and repairs, the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railway Company shall secure to the United States, to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War, 60 per cent of the cost of such renewal, alterations, and repairs, to be paid by said railway company upon the request of the Secretary of War as said work progresses: Provided also, That said railway company is to bear the entire cost of the sleepers and rails put down upon said bridge, and the United States shall bear the entire cost of the wagon road on said bridge: Provided further, That the Secretary of War may sell so much of the old superstructure of said bridge as is not required in such renewal and repairs to the highest bidder, the net proceeds of the sale to be turned into the Treasury of the United States, and one-half thereof shall be paid to said railway company: Provided further, That such portion of the old superstructure of said bridge as the Ordnance Department may require to replace an unserviceable bridge across the Rock Island water-power canal may be retained by the Secretary of War for such purpose at a fair valuation, which valuation shall not exceed the price per pound obtained for the remainder of the bridge, and one-half of this valuation shall be paid to said railway company.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 88, line 8, after the word "dollars," to insert:

And the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds shall authorize the use of a portion of the ground within the circle south of the Executive Mansion for a children's playground, under regulations to be prescribed by him.

So as to make the clause read:

For improvement of grounds north and south of Executive Mansion, $5,000; and the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds shall authorize the use of a portion of the ground within the circle south of the Executive Mansion for a children's playground, under regulations to be prescribed by him.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 89, line 3, before the word "repair," to strike out "construction and," and in line 4, before the word "high," to strike out "repair of" and insert "and;" so as to make the clause read:

For repair of post-and-chain fences and high iron fences and constructing stone coping about reservations, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 91, line 13, after the word "dollars," to insert "and 50 cents;" so as to make the clause read:

Lighting the Executive Mansion and public grounds: For gas, pay of lamp-lighters, gasfitters, and laborers; purchase, erection, and repair of lamps and lamp-posts; purchase of matches, and for repairs of all kinds; fuel and lights for office, office stable, watchmen's lodges, and for the greenhouses at the nursery, $14,000: Provided, That for each 6-foot burner not connected with a meter in the lamps on the public grounds no more than $20.50 shall be paid per lamp for gas, including lighting, cleaning, and keeping in repair the lamps, under any expenditure provided for in this act; and said lamps shall burn not less than three thousand hours per annum; and authority is hereby given to substitute other illuminating material for the same or less price, and to use so much of the sum hereby appropriated as may be necessary for that purpose: Provided, That before any expenditures are made from the appropriations herein provided for, the contracting gas company shall equip each lamp with a self-regulating burner and tip, so combined and adjusted as to secure under all ordinary variations of pressure and density a consumption of 6 cubic feet of gas per hour.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 92, line 2, before the word "cents," to strike out "thirty" and insert "forty;" and in line 3, after the word "night," to strike out "$766.50" and insert "$1,022;" so as to make the clause read:

For electric lights for three hundred and sixty-five nights from seven posts, at 40 cents per light per night, $1,022.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 92, after line 10, to insert:

For changing route of pipe line that supplies the Capitol, incasing a portion of it in concrete, and uncovering and examining the entire line, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. After line 12, page 93, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 93, after line 12, it is proposed to insert:

Statue of Gen. W. T. Sherman: For the completion of the equestrian statue of Gen. William Tecumseh Sherman, $30,000: Provided, That said statue shall not be erected on the Capitol grounds.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In the discussion upon the item in reference to the Coast Survey, I stated to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. McLAURIN] that I thought General Duffield could not have been confirmed by the Senate, my recollection then being that that officer was appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury. That was the law until 1889, when, in the sundry civil act of that year, there was a requirement that that officer should be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. So Professor Mendenhall and General Duffield were appointed in the manner stated by the Senator from Mississippi.

For the construction of buildings at and the enlargement of such military posts as in the judgment of the Secretary of War may be necessary, $300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 93, after line 24, to strike out:

Said post to be established only after a thorough official examination of all the sites that may be offered to the United States for the purpose above mentioned, such examination to be made by a board of five army officers to be selected by the Secretary of War outside of the military district in which such post is to be established; and said board shall report its findings in all matters to the Secretary of War, who may approve or reject.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROACH. I do not wish to interrupt the reading of the bill at this time, but I desire to give notice of an amendment in line 24, on page 93, which I shall offer hereafter.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 94, line 8, after the word "improvement," to insert "and protection;" in line 9, after the word "improvement," to insert "and protection;" in line 12, before the word "thousand," to strike out "thirty" and insert "forty;" and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert "of which not more than $1,800 may be expended for the compensation of scouts employed in the protection of said park;" so as to make the clause read:

Improvement and protection of the Yellowstone National Park: For the improvement and protection of the Yellowstone National Park, to be expended by and under the direction of the Secretary of War, $40,000, of which not more than $1,800 may be expended for the compensation of scouts employed in the protection of said park.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 94, after line 18, to insert:

To reimburse John W. Meldrum amount paid for completion of building authorized to be erected in said park by section 9 of the foregoing act, $385.75.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 94, after line 22, to insert:

For furniture and fixtures for said building, $300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 95, line 7, after the word

"law," to insert "sites for monuments in Lookout Valley, not to exceed $300 in all;" so as to make the clause read:

Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Park: To enable the Secretary of War to complete the establishment of the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park in accordance with existing laws, including road work, memorial gateway and designs therefor, maps, surveys, iron and bronze tablets, gun carriages, land the purchase of which has heretofore been authorized by law, sites for monuments in Lookout Valley, not to exceed $300 in all, foundations for State monuments, compensation of two civilian commissioners and their assistant in historical work, labor, clerical and other assistance, and office expenses; in all, $75,000, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 95, after line 13, to insert:

Shiloh National Military Park: The commissioners appointed under the act of Congress approved December 27, 1894, to have charge, under the Secretary of War, of the affairs of the Shiloh National Military Park, shall have their office at Pittsburg Landing, Tenn., or at such other point convenient to the battlefield of Shiloh, Tenn., as the Secretary of War may direct; and the limit of cost of all the lands to be embraced in the said park is hereby fixed at not to exceed $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 95, after line 23, to insert:

Military reservation on Mackinac Island, Michigan: The Secretary of War is hereby authorized, on the application of the governor of Michigan, to turn over to the State of Michigan, for use as a State park, and for no other purpose, the military reservation and buildings and the lands of the national park on Mackinac Island, Michigan.

Mr. HAWLEY. I will suggest that measures of this kind ought to go through the proper channel, the Committee on Military Affairs. We have been in the habit, in many cases, of granting the use of old military stations to the municipal and State authorities for public parks, providing that the Secretary of War might take possession of them whenever, in his judgment, the public necessities required.

Mr. COCKRELL. The public necessities never will require that this reservation be taken. It was entirely abandoned many years ago and was made a national park, and the Secretary of War wants to get rid of it.

Mr. HAWLEY. Very well.

Mr. COCKRELL. We simply propose to donate it to the State of Michigan if that State will take it, and turn loose the few guards who are there.

Mr. HAWLEY. Very good. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President—

Mr. COCKRELL. The amendment came from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BERRY. I was going to state that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN] brought the matter to me, and I told him at the time that I thought it would have been proper to have referred it to the Committee on Military Affairs, inasmuch as the reservation had not been turned over to the Interior Department. He insisted, however, that I should address a letter to the Secretary of War on the subject, which I did, and the Secretary of War entirely approved it. I reported the amendment by order of the Committee on Public Lands, by reason of the fact that the Senator from Michigan, who was interested in the question, requested me to do so.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations or of the Senator from Arkansas whether the Government has been desiring in any way to make use of those buildings or of any part of the land?

Mr. COCKRELL. No.

Mr. BERRY. I understand not. The Secretary of War said the land would not be used longer for military purposes, and the officer in charge there recommended that the property be turned over.

Mr. HAWLEY. It has been a park, I understand.

Mr. COCKRELL. It has been a park ever since 1872 or 1873.

Mr. BERRY. It has been a park for some time. I do not remember the exact time.

Mr. BURROWS. Since 1873.

Mr. HAWLEY. Then what is the necessity for again dedicating it? I see it has been a national park. Is that it?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly, it is a national park, and now we propose to give it to the State of Michigan, if that State will accept it.

I wish to offer a proviso to come in at that point, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "Michigan," in the amendment of the committee, on line 4, page 96, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That whenever the State ceases to use the land for the purpose aforesaid it shall revert to the United States.

Mr. BURROWS. There is no objection to that.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Immediately following that amendment I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, which has been reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

THE SECRETARY. After line 4, on page 96, it is proposed to insert:

For extending and improving the Fort Wayne Military Reservation by grading the grounds, filling in the marsh along the river front, and protecting the same by a riprap of stone; for restoring the ground and constructing drains, $40,000.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 98, line 2, in the clause making appropriations for improving the Mississippi River, after the word "estimate," to insert:

And so much thereof as may be necessary, not to exceed $1,000, may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be expended in the improvement of the channel to the harbor of Bay City, Wis., at the head of Lake Pepin.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 98, line 16, before the word "thousand," to strike out "two hundred and sixty" and insert "three hundred and fifty;" so as to make the clause read:

For harbor of refuge at Point Judith, B. I.: Continuing improvement, $350,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 99, after line 12, to insert:

Provided, That $40,000 thereof shall be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of War, for the extension of the improvements for the protection of the banks of the Missouri River in front of Sioux City and on the Iowa side of the river.

So as to make the clause read:

Under Missouri River Commission: For improving Missouri River from its mouth to Sioux City, Iowa, including salaries, clerical, office, traveling, and miscellaneous expenses of the Missouri River Commission, surveys, permanent bench marks and gauges, $750,000: Provided, That $40,000 thereof shall be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of War, for the extension of the improvements for the protection of the banks of the Missouri River in front of Sioux City and on the Iowa side of the river.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 99, after line 17, to insert:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to expend, from the appropriation of $5,000 "For dredging Salmon Bay and improvement of the waterway connecting the waters of Puget Sound, at Salmon Bay, with lakes Union and Washington, by enlarging the said waterway into a ship canal, with the necessary locks and appliances in connection therewith," made by the "Act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," received by the President August 7, 1894, the sum of $5,000 in making a definite survey and location of said improvement, and in preparing a cadastral map, showing each piece of property required to be deeded to the United States or from which a release is required, with its metes and bounds.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 100, after line 8, to insert:

That the Secretary of War, in his discretion, is hereby directed to use and expend in dredging and deepening the channel of the Sabine River in Texas, at and across the bar at the mouth of said river in Sabine Lake, a sum not exceeding $4,000, to be taken from an appropriation made at the second session of the Fifty-third Congress of the United States, amounting to $275,000, for "Improving harbor at Sabine Pass, Texas: Continuing improvement," by the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes."

The amendment was agreed to.

MR. COCKRELL. After line 20, on page 100, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

THE SECRETARY. After line 20, on page 100, it is proposed to insert:

Harbor of refuge at Woods Holl, Mass.: For repair of the stone pier or breakwater constituting a harbor of refuge at Woods Holl, damaged by the storm of January 26, 1895, and for repairing, so far as may be necessary, the wooden wharf upon said breakwater, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 100, after line 20, to strike out:

The foregoing appropriations for work on rivers and harbors shall be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

MR. PLATT. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Missouri whether all these appropriations for the improvements of rivers and harbors are now under contract, or whether there is any new work provided for by these appropriations.

MR. COCKRELL. There is no new work except the stone pier at Woods Holl, and things of that kind.

MR. PLATT. That is for repairs.

MR. COCKRELL. The others are all under the contract system.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 104, line 1, after the word "disabilities," to insert "to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of War;" so as to make the clause read:

Appliances for disabled soldiers: For furnishing surgical appliances to persons disabled in the military or naval service of the United States, and not entitled to artificial limbs or trusses for the same disabilities, to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of War, $2,000.

The next amendment was, on page 104, line 13, before the word "penitentiaries," to insert "State;" and in line 15, after the word "dollars," to strike out "to be expended in the current support of military convicts;" so as to make the clause read:

Expenses of military convicts: For payment of costs and charges of State penitentiaries for the care, clothing, maintenance, and medical attendance of United States military convicts confined in them, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 106, line 5, after the word "tug," to strike out "to be purchased or constructed, ten" and insert "heretofore authorized by law, twelve;" so as to make the clause read:

For pay of crew and maintenance of one steam tug heretofore authorized by law, $12,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 106, after line 7, to insert:

For purchase or construction of one steam tug, $45,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary;

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 106, line 10, before the word "thousand," to strike out "forty-three" and insert "ninety;" so as to read:

In all, $90,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 110, after line 2, to insert:

For construction of a headquarters building, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 110, line 8, before the word "thousand," to strike out "seventy-eight" and insert "eighty-eight;" so as to make the clause read:

In all, $288,850.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 111, after line 22, to insert:

For additional barracks, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 112, line 1, before the word "thousand," to strike out "sixty" and insert "eighty-five;" so as to read:

In all, $285,100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 116, line 4, before the word "thousand," to strike out "four hundred and seventy-nine" and insert "five hundred and fourteen;" so as to read:

In all, $2,514,846.

The next amendment was, on page 120, after line 23, to insert:

The proper accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to settle the accounts of D. T. Guyton, United States marshal for the northern district of Mississippi, for the amounts paid by him to special deputies, who failed to take the oath of office required by section 782 of the Revised Statutes, in the same manner such settlements would have been made had such deputies complied with the provisions of said section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 122, line 5, after the word "grounds," to insert "as now marked and designated;" so as to read:

The Military Prison at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, including all the buildings, grounds as now marked and designated, and other property connected therewith, is hereby transferred from the Department of War to the Department of Justice.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 122, in line 23, after the word "act," to insert "entitled 'An act for the erection of United States prisons and for the imprisonment of United States prisoners and, for other purposes.'"

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 123, line 15, after the word "Reservation," to insert an additional proviso, as follows:

Provided, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to transfer on or before September 30, 1895, such prisoners as may then be serving unexpired sentences of confinement at the military prison, for purely military offenses, to such military posts as he may designate for that purpose; and the commanding officers of the posts to which such military prisoners are transferred shall have care and custody of the said prisoners and shall perform the duties now required of the commandant of the military prison under sections 1352 to 1361, inclusive, of the Revised Statutes. And the military prisoners so transferred, or who may hereafter be confined at hard labor at military posts, shall be governed by such regulations affecting their discipline, management, and control as may be prepared by the Secretary of War and published in general orders to the Army.

MR. ALLISON. Before we pass from this amendment, I wish to state that the whole system of transferring the military prison at Fort Leavenworth from the Army to the Department of Justice and placing it under the control of the Attorney-General is in my judgment unwise. It involves a great many considerations which I think ought not to appear on an appropriation bill. The amendment just read is a necessary one, if the scheme is to be carried out, and it will be seen that the amendment transfers the military prisoners now at Fort Leavenworth to the several Army posts of the United States, where they are to be treated as prisoners and are to be confined as provided by the sections alluded to in the bill.

I believe military prisoners convicted and sentenced for a period of one or two or three years ought to have a prison under the control of the Secretary of War and the Army. Such a prison we now have at Fort Leavenworth and have had for many years, and the amendment proposes now to transfer the whole conduct of the prison to the Attorney-General, providing for civilian wardens, etc., and in effect it segregates from the property at Fort Leavenworth now belonging to the Army 1,000 acres of land, which are to be put under the control of the Attorney-General.

I do not for myself propose to make any amendment, because the Committee on Appropriations have approved the whole scheme and plan, and it is recommended by the Secretary of War, and I believe it is approved by the Attorney-General. But I think two or three years will disclose that this is a mistake both for the Department of Justice and for the Army.

Mr. PEPPER. I ask that the amendment may be passed over until we have a full Senate.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ought to say that in my judgment the entire provision pertaining to the abandonment of the military prison and the sending of the prisoners to army posts should be stricken out, beginning with line 4, on page 122, down to and including line 6, on page 124.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let all of it be reserved.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is all reserved.

Mr. CHANDLER. I suggest that by reserving the amendment it can all be stricken out in the Senate if it is desirable.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let all the amendments relating to military prisons contained on pages 122, 123, and 124 be passed over.

Mr. HAWLEY. All that relates to military prisons.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that from line 4, on page 122, down to and including line 6, on page 124, is reserved.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is right.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 125, after line 3, to insert:

Jail building at Guthrie, Okla.: For purchase of the building and ground now used and occupied as a jail at Guthrie, Oklahoma Territory, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 126, line 5, after the word "dollars," to strike out:

Provided, That hereafter the estimates for miscellaneous expenses of the Supreme Court of the United States shall be submitted in detail as to salaries paid thereunder, and for all other objects.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if there is any real objection to the clause as it was inserted in the other House. I desire to know whether there can be any objection to having those estimates submitted in detail.

Mr. COCKRELL. We thought it was hardly right for us to tell a coordinate branch of the Government exactly how everything should be done, as to what they want, and all that.

Mr. ALLISON. The proviso relates to miscellaneous expenses.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 126, line 21, after the word "work," to insert:

And of the statements required to be prepared by said act of October 19, 1888, there shall be printed, after the close of each regular session of Congress, the usual number of copies;

So as to make the clause read:

Statement of appropriations: For preparation, under the direction of the Committees on Appropriations of the Senate and House of Representatives, of the statements showing appropriations made, new offices created, offices the salaries of which have been omitted, increased, or reduced, together with a chronological history of the regular appropriation bills passed during the third session of the Fifty-third Congress, as required by the act approved October 19, 1888, §1,200, to be paid to the persons designated by the chairmen of said committees to do said work. And of the statements required to be prepared by said act of October 19, 1888, there shall be printed, after the close of each regular session of Congress, the usual number of copies.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 127 to insert:

The Secretary of the Senate is authorized to make requisition upon the Public Printer for the binding for the Senate library of such books as he may deem necessary, at a cost not to exceed two hundred dollars per year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 127, after line 4, to insert:

For rent of warehouse for the storage of public documents formerly in the Maltby Building, $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 127, after line 7, to insert:

For 2,000 galvanized-iron file holders for the Senate document room, $380.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 127, after line 10, to insert:

For repairs of Maltby Building, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 127, after line 11, to insert:

For pay of E. T. Cressy for preparing a catalogue of the books contained in the Senate library under the direction of Anson G. McCook, former Secretary of the Senate, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 127, after line 15, to insert:

To pay for the work done in preparing and completing the document index of the Fifty-third Congress, by Alonso W. Church, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 128, line 1, after the word "list," to insert:

Provided, That the officer in charge be, and he is hereby, authorized to construct, with the moneys appropriated for the said building, a tunnel, with suitable conveying apparatus for the rapid transmission of books, papers, and messages, between the said Library building and the Capitol, the terminal of said apparatus in the Capitol to occupy the room in rear of that now occupied by the House Committee on Enrolled Bills.

So as to make the clause read:

BUILDING FOR THE LIBRARY OF CONGRESS.

For continuing the construction of the building for the Library of Congress, and for each and every purpose connected with the same, $900,000: Provided, That while the officer in charge of said building is engaged upon works of construction confided to him by authority of Congress, his pay and allowances shall be the same as for officers of his grade on the active list: Provided, That the officer in charge be, and he is hereby, authorized to construct, with the moneys appropriated for the said building, a tunnel, with suitable conveying apparatus for the rapid transmission of books, papers, and messages, between the said Library building and the Capitol, the terminal of said apparatus in the Capitol to occupy the room in the rear of that now occupied by the House Committee on Enrolled Bills.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 129, line 1, after the word "for," to insert "rents and," and in line 4, before the word "dollars," to strike out "five hundred and fifty thousand" and insert "nine hundred and twenty-eight thousand three hundred and twenty," so as to make the clause read:

For the public printing, for the public binding, and for paper for the public printing, including the cost of printing the debates and proceedings of Congress in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and for lithographing, mapping, and engraving for both Houses of Congress, the Supreme Court of the United States, the supreme court of the District of Columbia, the Court of Claims, the Library of Congress, the Executive Office, and the Departments, including salaries or compensation of all necessary clerks and employees, for labor (by the day, piece, or contract), and for rents and all the necessary materials which may be needed in the prosecution of the work, $2,928,320; and from the said sum hereby appropriated printing and binding shall be done by the Public Printer to the amounts following, respectively, namely:

Mr. CHANDLER. It seems to me the amendment should be passed over until the details of the expenditure are passed upon.

Mr. COCKRELL. This amendment will follow the others. I ask that it may be passed over. It is the total only, but it is at the beginning. It will follow the amendments on the same subject that come after it. If the others are agreed to, it will stay in. If not, it will have to be modified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I submit an amendment, which I intend to propose to the pending appropriation bill. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PASCO. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the pending bill. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 129, line 18, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That hereafter the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, authorized to print of each issue of consular reports an edition not exceeding 7,000 copies.

So as to make the clause read:

For the State Department, $13,000: Provided, That hereafter the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, authorized to print of each issue of consular reports an edition not exceeding 7,000 copies.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 130, line 19, after the word "Director," to insert "and for printing advance copies of papers on economic resources;" in line 20, before the word "thousand," to strike out "five" and insert "seven," and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That hereafter the report of the mineral resources of the United States shall be issued as a part of the report of the Director of the Geological Survey, and printed for each preceding calendar year as soon as compiled and transmitted for publication, and that the separate chapters on any given mineral product, such as iron, coal, building stone, and so forth, shall be printed as rapidly as transmitted for publication; that a pamphlet edition of any chapter shall be printed for distribution on the request of the Director of the Geological Survey, approved by Secretary of the Interior, the size of the edition to be controlled by the importance of the mineral treated; that hereafter papers for the Director's annual report that are of a strictly economic character shall be issued in pamphlet form, in the manner as prescribed above for the report on the mineral resources; that the entire cost of paper, printing, and binding of all the above provided for pamphlets shall not exceed two thousand dollars;

So as to make the clause read:

For engraving the illustrations necessary for the report of the Director, and for printing advance copies of papers on economic resources, $7,000: Provided, That hereafter the report of the mineral resources of the United States shall be issued as a part of the report of the Director of the Geological Survey, and printed for each preceding calendar year as soon as compiled and transmitted for publication, and that the separate chapters on any given mineral product, such as iron, coal, building stone, etc., shall be printed as rapidly as transmitted for publication; that a pamphlet edition of any chapter shall be printed for distribution on the request of the Director of the Geological Survey, approved by the Secretary of the Interior, the size of the edition to be controlled by the importance of the mineral treated; that hereafter papers for the Director's annual report that are of a strictly economic character shall be issued in pamphlet form, in the same manner as prescribed above for the report on the mineral resources; that the entire cost of paper, printing, and binding of all of the above provided for pamphlets shall not exceed $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 131, line 16, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That hereafter 3,000 copies of the monographs and bulletins of the Geological Survey shall be published for scientific exchanges and for sale at the cost of paper, printing, and binding, and 10 per cent thereof added.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 132, line 15, after the word "expended," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That so much as may be necessary for printing and binding the annual report of the Secretary of Agriculture, as required by the act approved January 12, 1895, shall be immediately available and shall not be included in said allotments.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 132, after line 20, to strike out:

For printing and binding the annual report of the Secretary of Agriculture, as required by the act approved January 12, 1895, $300,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish the Senate to disagree to that amendment. The clause from line 21 to line 24 should remain. There are two sets of reports to be provided for. I have a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture in regard to it. The report of 1894 is on hand, and therefore this provision has to remain in the bill.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was at the top of page 133, to strike out—

For printing and binding 75,000 copies of special report on Diseases of the Horse, as required by the act approved January 12, 1895, $44,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 133, after line 5, to strike out:

For a complete set of the official records of the Union and Confederate armies for each Senator and Member of the present Congress not already entitled by law to receive the same, as required by the act approved January 12, 1895, $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 133, after line 11, to strike out:

That nothing in the second provision of section 99 of the act providing for the public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents, approved January 12, 1895, shall be held to contravene the orders of either House of Congress authorizing printing for the use of committees, as to the number of copies or otherwise.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 133, after line 53, to strike out:

To enable the Public Printer during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, to comply with the provisions of the joint resolution approved February 6, 1883, for the removal and storage of certain property of the Government mentioned therein, $7,320.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 134, line 14, after the word "office," to insert "except for the two Houses of Congress, their committees and officers;" so as to make the clause read:

That all appropriations made and to be made for the fiscal years 1895 and 1896, in so far as the same are affected by the provisions of the act providing for the public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents, approved January 12, 1895, and which are not expressly appropriated under the Government Printing Office, except for the two Houses of Congress, their committees, and officers, shall be considered as so appropriated and available thereunder, to the extent that the same may be required or contemplated by the said act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 135, after line 6, to insert:

The Public Printer, under section 37 of the "Act providing for the public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents," approved January 12, 1895, may, at the request of any Senator, Representative, or Delegate in Congress, print on envelopes authorized to be furnished, in addition to the words therein named, the name of the Senator, Representative, or Delegate, and State, the date, and the topic or subject-matter, not exceeding twelve words.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 135, after line 15, to insert:

That nothing in the act entitled "An act providing for the public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents," approved January 12, 1895, shall prevent the stereotyping, printing, and distribution of the Supplement to the Revised Statutes as authorized by the act of February 27, 1893, chapter 167.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 135, after line 23, to insert:

Government Printing Office building: For the construction by the Chief of Engineers of a fireproof building upon the lot belonging to the United States now occupied by the stables of the Government Printing Office, according to the plan and specifications of Col. John M. Wilson, of the Engineer Corps, submitted to Gen. Thomas L. Casey, Chief of Engineers, December 17, 1894, and approved by him, $121,121.90, to be immediately available and until the completion of said work.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 136, after line 9, to insert:

The appropriation of $75,000 made by the sundry civil appropriation act, approved August 18, 1894, for the repair of the Government Printing Office, to provide fire escapes, and to put the building in a safe and secure condition, shall be available until the completion of the work.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. We have now reached the proposed section 2. I rose to move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. BATE. I desire to say that at some suitable time during the consideration of the pending bill I shall offer an amendment known as the Tennessee Centennial Exposition appropriation.

Mr. COCKRELL. There will be ample opportunity for that amendment hereafter.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE LISLE.

Mr. LINDSAY. I desire to give notice that on Friday next, March 1, I shall call up the resolutions of the other House on the death of the Hon. Marcus C. Lisle, late a Representative from the State of Kentucky.

Mr. DANIEL. There is a joint resolution which was reported favorably to-day by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE] from the Committee on Military Affairs—

Mr. COCKRELL. There was an express understanding, distinctly stated, when I asked for a night session, that no such business should be transacted. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri moves that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 10 o'clock and 56 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 26, 1895, at 11 o'clock a. m.

VETO MESSAGE—SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith without approval House bill No. 5740, entitled "An act incorporating the Society of American Florists."

No sufficient reason is apparent for the incorporation of this organization under Federal laws. There is not the least difficulty in the way of the accomplishment under State laws by the incorporators named in the bill of every purpose which can legitimately belong to their corporate existence. The creation of such a corporation by a special act of Congress establishes a vexatious and troublesome precedent.

There appears to be no limit in the bill to the value of the real and personal property which the proposed corporation may hold if acquired by donation or bequest. The limit of $50,000 applies only to property acquired by purchase.

A conclusive objection to the bill is found in the fact that it fails to carry out the purposes and objects of those interested in its passage. The promoters of the bill are florists who undoubtedly seek to advance floriculture. The declared object of the proposed incorporation is, however, stated in the bill to be "the elevation and advancement of horticulture in all its branches, to increase and diffuse the knowledge thereof, and for kindred purposes in the interest of horticulture."

It is entirely clear that the interests of florists would be badly served by a corporation confined to the furtherance of garden culture.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 23, 1895.

VETO MESSAGE—OKLAHOMA AND PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith without approval House bill No. 8165, entitled "An act authorizing the Kansas City, Oklahoma and Pacific Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through Indian reservations in the Indian Territory and the Territories of Oklahoma and New Mexico, and for other purposes."

This bill contains concessions more comprehensive and sweeping than any ever presented for my approval, and it seems to me the rights and interests of the Indians and the Government are the least protected.

The route apparently desired, though passing through or into one State and three Territories, is described as indefinitely as possible, and does not seem to be subject to the approval in its entirety of the Secretary of the Interior or any other governmental agency having relation to the interest involved.

There is no provision for obtaining the consent of the Indians through whose territory and reservations the railroad may be located.

Though it is proposed to build the railroad through Territories having local courts convenient to their inhabitants, all controversies that may arise out of the location and building of the road are by the provisions of the bill to be passed upon by the United States circuit and district courts for the district of Kansas, "and such other courts as may be authorized by Congress."

The bill provides that "the civil jurisdiction of said courts is hereby extended within the limits of said Indian reservations without distinction as to citizenship of the parties, so far as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act." This provision permits the subordination of the jurisdiction of Indian courts, which we are bound by treaty to protect, to the "provisions of this act" and to the interests and preferences of the railroad company for whose benefit the bill under consideration is intended.

A plan of appraisal is provided for in the bill in case an agreement can not be reached as to the amount of compensation to be paid for the taking of lands held by individual occupants according to the laws, customs, and usages of any of the Indian nations or tribes, or by allotment or agreement with the Indians. It is, however, further provided that in case either party is dissatisfied with the award of the referees to be appointed an appeal may be taken to the district court held at Wichita, Kans., no matter where on the proposed route of the road the controversy may originate. If upon the hearing of said appeal the judgment of the court shall be for the same sum as the award of the referees, the costs shall be adjudged against the appellant, and if said judgment shall be for a smaller sum the cost shall be adjudged against the party claiming damages. It does not seem to me that the interests of an Indian occupant or allottee is properly regarded when he is obliged, if dissatisfied with an award for the taking of his land, to go to the district court of Kansas for redress, at the risk of incurring costs and expenses that may not only exceed the award originally made to him, but leave him in debt.

It is probable that there are other valid objections to this bill. I have only attempted to suggest enough to justify my action in disapproving it. In constructing legislation of this description it should not be forgotten that the rights and interests of the Indians are important in every view and should be scrupulously protected.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 25, 1895.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

VETO MESSAGE—HIRAM R. RHEA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith without approval House bill No. 4058, entitled "An act granting a pension to Hiram R. Rhea and repealing an act approved March 3, 1871."

The person named in the title of this bill was pensioned under the provisions of a private act passed March 3, 1871. In 1893 a letter from the Commissioner of Pensions was presented to Congress exhibiting facts which established in a most satisfactory manner that the claim for pension allowed by said special act was a barefaced and impudent fraud, supported by deliberate perjury. This letter appears to be the moving cause of the passage of the bill now before me. Payment of pension under the fraudulent act has been suspended since January 28, 1893, and since that time no information has been received from the fraudulent pensioner.

The circumstances developed called for the repeal of the law of 1871 placing him upon the pension roll. This is accomplished in the second section of the bill under consideration, which section I would be glad to approve. This repeal, however, is accompanied by a provision in the first section of the bill directing the Secretary of the Interior to place upon the pension roll this identical fraudulent pensioner under a certificate numbered precisely the same as that heretofore issued to him "at a rate proportionate to the degree of disability from such gunshot wounds as may be shown to the satisfaction of said Secretary to have been received at the hands of Confederate soldiers or sympathizers while said Rhea was attempting to cooperate with the Union forces," etc.

Inasmuch as the letter of the Commissioner of Pensions to which reference has been made, and which forms part of the committee's report on this bill is the basis of this repealing provision, and inasmuch as this letter furnishes evidence that the pensioner was, when injured, a very disreputable member of a band of armed rebels and was wounded by Union soldiers, I can not understand why the same bill, which for this reason purges the pension rolls of his name, should in the same breath undo this work and direct his name to be rewritten on the rolls.

If the facts before Congress justify the repeal of the law under which this man fraudulently received a pension for nearly twenty-two years they certainly do not justify the provision directing his name to be put on the rolls again with a view to further examination of his case or for any other purpose.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 23, 1895.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask consent that that message, with the accompanying papers, be allowed to remain on the table for the present.

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 8479) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

WITHERBY & GAFFNEY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 4507) for the relief of Witherby & Gaffney, with a Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. CHICKERING. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the amendment of the Senate with the following additional amendments, which I ask the Clerk to report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 20, after the word "aforesaid," insert the following: "Provided, That in no event shall an amount exceeding $5,414.28 be allowed against the Government."

In line 33, after the word "appropriated," insert the following: "Not exceeding $5,414.28."

The amendments to the amendment were agreed to.

The amendment of the Senate as amended was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. CHICKERING, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

SENATE RESOLUTIONS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following joint resolutions of the Senate; which were severally read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and referred to the committees named below:

Joint resolution (S. R. 133) directing the Secretary of War to make an examination of the bridge to be constructed over the Delaware River, between the States of New Jersey and Pennsylvania—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Joint resolution (S. R. 134) calling on the President to take such measures as he may deem necessary to consummate the agreement between the Governments of Spain and the United States for the relief of Antonio Maximo Mora, a naturalized citizen of the United States—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

DONATION OF CANNON TO CITY OF BURLINGTON, VT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the joint resolution (S. R. 138) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to deliver unserviceable or condemned cannon to the mayor of Burlington, Vt., to be used in decorating Battery Park.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of this joint resolution.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to deliver to the mayor of the city of Burlington, Vt., four pieces of unserviceable or condemned cannon and one hundred cannon balls, for use in decorating Battery Park, in said city, where soldiers and sailors of the war of 1812 were buried: Provided, That the same can be spared without detriment to the service, and that no expense is thereby incurred by the Government.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and being read a third time, was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. POWERS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

RETURN OF A JOINT RESOLUTION TO THE SENATE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following Senate resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the engrossed joint resolution (H. Res. 277) in reference to the free zone along the northern frontier of Mexico and adjacent to the United States.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, this request of the Senate will be complied with, and the bill will be returned to the Senate in accordance with the request.

There was no objection.

ROBERT BRIGHAM.

Mr. SIBLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7000) for the relief of Robert Brigham, late postmaster at Franklin, Pa.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Robert Brigham, late postmaster at Franklin, Pa., the sum of $2,666.93, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same being amount lost through the failure of Venango National Bank, where such money was deposited by order of the Postmaster-General.

Mr. SAYERS. I should like to have some explanation of this bill. We want to know when this loss occurred.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman can make a short explanation.

Mr. SIBLEY. Mr. Speaker, Mr. Robert Brigham was appointed postmaster by President Lincoln, at a time when the post-office at Franklin was a fourth-class post-office. Inside of a very few months, on account of the discovery and development of the petroleum fields of that Commonwealth, this post-office became the second or third office in the amount of business transacted in the State of Pennsylvania. Mr. Brigham, at his own expense, fitted up the office and put in boxes. At that time Mr. C. B. Culver, of the firm of Culver, Penn & Co., was a Representative in Congress. Another banker, Mr. Blakeley, was the bondsman of Mr. Brigham. Mr. Culver secured an order or presented an order to Mr. Brigham from the Postmaster-General, which Major McDowell, a member of the present House from Pennsylvania, who was at that time a clerk in the office, saw and read, directing him to transfer his account from the bank of Mr. Blakeley, who was his bondsman, to the bank of Mr. Culver. Very soon thereafter Mr. Culver failed, the national bank failed, and Mr. Brigham lost his money. A fire which occurred afterwards destroyed all the fixtures that he had put in at his own expense. Mr. Brigham's bill was originally for $7,000.

Mr. McDowell, Mr. STONE, and myself agreed, all being residents of the town, that the money he had deposited under the order of the Postmaster-General should be paid to him and that we would unite in asking the House to reimburse him. This bill passed the Senate, but it failed to obtain consideration in the House. It has been before Congress for twenty years. It is another "Denman" case. This is a very small portion of the amount of money he lost. He went in there in affluent circumstances and was almost pauperized.

Mr. SAYERS. Has the bill been reported by a committee of the House?

Mr. SIBLEY. It has been very fully examined by the subcommittee, and also reported on favorably by the full Committee of Claims. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HUDSON] was in charge of it; and it has also been examined by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX]. I regret exceedingly that Mr. McDOWELL is not in his place this morning. He has been here every morning for a week for the purpose of explaining this bill to members of the House should it be called up, he having been chief clerk in the office at the time and being familiar with all the circumstances, as is also Governor STONE, who represents the district in which this claimant lives.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I will have to object to the consideration of that bill.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

BYRON COTTON.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8818) to increase the pension of Byron Cotton.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is directed and empowered to place upon the pension roll the name of Byron Cotton, late of Company A, Twenty-fourth Iowa Infantry Volunteers, at the rate of $12 a month in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 6, after the word "of," strike out the words "seventy-two" and insert the words "thirty-six;" so as to read, "at the rate of $36 per month."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask if this bill has been considered in the Committee of the Whole at a Friday night session?

Mr. LACEY. They called the roll on last Friday night and came within one of my name. It has not been considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. JONES. I will have to object.

Mr. LACEY. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not recognize the gentleman for that purpose. It is not in order to-day, anyway.

JAMES PHELAN.

Mr. GRIFFIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6870) for the relief of James Phelan, internal-revenue collector at Detroit, Mich.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to James Phelan, United States collector of internal revenue at Detroit, Mich., out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $300.05, the amount stolen from the vault in the internal-revenue office on the night of April 13, 1894.

Mr. SAYERS. I would like to have an explanation of that bill.

Mr. GRIFFIN of Michigan. I ask that the report be read.

The report (by Mr. RICHARDS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6870) for the relief of James Phelan, respectfully report:

James Phelan was appointed collector of internal revenue for the first district of Michigan and assumed possession of the office the 1st of December, 1893. The evidence in the case consists of the testimony of the collector, his immediate predecessor in office, the chief deputy collector, a deputy collector, and the cashier, the three latter of whom had for a number of years held the position under the former incumbent, and also two detectives and other persons, and clearly shows the following facts:

The internal-revenue office is and has been for some years located on the second floor of the Tribune building, Detroit, in which a night watchman was employed. During the night of the 13th of April, 1894, the internal-revenue office was broken into by burglars and $300.05 was stolen from the vault, entrance having been made through a window of an office of a cotenant occupying the rear part of the first floor of the same building.

Upon discovery of the burglary on the morning of the 14th of April the police authorities were summoned and a thorough investigation made. It was found that the door leading from the hall into the office had been forced open; that a piece of the door casing had been cut away large enough to permit the entrance of an instrument that was used in forcing the door; holes had been drilled through the handles and combinations of the outer and inner doors of the vault.

Some years prior the depository banks of Detroit closed at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, and very little, if any, money remained in the vault in the collector's office overnight. In more recent years the depository banks have closed at 3 o'clock, while the regulations of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue require the collector to keep his office open for the transaction of business until 4 o'clock. During these latter years arrangements have been made with the leading tobacco and cigar manufacturers and brewers to make their purchases of stamps early in the day, but the testimony of Mr. Wheeler, chief deputy collector, and Cook, a deputy collector, both of whom have been in the office for several years, shows that it had been the invariable rule not to refuse the sale of stamps up to 4 o'clock, and that the money received from taxpayers between 3 and 4 o'clock, as well as that received by mail between those hours, was deposited in the vault for safe-keeping, and treated as part of the collections of the following day and so afterwards deposited. The testimony of Lendley, the cashier, shows that on the 13th of April the sums received between these hours by him aggregated the precise sum stolen, and a detailed statement of the items and from whom they were received is given. These sums were placed by him in the vault about 4.10 p. m. on the 13th day of April last, and the inner and outer doors of the vault were then carefully and securely locked.

The committee find that no negligence or lack of care is attributable to the collector or his office force or agents; that the loss to the Government was promptly made good by the collector on the morning of the 14th of April, and recommend the passage of the bill which is introduced to reimburse the collector for the amount thus paid by him.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MICHAEL RYAN.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8391) for the relief of Michael Ryan.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to revoke the order dishonorably discharging Private Michael Ryan, Company I, Fifth Regiment United States Infantry, on September 20, 1865, and to issue to him an honorable discharge from the military service of the United States as of that date.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask that the report be read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. SAYERS and Mr. WELLS. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. CURTIS of New York) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8391) for the relief of Michael Ryan, have had the same under consideration, and recommend that the bill do pass.

This soldier served the United States Army from 1857 to 1865. The facts in this case are fully set forth in a letter directed to Hon. LOREN FLETCHER, a member of this Congress, from Hon. William Lochren, Commissioner of Pensions, concerning Senate bill 2510, identical with the House bill, which letter is herewith appended and made a part of this report. The committee have examined the proceedings of the court-martial which tried Private Ryan, and to which reference is made in the aforesaid letter, and find that the facts as proven at the trial are correctly set forth by the Commissioner of Pensions.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF PENSIONS,
Washington, February 7, 1895.

MY DEAR SIR: I am quite desirous, as I have stated to you, for the passage of the bill (S. 2510) for the relief of Michael Ryan, late private Company I, Fifth Regiment United States Infantry. It will be an act of justice to a deserving soldier and good citizen of our State, and constituent of your own, with whom you have, as I believe, some personal acquaintance.

Michael Ryan, when a youth and before the late war, enlisted in that company and regiment. At the end of his first term of service, September 20, 1863, he at once reenlisted for another term of three years, and served faithfully and with credit through the entire war. In the summer of 1865 the regiment was sent to New Mexico, and while stationed at Fort Sumner, near the end of his second term of enlistment, he was one night included in a detail to guard artillery upon the parade ground. Where the detail was formed some old arms were piled, among which he observed an old Colt's revolver, which he picked up and put in his blouse pocket.

The act was noticed by a noncommissioned officer, who, finding that he had put the revolver in his pocket, arrested him and preferred a charge against him of theft of property of the United States. Upon this charge he was tried by court-martial, convened August 17, 1865, and found guilty, notwithstanding his statement that he took up the pistol with the intention of keeping it during that night on guard, and notwithstanding the fact that the first lieutenant of his company testified, "I have known Private Ryan since some time in July, 1862, and have always considered him a very good soldier; never have known him to be accused of theft until the present occasion." He was sentenced to be kept at hard labor in charge of the guard for the remainder of his term of enlistment, and to be then dishonorably discharged, with forfeiture of all pay and allowances, except the just dues to the laundress and sutler. This sentence was approved September 2, 1865, eighteen days before the expiration of his second term of enlistment.

Mr. Ryan has related the matter to me several times, and I have examined the original record of the court-martial in the office of the Judge-Advocate-General, and have a copy of the same, kindly furnished me by that officer, which I will transmit if desired. But there is no question as to the simple facts as I have briefly stated them. The only matter in doubt is the intent with which he picked up the old revolver and put it in his pocket, when going out at night on guard, whether from curiosity to examine and return it in the morning, or to keep it. Had he been at that place—not going on guard—and picked it up and examined it from curiosity and laid it down, nothing wrong could be charged. It was not an infantry arm with which he was familiar, and he might have had some curiosity to examine it. Going out on guard for the night, whence he would return to the same place, his statement is by no means incredible—that he took it with him intending to return it.

But even if at the end of two terms of faithful service, including the whole period of the war, on seeing this old pistol he formed the purpose of taking it as a souvenir of his service, it seems to me a venial offense, no more than numberless good soldiers did, and that the sentence of dishonorable discharge, in view of his military service and good character as a soldier, was cruel and undeserved. The other parts of the sentence were much more than adequate punishment.

Mr. Ryan has been my neighbor ever since the war. He is an honest, respectable man, who has the warm regard of all who know him. For nearly twenty years he has been a member of our city police, and I know that all of our citizens who have had anything to do with our municipal government would commend him in the highest terms.

As age is approaching and children and grandchildren are growing up about him, he feels keenly the disgrace and, as he thinks, injustice of resting under the stain of a dishonorable discharge from his military service, so long extended and creditably performed. If I can interest you in this matter, so as to secure what I think is but tardy justice, I shall be extremely gratified.

Very sincerely, yours,

WM. LOCHREN.

HON. LOREN FLETCHER,
House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MATHEW S. PRIEST.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PEARSON] has a matter which went over by consent last Friday. The Clerk will again report the bill. Objection was made and it went over subject to be called up again.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1314) for the relief of Mathew S. Priest.

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $600 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to compensate Mathew S. Priest for services rendered by him for the Government of the United States from the 16th day of March to the 27th day of August, 1863, as engineer of the steamers Silver Wave and Moderator, in passing the batteries of Vicksburg, Warrenton, and Grand Gulf, and for repairing steamers.

SEC. 2. That the sum hereby appropriated is made immediately available.

The Senate amendments were read, as follows:

In line 3 strike out "six hundred" and insert "three hundred and seventy-five." In line 8 strike out "twenty-seventh" and insert "seventeenth." Strike out section 2.

Mr. REED. I would like to know what this is all about. The only word I could hear, and I listened carefully, was "available," which makes me think it had some reference to the Treasury of the United States. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill as it will read when amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $375 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to compensate Mathew S. Priest for services rendered by him for the Government of the United States from the 16th day of March to the 17th day of August, 1863, as engineer of the steamers Silver Wave and Moderator, in passing the batteries of Vicksburg, Warrenton, and Grand Gulf, and for repairing steamers.

Mr. REED. I hope somebody will explain the bill. I understand there is $300 and some "silverware" and a couple of steamboats involved. That is about all I could get out of the reading.

Mr. PEARSON. Mr. Speaker, the beneficiary of this bill was a private soldier in the Thirteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and was one of a detachment made by order of General Grant to do special service on board of the steamers Silver Wave and Moderator in running by the forts at Vicksburg and Grand Gulf. He served in such detachment as an engineer from March, 1863, until September, 1863, as shown by the affidavits of four of his comrades and one officer, and the records of the War Department. The men and officers engaged in this service were authorized by special order from General Grant to be paid by the Quartermaster-General's Department. An order was made to pay these men for this duty, as appears by the records of the War Department. The records also show that the others were paid, and that this man never has been paid. A bill passed at the last session of this House giving him $600, and was sent to Senate and was there amended giving him $375; and I move that we agree to the Senate amendment.

Mr. REED. Why was he not paid?

Mr. PEARSON. I do not know why, but it turns out that he never was paid. He has been knocking at the doors of Congress for quite a long while, but he never has been paid. I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. PEARSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendments were concurred in was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE ILLINOIS RIVER AT HENNEPIN.

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill No. 8883 to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Illinois River at or near the town of Hennepin.

The bill was read. The amendments recommended by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce were concurred in.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

REGENTS OF THE SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 109) to fill vacancies in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution other than members of Congress, caused by the death of James C. Welling, of the city of Washington, be filled by the appointment of Gardiner G. Hubbard, a citizen of Washington, of the District of Columbia.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BARTLETT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

ALEXANDER M. LAUGHLIN.

Mr. FUNK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8884) granting a pension to Alexander M. Laughlin.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Alexander M. Laughlin, who was a private in the company of Capt. George B. Willis, Fortieth Regiment, Fourth Brigade, First Division of the Illinois State Militia, and who served as such in the Indian war of 1832, known as the Black Hawk war, and pay to him a pension at the rate of $3 per month.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I hope the report in that case will be read.

The report (by Mr. MOSES) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8884) granting pension to Alexander M. Laughlin, have considered the same and respectfully report as follows:

The claimant was a private in Capt. George B. Willis's company, Fortieth Regiment, Fourth Brigade, First Division of Illinois Volunteers, in the Black Hawk war. The rolls of the company, which are on file with your committee, fail to show the exact date of his enlistment, but this presumably took place on May 21, 1832, as nearly all of the other members of the company enlisted on that day. He was mustered out with the company on June 18, 1832.

Although, as stated above, the exact date of enlistment is not shown by the rolls, it is fair to presume that, like the majority of the company, he served twenty-nine days, just one day short of the time required to give title to pension under the Indian war act of July 27, 1892.

Mr. Laughlin is now 79 years old and in straitened circumstances and unable to do anything toward earning a support.

The passage of the bill is respectfully recommended, with an amendment fixing the rate of pension at $12 per month so as to conform to the provisions of an act passed by the House at this session and now on Senate Calendar.

The amendment recommended by the committee in the last paragraph of the report was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

DR. SAMUEL D. GROSS.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 117) granting permission for the erection of a bronze statue in Washington, D. C., in honor of the late Prof. Samuel D. Gross, M. D., LL. D., D. C. L.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Joint resolution granting permission for the erection of a bronze statue in Washington, D. C., in honor of the late Prof. Samuel D. Gross, M. D., LL. D., D. C. L.

Whereas the physicians and surgeons of the United States of America have raised a fund for the erection of a bronze statue to the memory of Samuel D. Gross, M. D., LL. D., D. C. L., late professor of surgery in the Jefferson Medical College of Philadelphia, whose labors in the cause of his profession as surgeon and as author have caused his name to be respected in the civilized world as one of the benefactors of his race and have added luster to the entire medical profession of the United States; Therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled. That permission be, and the same is hereby, granted to the American Surgical Association and the Alumni Association of the Jefferson Medical College to erect said statue in such place in the city of Washington, D. C., as shall be designated by the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds. And the sum of $1,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the erection of a pedestal upon which to place the said statue.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this joint resolution?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. HITT. Can the gentleman state where this statue is to be placed?

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. That is to be under the direction of the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. HITT. But where is the statue going to be put?

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. I do not know.

Mr. HITT. That is a pretty serious question, but I will not object.

The joint resolution was passed.

On motion of Mr. CLARKE of Alabama, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8398) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 444) making the surveyor of the District of Columbia a salaried officer, and to provide for more efficient service in the surveyor's office.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. Pending the demand for the regular order the Chair lays before the House the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, there is a considerable number of amendments made by the Senate, and as it is quite late in the session I ask unanimous consent that the amendments of the Senate be nonconcurrent in and a conference asked for.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. DANIELS. Mr. Speaker, there is one provision that has been added by the Senate which, it strikes me, should receive the attention of the House. It is in reference to the Indian lands in western New York. I should like to have an opportunity of presenting that matter to the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York objects to the unanimous consent asked for, that the amendments of the Senate be nonconcurrent in.

Mr. DANIELS. No, Mr. Speaker, I do not object to the non-concurrence, but I desire to move to reject one of the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The request of the gentleman from Indiana is that all the Senate amendments be nonconcurrent in.

Mr. DANIELS. Very well.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana, that the House nonconcur in the amendments of the Senate, and ask for a conference?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. HOLMAN, Mr. ALLEN, and Mr. PICKLER.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, this is the day set apart under the rule for business reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia; but by agreement with the chairman of that committee, I will ask that, if it is agreeable to the House, next Thursday be substituted.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, before that consent is given I should like to hear from the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations as to the propriety of setting apart Thursday for this business, in view of the condition of the appropriation bills.

Mr. SAYERS. I have no objection to setting apart Thursday for the business of the Committee on the District of Columbia, provided that it shall not conflict with the consideration of any general appropriation bill.

Mr. DINGLEY. Let that reservation be made.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, if I may be indulged a moment, I will say that the considerations which moved me to make the agreement with the gentleman from Kentucky are, first, the importance of getting the deficiency bill to the Senate as soon as possible; and, secondly, the fact that on Tuesday night the Senate is to devote a session to the consideration of bills on its Calendar with the understanding that the time will be given largely to bills relating to the District of Columbia. On Wednesday our committee holds its regular weekly meeting, and we shall then have an opportunity to consider the work done by the Senate on Tuesday night and to bring it before the House for consideration on Thursday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request that Thursday next be set apart for the consideration of the business of the District of Columbia, subject to general appropriation bills?

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Speaker, I think it should be subject to all privileged legislation. Otherwise I must object.

I do not believe in setting apart a day for the exclusive use of the Committee of the District of Columbia at this late state of the session when important matters of public legislation may need to be considered.

Mr. McMILLIN. I suggest to the gentleman who is in charge of the District business, and also to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], that we might set apart to-morrow for District business. I realize the force of what the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM] suggests, that on Thursday next we may have great exigencies upon us.

Mr. HEARD. I will repeat to my friend from Tennessee what I have just stated to the House, that to-morrow will not suit our committee nearly so well as Thursday next, for the reason that we want an opportunity to consider on Wednesday the District business which may be done by the Senate to-morrow night.

Mr. McMILLIN. I am not going to object; I simply suggest that I always notice that the last three days of the session are very important; and the House will need the time much worse on Thursday for general business than to-morrow.

Mr. HEARD. To-morrow at 2 o'clock is set apart for eulogies.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then, say Wednesday.

Mr. HEARD. If Wednesday be fixed we shall not have an opportunity to consider in committee on Wednesday the work done by the Senate to-morrow night.

Mr. McMILLIN. I am only making these suggestions for the benefit of the gentleman himself, because if the experience of the past may be used in judging of the future, the last three days of the session can not be occupied by anything except the public business.

Mr. HEARD. Of course we are willing to trust the matter to the action and disposition of the House at the time, as we do now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that if this change be made, the District business will be considered on Thursday next, subject to the same rules as on Monday. Privileged matters, of course, may come in.

Mr. SAYERS. I suggest that possibly an appropriation bill might be returned to the House from the Senate on that day, and before we could get it into conference it might be necessary to have some discussion and action in the House. Therefore, I prefer that the conditions of this order if made should be broader than merely to provide that conference reports may be considered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there can be no trouble in the matter. During the last six days of the session a motion to suspend the rules is always in order, and that motion could be invoked, with the concurrence of the Chair, to insure the consideration of appropriation bills and the sending them to conference.

Mr. SAYERS. I submit to the better judgment of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection, then, to assigning Thursday next instead of to-day for District business, subject to the same conditions that the rules prescribe for Monday, and subject also to conference reports and privileged matters?

A MEMBER. The District business will be on the same footing then as to-day.

The SPEAKER. On the same footing.

Mr. DINGLEY. Before this order is made it is well we should bear in mind that we are coming very near to the end of the session, and by Thursday next certain appropriation bills will be returned to the House with Senate amendments. Now, I wish it to be understood that such bills may be brought before the House, even though they may not have reached the stage of conference, for the purpose of concurring or nonconcurring in Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that this order if made will be subject to appropriation bills.

Mr. DINGLEY. That is satisfactory.

The SPEAKER. That is understood.

Mr. HEARD. It is.

Mr. RYAN. I desire to object unless to-morrow be set apart for the consideration of bills reported by the Committee on Labor.

Subsequently—

Mr. RYAN withdrew his objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection to substituting Thursday for to-day, under the limitations stated, for District business, subject to appropriation bills and privileged matters? The Chair hears none.

PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. SNODGRASS, by unanimous consent, submitted, with the draft of a proposed bill, the views of a minority of the Committee on the Pacific Railroads upon the bill (H. R. 8943) reported by Mr. REILLY; which were ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I ask unanimous consent that the call of committees may be dispensed with for to-day and that gentlemen having reports to make may be permitted to file them with the Clerk.

There was no objection.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

The following reports of committees were handed in at the Clerk's desk, referred to their appropriate Calendars, and otherwise disposed of as indicated below:

APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSION TO MAKE SURVEY OF SHIP CANAL.

Mr. RYAN, from the Committee on Railways and Canals, reported back favorably with amendments joint resolution (H. Res. 271) for the appointment of a commission to make survey of a ship canal from the southern shore of Lake Michigan to the waters of the Wabash River; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CONGRESSIONAL PARTICIPATION IN THE DEDICATION OF CHICKAMAUGA AND CHATTANOOGA NATIONAL MILITARY PARK.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama, from the joint committee to prepare and report upon a plan for participating in the dedication of the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park, reported a resolution providing for Congressional participation in the dedication of said park; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MEDICAL CORPS OF THE NAVY.

Mr. MEYER, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported adversely upon certain petitions relating to the Medical Corps of the Navy; which were laid on the table, and the report ordered to be printed.

DEFICIENCY BILL.

On motion of Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. TARSNEY in the chair) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8892) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose on Saturday last the reading of the bill had been concluded; but several matters had been reserved subject to points of order.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I wish to put an inquiry to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE]. It is now 12 o'clock, the House is full, and there are a great many matters of detail, but of no great public interest, which will occupy some time in connection with this bill. Is it the disposition of the gentleman to wait until late in the day to move the amendment in regard to the Bering Sea award?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I thought of calling that up as soon as these questions of order are disposed of.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, in a letter of June 12, 1894, from the Auditor of the Treasury, which I sent to the desk the other day to be read, there appears this clause:

There can be no question as to the legality of these claims, based as they are upon the orders of the Postmaster-General, issued under authority vested in him by the terms of the contract, and in view of the fact that the Supreme Court—

I ask the special attention of the Chairman to this—has decided that the suspension of contracts for service in the Confederate States carries with it a month's extra pay, as if the service were discontinued. (Wallace, 8, page 38.)

I desire to read that decision.

But first I want to read that clause in the contract which is the basis of the claim:

It is hereby stipulated and agreed, among other things, that the Postmaster-General may discontinue or curtail the service, in whole or in part, in order to place on the route a greater degree of service, or whenever the public service requires such discontinuance or curtailment or from any other cause, he allowing one month's extra pay on account of service dispensed with.

Now, with reference to that provision the Supreme Court have rendered a decision, which is quoted in 8 Wallace, page 38, from which I read the following words:

Contractors for carrying the mail in Southern States are entitled to one month's pay, in pursuance of their contracts, and on the Postmaster-General ordering the service to be discontinued in consequence of the civil war.

There is a direct ruling of the Supreme Court.

Again, Mr. Chairman, in House Executive Document No. 153, the Secretary of the Treasury, through the Auditor, reports these four identical claims that are included in the amendment under the law to the House. These claims are reported under the act of 1874, and I desire to read a clause from that act:

That the Secretary of the Treasury shall, at the commencement of each session of Congress, report the amount due each claimant, where claims have been allowed in whole or in part, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the Presiding Officer of the Senate, who shall lay the same before their respective Houses for consideration; and hereafter all estimates of appropriations, and estimates of deficiencies in appropriations, intended for the consideration and seeking the action of any of the committees of Congress, shall be transmitted to Congress through the Secretary of the Treasury and in no other manner, and the said Secretary shall first cause the same to be properly classified, compiled, indexed, and printed, under the supervision of the chief of the division of warrants, estimates, and appropriations of his Department.

That was the act of 1874. Now, the act of 1878 repealed one clause of the act of 1874, which required all these sums of money, after a lapse of three years, to be covered back into the Treasury; but the act of 1878, under which these claims are certified by the Auditor to the House, reads this way (Revised Statutes of 1877 and 1879, page 130):

That so much of section 5 of the act approved June 20, 1874, as directs the Secretary of the Treasury at the beginning of each session to report to Congress, with his annual estimates, any balances of appropriations for specific objects affected by said section, that may need to be reappropriated, be and the same is hereby repealed; and it shall be the duty of the several accounting officers of the Treasury to continue to receive, examine, and consider—the justice and validity of all claims under the appropriations the balances of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund under the provisions of the act of 1874. And the Secretary of the Treasury shall report the amount due each claimant at the commencement of each session to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, who shall lay the same before Congress for consideration: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize reexamination and payment of any claim or account which has been once examined and rejected.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there are two claims in this class, based on the same law, based on the same contract with the Postmaster-General, covered by the same Supreme Court decision, that have been paid by the direct action of this House. I refer to the claim of John D. Adams, private act October 8, 1888 (see Revised Statutes, volume 25, page 1124), and that of Mr. Kendee (see act of February 20, 1891, Revised Statutes, volume 26, page 1304).

Now, I think I have done my duty when I have shown the Chair that the law of 1874 and the law of 1878 specifically required provision to be made for such claims; and in view of the fact that the Supreme Court have decided in the most emphatic manner that such contractors are entitled to this payment, and after the Auditor has sent the four accounts, certified to this House over his signature, I think I have covered the ground and shown that this amendment comes strictly within the rules and is not subject to the objection raised. How can the point of order be raised against the amendment when it is in accordance with the law, and in accordance with the decision of the Supreme Court? I submit, Mr. Chairman, the matter to your discretion and judgment.

The CHAIRMAN. Before the gentleman closes, the Chair would like to know whether it is claimed that in any appropriation bill heretofore passed these items were provided for or their payment directed?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Now, Mr. Chairman, in making a statement in answer to that question, I hope my friend [Mr. DINGLEY], if I make a mistake, will correct me for he is thoroughly conversant with the facts. My understanding is that these claims have been presented to the Committee on Appropriations—these four claims that I now present to the House.

Mr. DINGLEY. Has any one of them ever been allowed by the Committee on Appropriations and placed in a deficiency bill?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. No, sir.

Mr. DINGLEY. Have they not been presented as private claims and sent to the Committee on Claims and reported to the House and passed?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I do not know that these four claims have ever been before this House at all. I think my friend and colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], can answer that question.

Mr. DINGLEY. I think two of these claims were presented as private bills and referred to the Committee on Claims, and the bill subsequently passed.

The CHAIRMAN. It is absolutely impossible for the Chair to hear one word of what gentlemen are saying.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I ask that the Sergeant-at-Arms be requested to stop conversation in the rear of the Hall.

The CHAIRMAN. The Sergeant-at-Arms will exercise his authority to preserve order in the Hall of the House.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I stated that two of these claims had been presented as private bills, and passed upon by Congress. I gave the Chair the dates of the acts; but the four bills that were presented in this amendment have never been before Congress.

Mr. DOCKERY. I think one of them has.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. My colleague [Mr. DOCKERY] thinks that one of them has. To my knowledge they have not been. It must have been prior to my connection with the House of Representatives.

But, Mr. Chairman, they have never been in an appropriation bill. They have never been passed upon; they have never come outside of the Committee on Appropriations. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that I think I have submitted all the facts touching the question of the point of order, under Rule XXI. If my colleague on the committee, who has made the point of order, intends to spring any new point on me, after covering this question of law, why, I hope he will be candid enough to say so, and give me an opportunity to reply.

Mr. DOCKERY. I shall "spring" all the points I have to "spring" at this time.

Mr. Chairman, an amendment to a deficiency bill to be in order must comply with these conditions: It must be a deficiency under a statute which authorized the amount to be paid, but which has not been paid because of the inadequacy of the appropriation. Now, let me illustrate. The law gives to the Postmaster-General express authority to pay so much per car for the transportation of mails. It authorizes him to contract and pay that liability; but the appropriation for the liability may not be adequate. There may be an inadequacy of appropriation, and in such a case a deficiency item for that service would be in order on this bill. Now, what is this case before us? I do not recall the exact terms of the amendment, and I will call for its reading again.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again read, as follows:

On page 43, after line 8, insert:

"To pay the claims of Charles Morgan, C. B. Payne, and the Southern Steamship Company, audited and reported to the Forty-sixth Congress; the claims of Charles Morgan and M. C. Mordecai, audited and reported to the Forty-eighth Congress; being for allowance for one month's extra pay as United States mail contractors, $17,510.83, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. DOCKERY. One of these claims, if not all of them, was transmitted to the Forty-seventh Congress at its first session in House Executive Document No. 26, in compliance with section 4 of the act of June 14, 1878, and two of the claims, it seems from the reading of the amendment, were reported to the Forty-eighth Congress under the same act. Now, what is that act? That act provides—

That it shall be the duty of the several accounting officers of the Treasury to continue to receive, examine, and consider the justice and validity of all claims under appropriations, the balances of which have been stated or carried to the surplus fund under the provisions of said section, that may be brought before them in five years, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall report the amount due each claimant at the commencement of each session to the Speaker of the House of Representatives—who shall lay the same before Congress for consideration.

For what purpose?—

That is the language of the statute. Now, then, a claim audited under that section comes to Congress for consideration. How? If it is a claim under the Bowman Act it is referred, under the rules, to the Committee on War Claims. If it is any other kind of an audited claim for which no appropriation has been made it is referred to the appropriate committee.

Congress considers each claim under the rules of the House. Claims that appear on a deficiency bill must be claims authorized by law and authorized to be paid, but which can not be paid because of insufficient appropriations.

Now, this particular claim of M. C. Mordecai is very familiar to gentlemen who have served here for a number of years. It was presented in the Fiftieth Congress, when I was presiding over the Committee of the Whole as Chairman on the deficiency bill. After examination there, in which the statute of June 14, 1878, had been cited, after the order of the Postmaster-General had been read, I decided:

The Chair is not without doubt about this, but, in view of the hasty examination he has been permitted to make, and in light of the discussion, sustains the point of order.

The claim on that occasion was presented by the gentleman from South Carolina, Mr. Dibble. At the second session of the same Congress, when the present Speaker of the House was presiding in the Committee of the Whole as Chairman, the claim was presented by the gentleman from Maryland, Mr. RAYNER, and the present Speaker, then Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, after hearing the discussion, made this decision:

The Chair will be compelled to hold, unless the gentleman can cite some statute law authorizing the expenditure, that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. RAYNER. The only law I can cite, Mr. Chairman, is the action on this claim by the Court of Claims—

By the way, let me say this claim was sent to the Court of Claims, and the decision of that court was that it was barred by the statutes of limitation.

The only law I can cite, Mr. Chairman, is the action on this claim by the Court of Claims, to which I have called attention—the allowance of the Auditor of the Treasury of the claim—

The fact which has been emphasized by the gentleman from Georgia—and the statement on the part of the Postmaster-General that the claim should be paid.

Both of which facts have just been emphasized and called to the attention of the House by the gentleman from Georgia.

Now, then, after further discussion, the Speaker, then Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, again states:

The Chair does not understand that because a claim is just and has been allowed by the Department, it is therefore necessarily authorized by law. The Chair understands the rule to mean that on a general appropriation bill no amendment shall be in order except, in the language of the rule, for expenditures "previously authorized by law." The attention of the Chair has not been called to any law authorizing this expenditure, and he therefore sustains the point of order.

Again, this claim was presented in the Fifty-first Congress. No point of order, it appears, was raised against it—I refer to the Mordecai claim; but, on a vote in the Committee of the Whole, it was rejected, I believe, by yeas 77, nays 51. So that this claim, Mr. Chairman, has "bobbed up serenely" almost every Congress during the last ten years. Now, I do not know that I desire to add anything, Mr. Chairman. There is another phase of the question, but I will forbear until the Chair has decided, inasmuch as that trenches on the merits of the question.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Now, Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman just a moment. I will admit everything the gentleman has said. He says that the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole sustained the point of order because Mr. RAYNER, in the one case, and some other gentleman in another case, failed to bring the attention of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole to any law authorizing the payment.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have done that this morning; done it abundantly, as the Chairman well knows. I have shown not only the contract between the Postmaster-General and these parties, but I have shown that the act of 1874 authorized it. I have shown that the amended act of 1878 authorized it; and I have shown that the Auditor, under the act of 1878, has again sent the accounts to this House.

And now, Mr. Chairman, about a different matter; and I ask the attention of the Chair just for a moment as to what was done by the Committee on Appropriations in these four claims. The gentleman in charge of the bill [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] will corroborate me in what I am about to say. The subcommittee intended to take up these claims in the subcommittee. It was before us on the table to be disposed of; but in adjourning on the morning we finished the bill, in the hurry, the appropriation for the Nashville centennial having absorbed all the time, we both forgot it; and it was merely an oversight and not intentional. Had it not been for that fact, had we not forgot it on the morning when the bill was considered, we would have disposed of it in the subcommittee either one way or the other. It was before the committee, Mr. Chairman. It was sent there by the Speaker of the House. The gentleman has referred to but one claim, the Mordecai claim. If the Chair thinks the Mordecai claim ought to be ruled out I am willing that it should go out; but I do not want the other three ruled out because of any decision the Chair may make on the Mordecai claim.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the conference committee on the District of Columbia appropriation bill is ready to report, and I therefore move that the committee rise for the purpose of having that report submitted to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. TARSNEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 8892 and had come to no resolution thereon.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the statement and that will probably be sufficient.

[For text of conference report see proceedings of Senate.]

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8388) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1896, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action recommended on each of the amendments of the Senate in the accompanying conference report, namely:

On amendment numbered 1: Appropriates for two assistant secretaries to the Commissioners, at $1,000 each, as proposed by the Senate instead of one, at $1,000, as proposed by the House.

On amendments numbered 2 and 3: Appropriates for one laborer, at $365 per annum, as proposed by the Senate, instead of at $314, as proposed by the House.

On amendments numbered 4 and 5: Appropriates for one additional assistant inspector of buildings, at $1,000, instead of two, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendments numbered 6, 7, and 8: Appropriates for an additional clerk, at $1,400, and for a messenger and driver for the board of assistant assessors, at $600, in the assessor's office, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendments numbered 9 and 10: Strikes out the provision for a deputy collector of taxes, at $2,000, proposed by the Senate.

On amendment numbered 11: Strikes out the provision proposed by the Senate for a deputy coroner, at $1,400 per annum.

On amendments numbered 12, 13, and 14: Appropriates $75 additional for hire of laborers for cleaning markets, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendments numbered 15, 16, and 17: Increases the salary of the assistant superintendent of parking from $700 to $800, as proposed by the Senate, and strikes out the provision proposed by the Senate for an assistant superintendent of sewers at $1,500.

On amendment numbered 18: Authorizes the Commissioners to grant thirty days' leave of absence to not exceeding 30 regular employees, paid out of general appropriations, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment numbered 19: Appropriates $800, as proposed by the Senate, for horse feed and shoeing for the board of assistant assessors.

On amendments numbered 20, 21, and 22: Appropriates $1,000 as proposed by the House, instead of $800 as proposed by the Senate, for general expenses of the coroner's office.

On amendment numbered 23: Reduces the penalty on delinquent taxes from 2 per cent per month to 1 per cent per month, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment numbered 24: Appropriates $2,500, instead of $1,270 as proposed by the House and $4,250 as proposed by the Senate, for special repairs to market houses.

On amendments numbered 25, 26, and 27: Appropriates $12,500, instead of $6,000 as proposed by the House and $25,000 as proposed by the Senate, for preparing the plan for the extension of a permanent system of highways, with authority to pay so much of the sum appropriated as may be necessary, instead of $10,000 as proposed by the Senate, to Frederick Law Olmsted or other eminent landscape architect, for the preparation of plans in part for said work.

On amendments numbered 28, 29, and 30: Appropriates $150,000 as proposed by the House, instead of $175,000 as proposed by the Senate, for assessment and permit work, with authority to use not exceeding $14,000 for widening the roadway of G street NW. from Tenth street to Fourteenth street.

On amendments numbered 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, and 37: Appropriates $12,000, instead of $100,000 as proposed by the House and $160,000 as proposed by the Senate, for work on streets and avenues, and $2,500, as proposed by the Senate, for paving Eleventh street between East Capitol street and Massachusetts avenue.

On amendment numbered 38: Makes the appropriations for streets and avenues, and for construction of county roads, immediately available.

On amendments numbered 39, 40, 41, and 42: Appropriates $40,000 as proposed by the House, instead of $65,000 as proposed by the Senate, for relief sewers and replacing obstructed sewers; $10,000, instead of $34,000 as proposed by the House and $30,536 as proposed by the Senate, for suburban sewers; $30,000, instead of $37,332 as proposed by the Senate, for the Brookland sewer; $10,000 for the Konesaw avenue sewer; $40,000, instead of $75,000 as proposed by the Senate, for the Rock Creek and B street intercepting sewer; and authorizes contracts to be made for the construction of the Eckington Valley, Brookland, Konesaw avenue, and Rock Creek and B street intercepting sewers, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment numbered 43: Authorizes the authorities to omit the circle hitherto required to be located at or near Morris street, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendments numbered 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, and 53, relating to the construction of county roads: Appropriates $18,000 as proposed by the Senate, instead of $3,000 as proposed by the House, for paving First street extended; $5,000 as proposed by the Senate, for grading and regulating Sherman avenue; $4,000, instead of $12,000 as proposed by the Senate, for grading and regulating Kenesaw avenue; $6,000, instead of $10,000 as proposed by the Senate, to extend Thirty-seventh street between Back street and Tennytown road; $8,000, instead of $12,000 as proposed by the Senate, for paving Florida avenue, and $5,000 for paving Twenty-second street from Massachusetts avenue to R street; strikes out the appropriations of $9,000 proposed by the Senate for grading and regulating Pennsylvania avenue extended, and $5,000 for paving Michigan avenue; and authorizes, as proposed by the Senate, the use of $9,000, heretofore appropriated, for grading and graveling Albemarle street, to be used on such portions of said street, and of Thirty-eighth street, as have been or may be dedicated to the District of Columbia.

On amendments numbered 54 and 55: Appropriates $146,000, instead of $139,000 as proposed by the House and $150,000 as proposed by the Senate, for sprinkling, sweeping, and cleaning streets and alleys, and strikes out the provision proposed by the Senate, limiting the amount to be expended on suburban streets to $1,000.

On amendment numbered 56: Appropriates $19,000, instead of $15,000 as proposed by the House and $23,000 as proposed by the Senate, for the parking commission.

On amendment numbered 57: Appropriates $142,000 as proposed by the Senate, instead of $145,000 as proposed by the House, for gas lighting, and limits the price per street lamp to $30.50 as proposed by the Senate, instead of $30 as proposed by the House.

On amendment numbered 58: Appropriates $17,600 as proposed by the Senate, instead of $54,000 as proposed by the House, for electric lighting, and limits the price per light per night to 40 cents as proposed by the Senate, instead of 38 cents as proposed by the House.

On amendment numbered 59: Strikes out the appropriation of $25,000, proposed by the Senate, for a new harbor boat.

On amendments numbered 60 and 61: Appropriates $10,000, as proposed by the House instead of $11,500 as proposed by the Senate, for construction and repair of bridges.

On amendment numbered 62: Appropriates $3,500, as proposed by the Senate, for a survey, plan, and estimate of cost for the construction of a bridge from the foot of South Capitol street across the Eastern Branch of the Potomac River.

On amendments numbered 63 and 64: Requires that the work of the improvement of the receiving reservoir of the Washington Aqueduct shall be done and completed under Col. George H. Elliot notwithstanding his retirement, as proposed by the Senate, and makes the appropriation for clearing out the conduit immediately available.

On amendment numbered 65: Provides for raising the height of the dam at Great Falls, as proposed by the House, and authorizes the use of $25,000 of the appropriation for increasing the water supply for testing the tunnel conduit, as proposed by the Senate, and provides, as proposed by the Senate, for the preparation of a plan to be submitted to Congress upon the feasibility and propriety of completing the tunnel conduit as now projected, and the new reservoir.

On amendments numbered 66 and 67: Appropriates $900, as proposed by the Senate, for a janitor for the Miner School building.

On amendments numbered 68 and 69: Appropriates $2,500, as proposed by the Senate, for rent of additional accommodations for schools, and makes a verbal correction in the text of the bill.

On amendments numbered 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, and 79: Appropriates $28,500 for eight additional new school buildings, instead of $216,000 for ten additional new school buildings, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment numbered 80: Strikes out the provision proposed by the Senate, making immediately available appropriations for new school buildings.

On amendment numbered 81: Strikes out the appropriation of $1,000 proposed by the Senate, for expense of a special examination and report upon the present school system of the District.

On amendments numbered 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, and 90, relating to the Metropolitan police: Authorizes, as proposed by the Senate, an additional lieutenant at $1,500, six additional privates at $900 each, and four additional privates at $1,080 each; fixes the compensation of the van driver, ambulance driver, and drivers of patrol wagons at $480 each, instead of $600 each, as proposed by the Senate, and the salaries of two assistant ambulance drivers at $480 each, instead of $500 each, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendments numbered 91, 92, and 94: Appropriates $2,080, as proposed by the House instead of $2,300 as proposed by the Senate, for rent of police headquarters, and $2,300, as proposed by the Senate for fuel for the police department, instead of $1,800 as proposed by the House.

On amendments numbered 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, and 100: Makes the appropriations for additional fire-engine buildings and fire apparatus immediately available, as proposed by the Senate, and appropriates $25,000, as proposed by the Senate, for a new site, building, and furniture for a truck house in the vicinity of New Jersey avenue, M and N streets northwest, and authorizes the use of an unexpended balance of $2,500 for an engine house in Northeast Washington, to be used in inclosing, grading, and paving lot of the chemical engine house in Mount Pleasant.

On amendments numbered 101 and 102: Appropriates $600 each for three telephone operators, as proposed by the House, instead of at $720, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendments numbered 103 and 104: Strikes out authority proposed by the Senate to purchase telephones, and appropriates $11,000, instead of $9,000 as proposed by the House and $15,000 as proposed by the Senate, for general supplies for telegraph and telephone service.

On amendments numbered 105 and 106: Appropriates $7,000, instead of $5,000 as proposed by the House and $10,000 as proposed by the Senate, for extension of the police-patrol and fire-alarm telegraph service to the suburbs.

On amendments numbered 107 and 108: Strikes out the appropriation of $300 for an assistant chemist in the health department, proposed by the Senate.

On amendments numbered 109, 110, 111, 112, and 113: Makes the text of the appropriation for the collection and removal of garbage as proposed by the Senate, except that the Commissioners are authorized to make new contracts on and after the passage of the act, and that in the discretion of the Commissioners the appropriations made by the act may be available for the purposes of paying for the increased service until new contracts shall be entered into and the contractors are ready to execute the same.

On amendments numbered 117 and 118: Appropriates $6,000 as proposed by the Senate, instead of $5,000 as proposed by the House, for witness fees in the police court.

On amendments numbered 119, 120, and 121: Appropriates $4,000, instead of $3,000 as proposed by the House and $6,000 as proposed by the Senate, to pay William Stone Abern for services in compiling the District laws and preparing same for publication, and provides for the distribution of said compilation as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment numbered 122: Appropriates $8,000, instead of $5,000 as proposed by the House and $15,000 as proposed by the Senate, for the emergency fund.

On amendment numbered 123: Appropriates $40,000, instead of $35,000 as proposed by the House and $45,000 as proposed by the Senate, for support of convicts.

On amendments numbered 124 and 125: Provides that the appropriations for employees of the court-house of the District and the warden of the jail shall be expended under the direction of the Attorney-General.

On amendments numbered 126 and 127: Makes a verbal correction in the text of the bill, and appropriates $15,000 as proposed by the Senate, instead of $12,000 as proposed by the House, for the Central Dispensary and Emergency Hospital.

On amendments numbered 128 and 129: Appropriates $30,000, as proposed by the House, for the Columbia Hospital for Women, instead of $22,000 as proposed by the Senate, and $5,000, as proposed by the Senate, for heating apparatus and furnishing the new building for the hospital.

On amendment numbered 130: Appropriates $3,500, instead of $8,000 as proposed by the House and $9,000 as proposed by the Senate, for the Homeopathic Hospital.

On amendments numbered 131 and 132: Appropriates $16,000, instead of $15,000 as proposed by the House and $17,000 as proposed by the Senate, for salaries of employees of the Women's Hospital and Asylum.

On amendment numbered 133: Appropriates $1,000, as proposed by the Senate, for the Young Women's Christian Home.

On amendments numbered 134 and 135: Appropriates $9,000, as proposed by the House, for the Industrial Home School, instead of $13,400 as proposed by the Senate, and strikes out the provision proposed by the Senate changing the corporate character of said institution.

On amendment numbered 136: Appropriates for salary of agent of the Board of Children's Guardians $1,600, instead of $1,500 as proposed by the House and $1,800 as proposed by the Senate.

On amendments numbered 137, 138, and 139: Appropriates for salary of superintendent of the water department at $1,800, instead of $1,600 as proposed by the House and $2,000 as proposed by the Senate, and strikes out the increase proposed by the Senate of $300 in the salary of the timekeeper.

The committee of conference have been unable to agree on the following amendments of the Senate, namely:

On amendment numbered 91, authorizing the application, annually, of $4,000 to the police relief fund and $2,500 to the firemen's relief fund out of the receipts from fines in the police court.

On amendment numbered 114, striking out the appropriation of $4,000 proposed by the House to prevent the spread of scarlet fever and diphtheria, and on amendment numbered 115, appropriating $20,000 for the above object and also for the propagation of diphtheria antitoxine and the establishment of a bacteriological laboratory and a disinfecting service.

On amendment numbered 116, appropriating $30,000 for the erection and equipment of a smallpox hospital.

The Senate, by its amendments, added $750,344 to the bill. Of this sum the conference committee recommend that the Senate recede from $385,808, and that the House agree to $364,536, leaving $46,000 involved in the amendments upon which the conferees have been unable to agree.

J. R. WILLIAMS,
ALEX. M. DOCKERY,
D. B. HENDERSON,

Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. This is a partial agreement.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the report.

The conference report was adopted.

On motion of Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now report the amendments that are still in controversy between the two Houses.

The Senate amendments numbered 91, 114, 115, and 116 were read.

On motion of Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois, the House insisted upon the amendments severally, and agreed to a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois, Mr. DOCKERY, and Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa.

SURVEYOR OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a conference report.

The report was read.

[For conference report see Senate proceedings.]

The SPEAKER. The statement of the House conferees will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

STATEMENT.

The only change in the bill as it passed the House is an increase of $1,200 in expenses for the surveyor's office. The House appropriated $4,000, the conferees agree to $5,200.

Also, to add to House amendment to section 5 the words, "and no plat or survey of land shall be recorded in the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia except it be certified to as correct by the surveyor of said District."

The Senate agrees to all other House amendments.

J. E. COBB,
G. W. COOPER,
J. A. T. HULL,

Conferees on part of the House.

The conference report was adopted.

On motion of Mr. COBB of Alabama, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted was laid on the table.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for further consideration of the general deficiency bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. TARSNEY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule upon the pending point of order. It is conceded that all the items in the pending amendment are kindred in character, growing out of the same or like transactions, and standing upon an equal footing. The parties named in this amendment were contractors with the Government for carrying the mails at the breaking out of the late civil war. Prior to that time a statute existed which authorized the Postmaster-General to suspend contracts for carrying the mails, and providing that upon such suspension the contractors should be entitled to one month's extra pay. The contracts with the claimants in this case were suspended by the Postmaster-General, and the claim arises in each case for the extra month's pay resulting from such suspension.

In 1874 a statute was enacted directly bearing upon these matters, providing for their examination by the Treasury Department and for their being reported to Congress for consideration. A statute similar in its provisions was enacted in 1878. If this was a bill providing directly for the relief of these claimants, and not a proposition to amend an appropriation bill, the Chair would then, as a member of the House, have to consider the merits and justice of the claims; but the only question for the Chair to consider now is the question whether this is the proper remedy for the claimants to seek.

In view of the fact that this proceeding is not new; in view of what is conceded here, that one at least of these claims has been presented on former occasions for the consideration of the House under conditions exactly similar to those under which the amendment is now presented—that is, offered as amendment to a general deficiency bill and the point of order raised that it was not germane to such a bill; in view of the fact that at the first session of the Fiftieth Congress, when the claim was first presented, these points were elaborately argued, and the gentleman then presiding over the Committee of the Whole, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], having carefully reviewed the authorities and arguments, held that the amendment was not in order; in view of the fact that at the next session, the last session of the Fiftieth Congress, the same claim appeared again, was again offered as an amendment to the general deficiency bill, the point of order was again raised against it that it was not germane to that bill, and the then occupant of the chair, the present Speaker of this House, concurred in the ruling previously made by the gentleman from Missouri, holding that the matter was not germane and was not in order upon a general deficiency bill; in view of these facts, and in view of the further fact that no precedent has been cited contrary to these, the present occupant of the chair would not feel warranted, no matter what his own personal conviction might be, in disturbing this line of unbroken precedents; and he therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I now call for the reading of the next amendment; that in relation to the Bering Sea awards.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 9, on page 2, insert:

"Bering Sea damages: For the payment to the Government of Great Britain under the agreement reached by exchange of notes of August 21, 1894, in full satisfaction of all demands for damages against the United States growing out of the controversy between the two Governments as to the fur seals in Bering Sea under the award and findings of the Tribunal of Arbitration at Paris, $425,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The present occupant of the chair was not presiding at the time this matter was brought up on Saturday, and will be glad to know whether there is a point of order pending.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. There is not. Mr. Chairman, when general debate on this bill was dispensed with there was an agreement between the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and myself, assented to by the Committee of the Whole, that when one or two particular questions should be reached times should be given for discussion in the nature of general debate. I now ask the gentleman from Illinois whether we can agree to dispose of this question with half an hour's debate on each side.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. After consultation with my associates I find I can not agree to less than an hour on each side.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Very well.

Mr. DINGLEY. It is very likely I shall desire to occupy ten or fifteen minutes.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. My colleague on the committee had not notified me of his desire for time. I may be able to yield him a part of the hour which will, I presume, be under my control; and perhaps the gentleman from Kentucky, after consultation, will be willing to yield him a part of his time.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I suggest that the gentleman from Illinois give the gentleman from Maine five minutes of his time and I give him five minutes of mine.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I shall give him what I can, but I should like to have it understood that if necessary the gentleman from Maine may have ten minutes outside of the two hours.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Very well. Mr. Chairman, we have agreed, if the Committee of the Whole will sustain the agreement, that there be an hour for debate on each side of this question, the gentleman from Illinois controlling one side and I the other, with the understanding that if the gentleman from Maine should need ten minutes in addition to the time which may be yielded him by the gentleman from Illinois and myself, he shall be allowed ten minutes in addition to the two hours.

Mr. SPRINGER. Which side is the gentleman from Maine on?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I hope he is on my side; but I do not know. He generally wants to be on the right side.

Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky. Does the gentleman from Maine desire to advocate or oppose the amendment?

Mr. DINGLEY. I desire to submit some views touching the general question, without perhaps expressing any particular opinion as to what should be done in this exigency.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks that the general debate on this question be limited to two hours, one hour to be controlled by himself, the other by the gentleman from Illinois, and that the gentleman from Maine have ten minutes additional if he desires. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, I shall be glad to have the attention of the committee in this matter, for it is a matter of importance, and whatever the committee decides to-day will probably be final, for if the House refuses to accept this amendment it is probable that the President will at once proceed to agree to a settlement by a mixed commission. Its history is this: As the result of the dispute about the fur seals in the Bering Sea an arbitration was entered into with the Kingdom of Great Britain, an arbitration which submitted to the decision of the arbitrators five questions. I ask the Clerk to read the questions which were submitted.

The Clerk read as follows:

ARTICLE VI.

In deciding the matters submitted to the arbitrators, it is agreed that the following five points shall be submitted to them, in order that their award shall embrace a distinct decision upon each of said five points, to wit:

1. What exclusive jurisdiction in the sea now known as the Bering Sea, and what exclusive rights in the seal fisheries therein, did Russia assert and exercise prior and up to the time of the cession of Alaska to the United States?

2. How far were these claims of jurisdiction as to seal fisheries recognized and conceded by Great Britain?

3. Was the body of water now known as the Bering Sea included in the phrase "Pacific Ocean" as used in the treaty of 1825 between Great Britain and Russia; and what rights, if any, in the Bering Sea were held and exclusively exercised by Russia after said treaty?

4. Did not all the rights of Russia as to jurisdiction, and as to the seal fisheries in Bering Sea east of the water boundary, in the treaty between the United States and Russia of the 30th March, 1867, pass unimpaired to the United States under that treaty?

5. Has the United States any right, and if so, what right of protection or property in the fur seals frequenting the islands of the United States in Bering Sea when such seals are found outside the ordinary 3-mile limit?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Every one of those points was decided against the United States, and each of them except one was decided by the unanimous vote of the arbitrators, except one of our arbitrators, Hon. Mr. MORGAN, Senator from Alabama, and on that single proposition our representatives were alone. Under that decision the right of Great Britain to damages was settled. There is no question, therefore, that we are to pay something. It has been adjudicated that we are to pay damages. The simple question is now as to the assessment of those damages. The arbitrators went, under the convention, one step further and decided as a matter of fact that 18 ships had been seized or warned out of the Bering Sea by American ships, and that these 18 ships sailed under British flags. It was left open to us to litigate the question, if we chose to do so, as to whether some of those vessels were owned by American citizens. In that state of the case the British minister filed claims to the amount of $542,000. After negotiation the Government of the United States entered into an agreement with Great Britain to pay $425,000 in full satisfaction. This amendment proposes to confirm that agreement and to pay that sum of money.

It is objected that this is a larger sum than ought to be paid, because a certain amount of these damages are consequential damages—are for the estimated catch of seals subsequent to the time of the seizure. And it is alleged that for such damages, consequential damages, it was settled by the Alabama award we are not responsible. But, Mr. Chairman, there is no analogy between the facts on which the Alabama award was based and the Bering Sea award. Here the United States seized men, lawfully engaged in a legitimate business, imprisoning many of them and destroying their property. In the other case the Government of Great Britain, by negligence or otherwise, allowed certain armed cruisers, hostile to the United States, to escape from their ports. In the one case it was a direct act of the Government; in the other an indirect act. And there is a marked difference between these alleged consequential damages and those claimed before the Geneva Tribunal.

But in the particular case before us we agreed to a rule of damages, and that was the rule we agreed upon.

Mr. HEPBURN. May I ask the gentleman who made that agreement?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Which agreement?

Mr. HEPBURN. The agreement to which you have just referred.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. To pay $425,000?

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes. You say that according to a rule of damages; and that this is the rule agreed upon. Now, who made that agreement?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. That was made by the Government of the United States under Mr. Harrison's Administration in the convention—

Mr. HEPBURN. But what particular officer?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Blaine, then Secretary of State, in a convention agreed with Sir Julian Pauncefote.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. As this is the gist of the controversy, is the gentleman from Kentucky prepared to furnish to the committee any provision of such agreement or any authority by which we have settled the rule for the estimation of such damages? In other words, where does the gentleman ascertain that the arbitrators had the authority to settle the damages?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I am totally unable to hear the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. The gentleman stated that the United States Government had agreed to the rule, or the principle, by which the damages should be settled. Now, I ask him where he gets that authority?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. From the convention signed by James G. Blaine on the 18th day of April, 1892, on the part of the United States Government, and Sir Julian Pauncefote, on the part of the British Government, the fifth article of which I will have inserted in my remarks; but you can turn to it on page 10 of the proclamation issued by Mr. Harrison and signed by Benjamin Harrison as Chief Executive of the United States on the 9th day of May, 1892.

Mr. HITT (to Mr. CANNON of Illinois). The fifth article of the modus vivendi.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. By which the rule laid down for the assessment of damages pending the arbitration was the estimated value of the catch between what was really caught and what was afterwards to be determined upon as a proper catch under the agreement to prevent the destruction of the seals. But I will print the article with my remarks.

The article is as follows:

If the result of the arbitration be to affirm the right of British sealers to take seals in Bering Sea within the bounds claimed by the United States, under its purchase from Russia, then compensation shall be made by the United States to Great Britain (for the use of her subjects) for abstaining from the exercise of that right during the pendency of the arbitration upon the basis of such a regulated and limited catch or catches as in the opinion of the arbitrators might have been taken without an undue diminution of the seal herds; and, on the other hand, if the result of the arbitration shall be to deny the right of British sealers to take seals within the said waters, then compensation shall be made by Great Britain to the United States (for itself, its citizens, and its vessels) for this agreement to limit the island catch to 7,500 a season, upon the basis of the difference between this number and such larger catch as in the opinion of the arbitrators might have been taken without an undue diminution of the seal herds.

The amount awarded, if any, in either case shall be such as under all the circumstances is just and equitable, and shall be promptly paid.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. But what I want to get at now is the actual difference between us on this question.

I will ask the gentleman from Kentucky if he has had his attention called to page 162 of Senate Document No. 67, third session of the Fifty-third Congress, in which it was expressly agreed between those representing the British Government and the American Government—

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I was coming to that.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. That there was no claim for damages under the modus vivendi.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I am coming to that, and if I do not make the statement fully and accurately before I conclude I hope I will be corrected by my colleague [Mr. CANNON of Illinois], or the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], or the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT].

Under that agreement either party had the right to offer proof both as to damages prior to the date of the convention and damages committed pending the arbitration. This provision now before us applies to the second class; that is to say, to damages committed pending the arbitration.

By agreement between the agent of the United States, Mr. Foster, and the representatives of Great Britain, the claim for damages pending the arbitration was withdrawn, and no award was made on that account. But either party had the right to have the arbitrators settle questions of fact as to matters prior to the arbitration; and they had to settle as a matter of fact the seizure of some twenty vessels for which claims were alleged.

Mr. HITT. The actual number of vessels is eighteen. There were twenty claims, it is true, but there were two vessels for which claim was made twice.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. However, the list is given.

Mr. HITT. That is correct; twenty claims, but two being claims for the same vessels, so that there are really only eighteen.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. That is correct.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. These vessels sailed under the British flag and were seized outside of the 3-mile limit, which covered the jurisdiction of the American Government. It was, however, expressly understood that the citizenship of the owners of the vessels and the actual damage done should be left open for litigation and settlement between the two contracting powers. So that the only question left by the arbitrators is the assessment of damages.

I believe that I have stated the general case exactly. If not I will gladly be corrected. The British minister filed claims amounting to $542,000, reserving the privilege of filing additional claims, and proposed to have them settled by a convention of arbitrators. Of these claims, it is alleged that a certain amount, somewhat in doubt, but I believe somewhere about $300,000, was for what is called consequential damages.

Upon none of these claims has interest been added. So that we were in this condition: There was a judgment against us, with nothing left but the assessment of damages. There were claims of $542,000, with interest from 1886 and various other dates, up to 1889, I believe none later than 1890, so that the average time would be about the beginning of January, 1888, and the right to file additional claims of any amount.

Among these claims were many for false imprisonment and these are still open to additional claims. The sum that was agreed upon is $425,000. If we admit that this $300,000 is a disputed claim, and that there are no new claims to be added, it would stand that we owe about $227,000, practically undisputed, on which we have to calculate interest at seven years at 4 or 6 per cent; and when to the amount so found we add the half of the amount in dispute, it makes it, either at 4 or at 6 per cent, a larger sum than the sum agreed upon.

If judgment is obtained against us, under what seems to me to be a rule we can not well escape, it will be, with interest, over three-quarters of a million dollars, for if we admitted through Mr. Blaine that it is a proper rule by which damages should be assessed, a rule that we then admitted, and, representing a great Government desiring to do justice and not to higgly upon small matters, I do not see now how we can raise that question over again. We admitted, through the Secretary of State and the President of the United States, that this was the rule when we had a chance to win. It will hardly be becoming in us, now that we have lost, to say that was not the proper rule; that "it was a good rule when we thought we were going to win and you were to pay us money, but it is a bad rule when we have lost and we are to pay you the money."

This will be a humiliating position in which to put our Government, and for one I will not assume the responsibility of putting my country in such a position, nor will I be a party thereto. Let others do this if they so please, and to have such judgment made by arbitrators, and having arbitrators, will cost us not less than $150,000, perhaps more, in addition. This Paris arbitration cost us $224,000, and when we add the items together, the claims that are beyond doubt just against us, a fair compromise as to the part that is in dispute, the interest on the debts due, the expense of the arbitration, we shall get off by this payment by a very much smaller sum than in any other way. And, in addition to that, we settle at once a matter that is a sore.

It seems to me that it is not a bad bargain. And upon broader grounds, when we come to settle what we owe, when the money is to go to persons who have been wronged by us—because, whatever the law may be in our judgment, we have submitted it to the arbitrament of this tribunal and that question has been decided, that we have wronged these people—it does not become us to whine about it. It does not become us to go down to the tavern and denounce the judge, as litigants sometimes do who lose and have no appeal. Our duty and our pleasure ought to be in a spirit of international courtesy and general fairness, having reached a conclusion that is not in itself a very bad one, to settle this matter and wipe it off the books and remove it as a matter of disagreement between Great Britain and this nation. That seems to me to be the best solution of the question.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I should be glad to be reminded by the Chair when I have occupied fifteen minutes.

As to $425,000, the amount sought to be appropriated for the payment of damages in the amendment under an agreement between our Secretary of State and the British Government, I am not concerned for the amount involved, unless its payment reverses a principle that has been established heretofore. But, recollecting the proximity of the magnificent territory known as British America and Canada and her coast line, and that great commercial nation, Great Britain, and our growing population and commerce—recollecting all this, it becomes important in the payment of damages, whether the amount be $1 or $425,000 or $4,000,000, to inquire as to the basis upon which we pay such damages.

We can get along if we vote the money out of the Treasury after having been overreached as to the amount of damages; but we can not get along if we, upon a record submitted to the House and Senate by the State Department, pay the damages contrary to the well-settled principles of international law in the assessment of damages.

All understand that a treaty was made submitting questions of difference between Great Britain and the United States touching the Bering Sea to arbitration. The arbitrators met at Paris, fully considered the question, and, as the gentleman from Kentucky says, found substantially every point that was submitted against the United States. Well, that is pretty nearly true, so that I will not stop to criticize.

The question of the assessment of damages, or of the citizenship of the claimants, was not submitted under the treaty nor determined in the award. It is so expressly stated. I hold in my hand Senate Executive Document transmitted by the Secretary of State February 11, 1895, which contains matters necessary to enable the House to understand the facts touching our liability for damages in the premises.

Now, here is what the arbitrators said, nothing more and nothing less, touching damages—well, I thought I could turn to the exact words.

Mr. HITT. I have the exact words. (Reading):

1. That the several searches and seizures, whether of ships or goods, and the several arrests of masters and crews, respectively mentioned in the schedule to the British case, pages 1 to 60, inclusive, were made by the authority of the United States Government. The questions as to the value of the said vessels or their contents, or either of them and the question as to whether the vessels mentioned in the schedule to the British case, or any of them, were wholly or in part the actual property of citizens of the United States, have been withdrawn from and have not been considered by the tribunal.

That is the tribunal.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. HITT (reading):

It being understood that it is open to the United States to raise these questions or any of them, if they think fit, in any future negotiations as to the liability of the United States Government to pay the amounts mentioned in the schedule to the British case.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. That is the extract, and I thank the gentleman for reading it.

Now, then, the only matters that were found in that award were that there were 18 vessels that the United States seized or warned out of Bering Sea, and that the claim was that they were owned by British subjects. The seizure and warning out were acknowledged; the damages and the citizenship were contested and in no way settled. That is all there is of it. Ah, but says the gentleman from Kentucky, there was an agreement by the modus of 1892 that made us liable for speculative damages. I call attention to this same executive document, on page 162, by which it appears that before the tribunal Sir Charles Russell upon the one hand and Mr. Phelps upon the other agreed that all questions of damages under the modus of 1892 were mutually waived and that was solemnly entered of record.

I will not take time to read it. I can see that the gentleman from Kentucky, in the hasty reading of this large document, did not notice the mutual waiver of the two Governments. Now, that is all I want to say about that.

What are the facts? Just a minute. I find in this document, House Executive Document No. 132, third session Fifty-third Congress (and it is also in the Senate document), a statement given of the claims that I have been talking about. The larger part of the damages claimed is for "expected catch," "estimated catch," of seals and all that kind of thing. Damages that are speculative, uncertain—how much? I have the statement here, which was carefully prepared from all the documents. The British claims amount to $542,000; speculative damages, $283,000, leaving the only damages claimed we are subject to pay, $358,000, provided we concede that every vessel was owned by British subjects.

Mr. DALZELL. How much is that?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Two hundred and fifty-eight thousand. I hold in my hand a copy of the Geneva award made after the close of our civil war, when we made our treaty with Great Britain. We submitted there certain questions touching the matters of difference between the two countries, including the amount of damages sustained by the United States. Gentlemen recollect about it. Let me read an extract from the award:

And whereas prospective damages can not properly be made subject of compensation, inasmuch as they depend in their nature upon future and uncertain contingencies, the tribunal is unanimously of opinion that there is no ground for awarding to the United States any sum by way of indemnity under this head.

We grumbled, but we did not get the damages, notwithstanding that the prospective damages, if allowed, would have amounted to many millions of dollars; but the principle of law was settled against us. We submitted. Now we have to pay damages for seizing British sealing vessels in Bering Sea. We can not be called upon to pay prospective damages.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Will the gentleman state, for the information of the House, the exact amount of the actual damages found by the arbitrators, and the amount of the speculative damages?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Not a cent. That never was submitted to them. The only question that was submitted to them—and it so stated time and time again—was this: Did the United States seize or exclude those 18 vessels? That is all. After we were cast in this arbitration the British minister appealed to our Secretary of State for the appointment of a commission to settle the damages, and our Secretary of State, so far as appears upon the face of the documents, promptly said: "I will give you $425,000, subject to appropriation by Congress;" and, Mr. Chairman, if I did not fear that it would offend the fine sense of diplomatic propriety of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, I would say that the British minister and the British Government jumped at the proposition like a duck for a June bug. [Laughter.]

Mr. SAYERS. Will the gentleman tell the committee whether he favors this appropriation, or is opposed to it?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I am against it. I do not want to pay one dollar or one cent of it until the amount of actual (not prospective) damages is ascertained.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I understand the gentleman to say that he is opposed to paying $425,000, or one dollar of it?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Yes; I am at this time.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Then I desire to ask the gentleman how we are to get around paying damages under the treaty and agreement by which we submitted certain questions to arbitration?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Oh, Mr. Chairman, see how plain a story shall put that question down.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I would like to have an answer to it.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I will answer you, and it will take but a minute to do it. There is no admission anywhere by the United States Government that any single one of these 18 vessels was owned by British subjects. On the contrary, our agent, Mr. Foster, when the award was transmitted to the Secretary of State, transmitted a letter (to be found on page 164 of the Senate executive document) setting out the facts.

What were the facts? That there was proof in the counter case, taken by our district attorney and otherwise, and especially in executive documents, that the great majority of these vessels were owned by American citizens and not by British subjects. I have the counter case here, but I will not take time to read it. I will say, however, that the most that can be fairly conceded, as to the amount of damages we should pay, as we can gather from the imperfect evidence, would be $81,000, and if we add interest, it would amount only to $103,000, and it is not at all certain that claimants are entitled to that much.

It took a searching resolution from the Senate before we could get these papers, and now that we have them why is it, I ask, that Mr. Foster's statement of facts was not considered by the Secretary of State? Why is it that the counterclaim and the award which set out the facts touching the findings were ignored?

Mr. TERRY. Did the arbitrators award any damages at all against the United States?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Not a cent. They had no power to do it. Ah, but says the gentleman from Kentucky—and he is forced to that position—they were entitled to damages under the agreement of 1892. That is not correct. I have already called attention to that point.

Mr. COX. As I understand, the questions as to damages were expressly reserved, and afterwards the negotiations resulted in a liability on the part of the United States to pay $425,000.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. That is Secretary Gresham's agreement with Great Britain, subject to appropriation by Congress; but there is no treaty, there is no law, there is no agreement, there is nothing that legally or morally binds the United States to pay one cent of those prospective damages.

Mr. DOLLIVER. How did the Secretary compute the actual damages?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. How did he compute them? On that he is silent as the grave. He said to Great Britain, "I will give you a lump sum," and that lump sum, as I have shown and can show, is substantially $200,000 more than they were entitled to recover unless we should concede them speculative damages, saying nothing about the open question as to the ownership of the vessels. Now, the largest claimant is a man named Cooper, who lives on the Pacific Coast, a blacksmith, I believe, a brother-in-law of Warren, an American citizen, who had these vessels. He gave a man named Boscowits a mortgage on them. Boscowits claims to be an American citizen. Cooper comes in and swears that he bought the whole outfit for $1, and says that he has no interest in it and does not know what it is all about; that he paid no attention to it. Cooper is a British subject, and I say that in my judgment we can not afford to make this appropriation and establish this precedent.

Mr. COX. How is the amount of $425,000 arrived at?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. In the claim for these 18 vessels the damages are put at $542,000. The United States admitted, and that was all there was power to admit under the submission, that those vessels were either seized or warned out.

Now, the damage claimed, the great majority of it "estimated catch" and purely speculative, amounts to more than the other damages, and the Secretary of State agrees, subject to appropriation by Congress, to pay this lump sum of $425,000.

Mr. COX. Now, there is the point. Where is the basis of his agreement?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Oh, my dear friend, "ask me something easy." When you come to hunt for a basis for the policy touching our foreign affairs you must find some more industrious man than I am or those I know of. I do not believe the Secretary of State himself can answer your question. [Laughter.] That is all I desire to say at present.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER].

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to the arguments made in opposition to the recommendation of the Secretary of State that this appropriation of $425,000 be inserted in this bill as settlement of the matters in controversy which were considered by the arbitrators appointed on the part of the Government of the United States and the arbitrators on the part of the British Government. They found that there had been as many as 18 vessels seized in the Bering Sea, outside of the 3-mile limit, in which the jurisdiction of the United States attached; and they found further that the claim which had been set up at one time by our then Secretary of State that the Bering Sea was a mare clausum, as it is termed in the law, and that when the purchase was made by the United States of this territory containing the seals and the adjacent waters it embraced this sea—it found that that claim was not well founded.

We had an arbitration, the arbitrators being appointed on the one side by the President of the United States, under the advice of of the then Secretary of State, the late distinguished James G. Blaine, and on the other side by the home Government of Great Britain. The question was submitted to them whether or not there had been any damages committed by the United States upon the vessels and property of citizens of Great Britain. The arbitrators found the fact—and it is conceded by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], and will not be denied by anybody, because the reports to this House and the Senate establish it beyond question—that under the instructions from our Government our cruisers seized in the Bering Sea 18 vessels, of all which the captains and crews were claimed to be British subjects. It is true that while the arbitration was going on it was agreed between the arbitrators negotiating for both the Government of the United States and the Government of Great Britain that they would leave out of consideration the question of the value of the contents of the vessels and the question of the value of the catch which they were prevented from making.

Now, it was claimed by the British Government that these vessels and their contents were worth $542,000, leaving out what is called consequential damages and speculative damages, amounting to nearly $300,000 more, which it was agreed between the arbitrators should not be considered, they confining themselves to the ascertainment of the facts as to how many vessels were captured or warned out of the Bering Sea and the question what was the value of those vessels and what was their ownership.

Mr. TERRY. What became of the vessels?

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. They were captured or warned out.

Mr. TERRY. Were they turned over to their owners afterwards?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Some were seized and some were simply warned out.

Mr. TERRY. Were any finally retained by the United States?

Mr. HITT. A part of them were taken into Pitcairn and condemned under admiralty proceedings.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Yes; a part of them were condemned in the admiralty courts; those that were warned off, as a matter of course, simply obeyed the warning and ceased their depredations.

Now, the difference between the Alabama case alluded to by the gentleman from Illinois and this case is that the Alabama tribunal considered with reference to matters that had already been accomplished, which were, as the French say, un fait accompli. The thing was settled up, as to that.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. The tribunal said with reference to that, "We will ascertain what were the actual damages, but we will not go into the question of speculative damages." Now, the difference between the Alabama case and this case in that respect is that these vessels were equipped in Canadian waters and were sent to the Bering Sea to prosecute the seizure of the seals. A large expense had been incurred by the owners of the vessels in equipping them, fitting them up, and sailing them to the Bering Sea. It was a question, therefore, as to what amount of damages was sustained by these people who were then prosecuting what was conceded by both parties to the arbitration to be a lawful act; and if it was a lawful act the necessary consequence was that the Government of the United States was responsible for whatever damages accrued.

Now, it is conceded that if you should establish another commission—the former commission having cost the United States, as I am reminded by my friend from Kentucky, $240,000—if you propose now the appointment of another commission under the agreement that the question of damages and the question of ownership shall be considered, and if that commission should consider alone the question of the actual value of the vessels condemned by the admiralty courts and the actual injuries sustained by the captains and crews of those vessels, many of whom were imprisoned by the decrees of the courts of the United States and suffered imprisonment for a long while—if all these questions are to be considered, it is not improbable that the damages will amount to a million dollars.

I ask, then, has not the present Secretary of State, Mr. Gresham, acted wisely and well, considering the extent of the findings of the arbitrators and the admitted liability of the United States for the damages; that after this consideration he could succeed in having accepted $425,000 to cover the whole claim rather than again to open up the enormous expense involved in the proceedings of a commission, with the possible result of a largely increased award against the Government of the United States, and especially in view of the fact that we admit for damages the United States Government is liable?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON].

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, let us distinctly understand what the claim is that is involved in this discussion. The first claim put in by the British Government, representing these shipowners, was for the sum of $439,171. Subsequently they filed an amended claim bringing the amount up to $542,169.26. The Secretary of State, not having any hint or request from the British Government, made a proposition to settle the question of damages by the payment of $425,000, and that, too, in face of the fact that the original treaty provided a way for arriving at the damages, if any, which the Government of the United States would be liable for. Ignoring that treaty providing for such a commission, this proposition to pay $425,000 was made by the representative of our Government to the British Government, and we were not allowed to sleep over night before it was accepted, and the United States Government was congratulated on the prompt settlement of the matter.

Mr. Chairman, one of the very best equipped men in regard to foreign questions in this or perhaps in any other country is the Hon. John W. Foster, who was our attorney or counsel in connection with this Bering Sea matter. After the action of the commission at Paris he felt it to be his duty to write to his Government and say that of the $439,171 claimed by the British Government there was $357,353 wholly without any basis of right or any legal claim against the Federal Government, leaving only open to discussion, on the claim presented by the British Government itself, the sum of $81,818; and yet, in the face of this declaration by a representative of our Government, our chosen counsel, and one whom foreign governments send for to shed the light of his large knowledge of international law on their diplomatic questions, the sum of $425,000 is coolly offered to the British Government in settlement of the claim.

One thing must not be forgotten in this connection. No United States citizen is entitled to one dollar of damages; but yet Mr. Foster tells his Government, in the discharge of his duty, that 10 of the ships for which damages are claimed were owned in whole or in part, and mostly in whole, by citizens of the United States sailing under the British flag and engaged in this sealing business.

For one, Mr. Chairman, I want a commission to probe this whole question to the bottom before we dump half a million dollars, most of it to go into the pockets of citizens of our own country sneaking under the British flag to raid the Bering Sea.

But let us look for a moment at the nature of their prospective claims. This is a most extraordinary collection. Here is a vessel, for instance, claimed to be worth $4,000 under the British statement, where the claim for prospective damages, that is the catch of seals that they hoped to have obtained if they had been allowed to toy with the seal, is $16,667. A mighty good investment for a $4,000 vessel to bring such wonderful dividends in its operation in a very short period. Here is another ship worth $6,000, and put in for prospective damages for seals they hoped to catch at the same sum, $16,667. Another, again for $4,000, claiming the same amount. And here is one ship, the Sayward, puts in a nice little claim for attorney's fees and court expenses of $62,847.12. And so on. Here is another vessel estimated to be worth $8,000, and they claim over $17,000 prospective damages; another worth $12,000, where they claim $24,750; another one worth $7,000, for which they ask $15,000, and so on to the end of the list.

Now, this is not a matter to turn on the mere question of dollars and cents. We are not in such a hurry in these times of a depressed Treasury as to justify us in dumping a half million dollars into British pockets and to certain American citizens sailing under the British flag, especially in view of the fact that we have thousands of our own American citizens whose claims have been pending in the Departments for years, many in judgment, which have not been paid, and who have been knocking at the doors of Congress for long and weary years to get their pay. I say in such a condition we ought not to be in any such hurry to dump this $425,000 into the coffers of Great Britain, especially when we have high authority for the statement that the claims, the bulk of them, are unwarranted and unjust. In the Geneva award the rule was adjudicated against us, but Great Britain now wants to turn the rule that we could not get the benefit of into her own favor, and we are asked to take a run and jump over a ten-rail stake-and-rider fence to pay this amount at the first summons from them!

Let us have the commission provided for in the treaty. Let us probe this matter to the bottom, and if we have any English-Americans trying to filch money out of our pockets by way of England, let us put them on the rack and find out where they belong. [Applause.] I can not comprehend the reason for this haste. Why, the Treasury must be more plathoric than is shown by any glowing statement that has yet been made in respect to it. They do not know what to do with the money when they are thus anxious to benefit Great Britain and sneaking Americans.

Now, I have kindly feelings toward Great Britain, and yet I am not so hopelessly in love with her that I will forget my first duty to my own fireside in this country. She always looks out for number one, and she knows how to do it, too, but, for God's sake, let us teach the British lion that the American eagle knows something, too, and is not in a hurry to vacate her perch where she belongs.

Not one good argument has been offered in committee by the State Department or on the floor of this House why we should not follow the course indicated in the treaty and have a commission to thoroughly probe and test these questions. That is all that I have time to say, for I want my friend from Illinois [Mr. HITT], who is still more familiar with this question, to have time to speak upon this important matter.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I hope the gentleman from Kentucky will occupy some time now. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has twenty-five minutes remaining.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY].

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, in the brief time allowed me I can not discuss this important amendment as fully as I desire. The amendment is very important. It provides for the payment to the Government of Great Britain, according to the agreement reached by the exchange of notes of August 21, 1894, in full satisfaction of all demands for damages against the United States growing out of the controversy between the two Governments as to the fur seals in Bering Sea under the award and findings of the Tribunal of Arbitration at Paris, $425,000.

We are confronted with two propositions. We must accept one or the other, under a treaty obligation. We have either to agree to pay the lump sum of $425,000, the amount agreed upon by Sir Julian Pauncefote, the British ambassador, and the honorable Secretary of State, Mr. Gresham, or refer the matters in dispute to a joint commission.

I have no hesitation in saying at the outstart that I am in favor of paying the sum of $425,000. I regret that we have been placed in an attitude where we have to pay this amount; but the gentlemen on the other side of this House can not claim that we caused the existing situation. It grows out of the arbitration agreed to by the last Republican Administration—Mr. Blaine on one side and the British ambassador on the other. Now, let us look briefly at the situation. In 1867 the United States Government acquired the Territory of Alaska by paying the sum of $7,200,000. When we acquired Alaska we acquired also the Pribilof Islands, called St. Paul and St. George, where were seal rookeries. In 1870, a little over two years after we acquired Alaska, we leased our property for a large amount of money; so that from 1870 down to 1890 we realized nearly one-half the amount paid for Alaska.

In 1886 Canadian intrusion began, and from 1886 it grew worse, and thousands of seals were slaughtered illegally and without authority. It was believed to be proper, in the Administration of Mr. Harrison, that these questions should be submitted to arbitration, and a treaty was made providing for arbitration. The arbitrators were two gentlemen appointed by the President of the United States, two appointed by Her Britannic Majesty, one by the President of the French Republic, one by the King of Italy, and one by the King of Sweden and Norway. The arbitrators were in session for months, and five important points were submitted to them, on each of which they rendered a distinct decision, and each decision was against the United States. As the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] well said, the Paris arbitration was a flat failure, so far as the United States were concerned. I now read from the award of the Paris Tribunal of Arbitration to show why damages are claimed against the United States:

And whereas by article 8 of the said treaty, after reciting that the high contracting parties had found themselves unable to agree upon a reference which should include the question of the liability of each for the injuries alleged to have been sustained by the other, or by its citizens, in connection with the claims presented and urged by it, and that "they were solicitous that this subordinate question should not interrupt or longer delay the submission and determination of the main questions," the high contracting parties agreed that "either of them might submit to the arbitrators any question of fact involved in said claims and ask for a finding thereon, the question of the liability of either Government upon the facts found to be the subject of further negotiation."

It has been ascertained, according to the report of the Secretary of State, which I now have before me, and which he furnishes this House, with a memorandum of additions and amendments made since the original presentation of the list of British claims for compensation for the seizure of British sealing vessels in the Bering Sea, that 18 British vessels were seized. The whole amount of the claim, as set forth in this report, is $542,169.26. But after negotiations between Sir Julian Pauncefote and the Secretary of State it was agreed that Great Britain should receive $425,000 in full satisfaction of all demands for damages against the United States growing out of the controversy between the two Governments as to fur seals in Bering Sea under the award and findings of the Paris Tribunal.

So that now we must determine whether we will send this to a joint commission or whether we will pay this lump sum, as it is called, of $425,000. Mr. Chairman, we all know the history of joint commissions. When these matters are referred to a joint commission the commissioners will have to be appointed and paid a large annual salary; witnesses will have to be summoned; lengthy investigations will be made; the United States will have to be represented by attorneys, and, in my opinion, if a joint commission is appointed to adjust and settle the damages the amount paid by the United States will be nearer $800,000 than $425,000.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Perhaps a million.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. My friend on my right says perhaps a million, and I agree with him. The arbitrators in Paris refused to specify how much should be paid by the United States, but declare that the amount of money must be settled by mutual agreement between the United States and Great Britain, or by the decision of a joint commission.

Mr. Chairman, if there is a joint commission there will be claims for the seizure of 18 British sealing schooners in the open waters of Bering Sea and the confiscation of their cargoes of seal skins.

There will be claims of many British sealing schooners which were warned out of Bering Sea as soon as our cruisers could get there and do so after the publication of the first modus vivendi, of June 15, 1891.

There will be claims also of officers and crews who were captured with their vessels in 1886 and 1887 and sent to Sitka.

These last-named claims were not considered by the British ambassador and the Secretary of State in the settlement agreed upon by them, and they will be shut out if Congress will accept the recommendation of the President and Secretary of State, and settle all demands for damages by appropriating $425,000.

I believe the members of this House who have examined this important amendment to the general deficiency bill now under consideration and the reasons which have caused it to be offered will agree with me that it is to the interest of our Government to ratify the settlement which has been made and pay $425,000 to the British Government. There should be immediate action. There should be no postponement until next session, as has been suggested. Promptness in the payment of the claims as agreed to will be in the line of economy, justice, and honor.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I yield twenty minutes to my colleague [Mr. HITT].

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, the appropriation asked for here, of $425,000 for damages to British subjects who were prevented from catching seals in Bering Sea, to be paid to Great Britain, and by that Government to be paid over to claimants, is in part for grossly exaggerated claims, in part for a mass of fiction, pure fiction of imaginary seal catches added to these exaggerated claims, and in part for outright frauds, pretended claims of British subjects, but really belonging to American citizens, who should be punished for violating their country's laws, not paid. That is in brief the nature of these claims. The whole amount of the claims added together is $542,000. The President has proposed to pay $425,000 to settle them in a lump sum, without examination. That would give every claimant four-fifths of all his claim—a vast sum to pay for fictions and frauds! The men who were conducting these Bering Sea seal-fishing ventures, instead of being, as both gentlemen who have advocated this amendment have stated, "engaged in a lawful occupation" were, in fact, as to more than half these claims, American citizens unlawfully engaged in transgressing an act of Congress which prohibited sealing in Bering Sea—a law absolutely binding upon them. We may be liable for actual damages to a British subject since the decision of the Paris Tribunal of Arbitration that we have no jurisdiction outside of the 3-mile limit, if we seize or warn him off from sealing there; but not so with Americans, for they are subject to our law, and we had a law forbidding sealing in those waters. Instead of being entitled to money they should have been arrested and fined. They are only entitled to punishment. They should go, not to the Treasury, but to jail.

What are these claims? There were 18 ships went to catch seals in Bering Sea, which it is agreed on both sides were seized or warned off by the United States cruisers. They are all claimed to have been owned by British subjects. Claims for two other ships have been added since, making 20 in all. As a matter of truth, 10 of these ships were owned by Americans. The real owners knew if they sent those ships into Bering Sea it was a violation of the laws of Congress forbidding seal fishing there, and these laws were the laws of their country, from whose penalties they could not escape if known. So these owners put forward Canadians, British subjects, to conduct the work. How did they do it? Take one, the first one, Boscowitz. A man named Joseph Boscowitz, a rich man, an American citizen, as he stated to our Consul Myers at Victoria and Mr. T. T. Williams in San Francisco, made a partnership with a Captain Warren, a British subject, who was skilled in this business or craft, and lent him money to pay for his half of the vessels and ventures. So that Warren, who had no capital, was only nominally interested as half owner. The loans were secured to Boscowitz by mortgage on the vessels.

He lent Warren money at such a high rate of interest that it took all the profits, leaving Warren nothing for the work. Then Warren became insolvent and Boscowitz closed down on him with his mortgages. But Boscowitz did not want the ships back in his own name. What then happened? They got a blacksmith named Thomas H. Cooper, a British subject living in San Francisco, a brother-in-law of Warren, to go up to Victoria, and when the sheriff sold off the whole fleet on the mortgages this blacksmith bought it all in for $1, and immediately executed mortgages on the ships at high figures to Boscowitz, and he has thus been the real owner. Boscowitz and Warren were there when this man Cooper bought the ships. The man did not even know the number or names of the ships when he gave his testimony.

He testified that he did not pay the dollar, but told Warren to pay it for him; and he signed all the papers and mortgages presented to him by Boscowitz.

Now, then, this man, Thomas H. Cooper, appears among the claimants as an injured British subject, demanding $225,000 damages for the seizure of these ships which really belonged to Boscowitz. That is the way our Government is proposed to be plundered for a law-breaking American citizen. When you vote this and it is handed over to Sir Julian Pauncefote, whose action is purely ministerial and functional, is it to go, to the amount of four-fifths of $225,000, to Thomas H. Cooper, the British subject who served as the man of straw in this fraud, and who testifies that he has no interest whatever in it?

He appears in the list as the claimant for and owner of the Grace, for which $38,142.57 is claimed; the Anna Beck, a steamer schooner, for which the claim is $27,863.04; the Dolphin, $40,201.50, and the Sayward, $118,957.12. There is a marvel, that little ship Sayward, with its wonderful bill—a soaring stretch of imagination distancing all rivalry. She was registered by the owners at the customs office in Victoria as having not quite 60 tons. At $59.72 valuation per ton her actual value was $3,647.50. On that narrow basis this vast inflation of all sorts of multiplied and fictitious items is piled up into a claim for $118,000, apparently to go to Thomas H. Cooper, who swears that he had nothing to do with it at all, except to lend his name to this American Boscowitz in order to carry on a fraud, violate our laws, and deplete our Treasury by a claim sent around in this way through the British Government.

Mr. COX. Have you that testimony?

Mr. HITT. I have Mr. Cooper's evidence here. Do you want to hear it?

Mr. COX. I would like to hear it.

Mr. HITT. It is long, and I will not read all of it.

My name is Thomas Cooper; age, 56; residence, northeast corner of Laurel and Sacramento streets, San Francisco; occupation, blacksmith; resident of San Francisco thirty-three years.

Q. Are you an American citizen?

A. No, sir.

Q. You have been the owner of several vessels which have been engaged in sealing?

A. Yes, sir; they are in my name, I presume.

Q. What were the vessels of which you were the owner?

A. To tell you the truth I know very little about them. They were sold at sheriff's sale up there and I bought them for $1. I was advised to do so by Captain Warren.

Q. Up where?

A. Up in Victoria.

Q. What were the names of the vessels?

A. I really could not tell. There was the Sayward, and one was called the Thornton.

[Laughter.]

The man did not know the names of his own vessels!

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. What is the gentleman reading from?

Mr. HITT. I am reading from the Counter case of the United States, page 321 of the proceedings before the Tribunal of Arbitration at Paris.

Q. Can you give the names of the other vessels?

A. I can not give the names.

Q. Would you know them if they were repeated to you?

A. Yes, sir; I would—know—some—of them.

[Laughter.]

This is the claimant for $225,000! He thinks he would know the names of some of his vessels. [Laughter.]

Q. The Anna Beck?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The Dolphin?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The Grace or Gracey?

A. Yes, sir; I think so.

[Laughter.]

That was the best knowledge that this British subject, whose property has suffered such injury at our hands, had of his two hundred and twenty-five thousand dollar fleet!

Q. Will you state how you came to purchase these vessels?

A. By the advice of my brother-in-law, Captain Warren. He was to manage them. He had my power of attorney to manage them, and he knows all about them.

Q. And you paid $1 for them?

A. No, sir; I paid $1 for the whole lot.

Q. For the whole lot?

A. I think so.

Mr. HUDSON. Was this man a British subject?

Mr. HITT. He was a British subject. That is why they were put in his name, in order to facilitate this fraud.

Q. How many vessels did you purchase for $1?

A. I can not tell you; I bought them all.

[Laughter.]

This man bought a fleet, and did not even know the number of vessels in it! Just before that he was asked:

Q. When you made the purchase they were sold under the mortgage?

A. I believe so.

Q. Who held the mortgage?

A. A man by the name of Boscowitz.

This man Boscowitz was an American citizen. All of the witnesses testify that he is a well-known American citizen.

He is the real owner of the vessels.

Q. Did you buy these vessels for yourself?

A. I was advised to buy them by Captain Warren and he was to manage them, and I have paid very little attention to them.

Q. Did you pay the dollar?

A. Yes, sir; I authorized him to do it. I was not there.

[Laughter.]

Q. Subsequent to the purchase of these vessels did Boscowitz hold a mortgage on them?

A. I believe so.

Q. For the full value?

A. I could not tell you that. I really do not know whether it was a dollar or a million dollars.

[Laughter.]

Q. Did you give the mortgage to him?

A. I believe I renewed the mortgage. I know I signed a lot of papers. I was so little interested that I do not know what I signed exactly. They were both there, and they told me it was a matter of form and I would not be troubled any more.

Q. You did just as they directed you to do?

A. Exactly.

Q. You had no interest in them whatever?

A. No, sir; none.

Q. You have no interest in the vessels now?

A. No, sir.

Q. None at all?

A. Only they are in my name, and I was told to keep them in my name.

Q. You have never paid any money for the management of those vessels?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever receive any remuneration from the earnings of those vessels?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you ever been called upon to advance any money?

A. No, sir.

Q. And do you now claim any interest in those vessels?

A. No, sir.

Q. Who was the holder of the mortgage?

A. It must have been Boscowitz.

Q. Was there any arrangement that you know of between Mr. Warren and Mr. Boscowitz as to these vessels?

A. I do not know the least thing about it in that respect. I simply signed the papers.

Q. Do you know anything about a claim being put in for you against the Government of the United States?

A. No, sir.

Mr. COX. How did those vessels happen to be sold at sheriff's sale?

Mr. HITT. I have explained that. Boscowitz went into a pretended partnership with Warren, who had no money. He lent Warren the money to take his share in the partnership, and charged him such high interest that Warren became insolvent and was sold out. Then, when Warren was sold out, this man Cooper was brought on to buy the vessels in, and after he bought them in he mortgaged them for more than they were worth to Boscowitz, who thus held them still.

Mr. COX. Is this man Cooper a claimant?

Mr. HITT. He is the claimant. He is the British lion that is roaring at us—this man who paid $1 for a fleet of vessels, or rather let someone else pay it for him. [Laughter.] Now, Mr. Chairman, this affidavit is long, and I can not read it all; but I have read enough to show its character. This British subject told the truth right through. He admitted that he was a mere man of straw, and that Boscowitz, who is an American citizen, owned the whole fleet, had been operating the vessels all summer, and had taken him into the business in order that he might with impunity violate our laws, escape punishment, and lay the foundation for a fraudulent claim, which he hoped to get through the State Department, though probably at the time he did not think that it would ever come for criticism before Congress.

Mr. HUNTER. Who were the commission that allowed this claim?

Mr. HITT. It never has been allowed.

Mr. HUNTER. Who audited it?

Mr. HITT. It never has been audited. It has simply been presented with others to our Government. These claims were presented before the Paris Tribunal but no action taken, withdrawn, and last summer presented to our Government here, in all $542,000. The President directed the Secretary of State to offer a lump sum of $425,000, or four-fifths of all claimed. The lump sum is so near the whole amount of this exorbitant claim that the State Department seems to have been making a desperate effort to maintain the parity between claims and payments. [Laughter.]

The whole amount claimed is $542,000, of which, according to the best information and according to the testimony, Americans are the real parties in interest for $360,000. I ask gentlemen to bear in mind those figures. I repeat it, the testimony which has been printed in the appendix to the counter case of the United States, and will be found in the printed papers which were before the Paris Tribunal of Arbitration, shows that of the $542,000 Americans have $360,000. A. J. Bechtel was the real owner of the big claim for the Carolina, $24,313, and the two claims for the Pathfinder, for which claim was made in the name of Munsio & Carne, amounting altogether to $55,000. He is an American citizen, residing in San Francisco. Then there is A. Frank, who was a partner of Gutman, and his claim was put in Gutman's name; but Gutman has been long dead, and A. Frank really owns it. Their relations were like those of Boscowitz and Warren, which I have just explained. The same game was played in this case as in the others.

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. When was the arbitration authorized?

Mr. HITT. There has been no arbitration on this matter; this is simply a claim which has been presented. The Black Diamond was a similar case—a claim in the name of Gutman, a British subject, but A. Frank is the real party in interest. Then comes his claim for the Alfred Adams, $20,433. That ship comes in again as the Lily under an alias like a thief and makes a second claim for $17,185. That makes over $55,000 for Frank. Foot them all up and they make $360,000 which will go to American citizens out of $542,000. If this passes they will all get from the State Department, through the British Government, their ratio or four-fifths of their claims. That would leave $182,000 claimed by persons who have not been shown thus far to be other than British claimants.

Now, as to the character of these claims, what are they? The great mass is substantially made up of claims for seal skins that they did not catch, for earnings they did not earn, for probable or estimated catch. I mentioned that ship Sayward, her true value, $2,647.50; probable catch, $19,250, and then a long list of swelling details and enormous sums for this little tub, making a claim of $118,957.12. "But one-half pennyworth of bread to this intolerable deal of sack." [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. Has the gentleman made an analysis showing what portion of the claims under this bill are the claims of American citizens assuming to sail as British subjects?

Mr. HITT. This bill does not distinguish them. But if $425,000 is paid they will all receive their proportion pro rata. The proportion of the Americans would be as 360 to 542, and the proportion of the British would be as 182 to 542.

But the claim itself is bad, is exaggerated, is inflated with elements that ought to be wholly rejected. It is wrong; it is rotten.

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. All of it?

Mr. HITT. No; there is a just claim at bottom for the real values actually lost by genuine British claimants. I will state the facts fairly. Estimated or prospective earnings ought not to be paid. Over twenty years ago we tried to establish such a claim against the British in the Alabama claims dispute for our ships destroyed. We were beaten and the law was settled. A claim for probable earnings and all that class of speculative damages was argued on our behalf at great length before the Geneva Tribunal, which decided the Alabama claims; and the general doctrine of international law which had been declared in our Supreme Court by Justice Story long before was then announced to the whole world by the highest tribunal of international law that ever sat—a court of nations. And they decided against us. They declared that though a ship was burned to the water's edge just as she was starting upon a whaling cruise the owners should receive nothing but the value of the ship, not the value of the catch—not a cent for that.

The impressive words of that decision have already been read in this debate, but they are so weighty and so brief that I may be allowed to read them once more. They are found in the last edition of Wheaton, they are found in every work on international law published since 1872, as the doctrine which by the consensus of mankind is now the rule of right, of public law, and international justice. I will not read the words of Justice Story and of Sedgwick's Measure of Damages, and will read only the language of the august Geneva Tribunal when they decided against us at the time we made a claim similar to that made here by the British:

Whereas prospective earnings can not properly be made the subject of compensation inasmuch as they depend in their nature upon future and uncertain contingencies, the tribunal is unanimously of opinion that there is no ground for awarding to the United States any sum by way of indemnity under this head.

That referred to vessels destroyed by corsairs—British ships—during our war.

The parallel with the present case is complete. It is England that here presents the claim, as it was the United States that presented the case there. The uncertainty of a voyage in the cloudy and perilous seas of the boisterous Northwest is full as great as in a whaling cruise. But the principle is settled. Such claims are wholly inadmissible, and that is all there is of it.

Now, what do you suppose is the proportion of these estimated catch items in the claims? My colleague [Mr. CANNON] stated it in general terms. I have the accurate amounts here. Out of the $499,161.48 of claims filed first at Paris, and set out fully in the large blue book printed by the British Government, $357,353 is for "estimated catch"—that is, for the catch which they did not catch! Adding all the claims that have been brought in since, making up the $542,000 of present claims, I find it is $377,000 that is estimated catch. This is more than three-fourths of the whole. The claim of ships for what they did not catch is three times as great as for all loss actually suffered, taking their losses at their own extravagant figures. Take the $377,000 claimed for estimated catch out of the $542,000, and there is but $165,000 of damages for real losses to British and pretended British claims, and those losses are greatly exaggerated.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I think the gentleman is mistaken in stating the amount.

Mr. HITT. I am pretty certain I am not mistaken. I have the book before me.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I have examined it carefully.

Mr. HITT. On page 162 of the President's answer to the Senate of February 11, being Executive Document No. 67, there is the computation as reported by the agent of the United States to the Secretary of State, and I have read the figures from that very careful report of ex-Secretary Foster.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. But I think if the gentleman will examine the documents on which the claims are based, he will find the amount is $300,000 instead of $377,000.

Mr. HITT. The documents, if carefully examined, read the same way with the same result. What we have before us in Executive Document 132 is a reprint, as is most of Executive Document 67, of documents submitted to the Arbitration Tribunal.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I will not interrupt the gentleman further.

Mr. HITT. I do not think there can be a variation as to the facts there. I am satisfied that the amount I have stated is correct.

I do not know that it would be well to go through all the details of these claims. The time, in fact, would not permit it. But the claims are remarkable, also, in ingenious exaggeration of detailed losses. Ships worth two or three thousand dollars each have appended to them for attorneys' and counsel fees an item of $1,250. They must be high-priced lawyers out there, charging such sums as that in the case of a tub; though it certainly, Mr. Chairman, required a good deal of skill to have made up the claims in this shape.

Then, again, vessels worth three to five thousand dollars are put down at $8,000, $10,000, or $12,000 for the ships themselves, besides all the other items which are equally inflated. On page 338 of the counter case of the United States are some interesting examples. The Carolena, value claimed for the ship proper, $4,000; real value, $1,905.06. The Thornton, value claimed, $6,000; tonnage claimed, 78 tons; actual registered tons shown at the custom-house at Victoria, 29.36; real value, $2,258.37. The Onward, value claimed, $4,000; real value, $1,497.76. W. P. Sayward, tons claimed, 135½; actual registered tons, 59.79; value claimed, $6,000; real value, $2,647.50. The Grace, tons claimed, 182; value claimed, $12,000; actual tons registered, 76.87; real value, $5,068.03. The Dolphin, tons claimed, 174; tons actually registered, 60.10; value claimed, $12,000; real value, $4,144.49. The Ada, value claimed, $7,000; real value, $3,401.05.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I yield the remainder of the time to which I am entitled, five minutes, to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HITT. I shall hurry through, Mr. Chairman, and be as brief as possible in my remarks.

The point claimed by the gentleman from Kentucky, who opened this debate, that under the modus vivendi agreed upon between the two Governments in 1892, we were bound for these claims for estimated catch is a mistake. A modus vivendi, as gentlemen know, is simply a provisional agreement. It was then agreed, by article 5, in view of the Arbitration Tribunal, which was soon to meet at Paris, that if the decision as to our jurisdiction over Bering Sea went in our favor and against the British Government, they should pay us the difference between 7,500 seals per annum, to which we were to restrict our killing on the Pribilof Islands, and the catch we might have taken without undue diminution of the seal herds had it not been for this outside sealing. Our ordinary killing before the slaughter by the Canadian poachers had been 100,000 annually.

By that temporary arrangement, if the decision turned out to be that we had a right to the seals to the exclusion of others in Bering Sea, the British were to pay for the difference between the 7,500 and what we might have taken in the regular sealing season if there had been no disturbance by pelagic sealing. On the other hand, if the decision of the tribunal was against us, and affirmed the right of British sealers to take seals in Bering Sea, we were to pay for the difference in the catch actually made and the catch that might have been made without undue diminution of the herds; to pay Great Britain for abstaining from the exercise of that right during the pendency of arbitration, upon the basis of such a regulated or limited catch or catches as in the opinion of the arbitrators might have been taken without an undue diminution of the seal herds.

It was an agreement, almost in the shape of a bet, made between the two Governments as to the result of the Arbitration Tribunal. But before the decision came on, and while the tribunal was sitting, both sides agreed to abandon this agreement and contingent for estimated-catch claim; and on the 31st of May Sir Charles Russell rose and announced that Great Britain would not ask the tribunal for any finding for damages upon and under article 5 of the convention or modus vivendi of April 18, 1892; and Mr. Edward J. Phelps, on the part of the American Government, rose and said that the United States Government would not on its behalf ask the tribunal for any finding for damages upon and under article 5 of the convention or modus vivendi of April 18, 1892.

That is the article with the speculative damages in it for the winning side; something nearly in the nature of a bet between the parties as to the result of the decision of the tribunal. That is set forth fully on pages 162 and 163 of the Senate Executive Document No. 67 to which I have referred, where Sir Charles Russell announces:

Although I think it might be argued that this tribunal is required by Article V to give damages—

And I hope the gentleman when he comes to close this discussion will reply to this—on the basis of a limited catch or catches—

That is this very thing—which might have been taken in Bering Sea—in all the circumstances of the case Great Britain does not desire to press that view upon the tribunal, and, therefore, will ask for no finding for damages upon and under that fifth article of the modus vivendi. Both the United States and Great Britain have abandoned any claim for damages under that head.

That answers all the gentleman has said as to our being bound by the modus vivendi. The value of the ships in this list is greatly exaggerated, as I have stated.

When a ship was caught it was taken to Sitka. There it was appraised, and in every case except two the owners declared that the appraised value was exorbitant and they would not give bond for the amount. I have here the letter of Mr. Bayard to Mr. West, the British minister, in reference to that matter, notifying him September 27, 1888, that these men would not give bond because the ships Grace, Dolphin, Anna Beck, and Ada were appraised beyond their value. And yet that appraisement was far below, in some cases, one-third of what they claim now.

Again, they charge double for the price of guns, small boats, rifles, etc. Here is the testimony of experts upon that point, showing that there is exaggeration everywhere. For supplies 100 per cent excess has been charged in many cases, and wherever the details are given the prices are shown to be exaggerated. As far as the Americans are concerned, to whom a part of this award would go, instead of receiving payment they ought to be punished for their action. It is all a fraud as to them. And yet in the face of these facts this amount has been offered by the State Department. But, Mr. Chairman, we are not to be frightened by the threats of the expense of a commission to settle this if we do not make this appropriation, and the cost of lawyers and the presentation of more claims.

We are not now in the position of a nervous State Department. The pretense that we had better accept this than run the risk of having the amount greatly enlarged has no weight, for the reason that no more claims can be presented now. That is plain from the words of the British ambassador. Let me read to you. When these claims were presented, June 7, 1894, to the State Department, Sir Julian Pauncefote said this included all British claims for compensation for the seizure of British sealing vessels in Bering Sea:

I have now the honor to transmit herewith, by direction of Her Majesty's secretary of state for foreign affairs, a complete list and summary of those claims, together with memoranda of the additions and amendments made since their original presentation. The whole of the claims, excepting that of the Henrietta and that of the Black Diamond (1886), were laid before the Tribunal of Arbitration.

Do not say now that a commission appointed would have to face a million dollars of new claims. The word of an honorable minister is there, and he is acting in a disinterested ministerial capacity.

One single word as to the expense of that commission. This last commission was the most splendid in its appointments and the longest in its existence, and the most elaborate and dignified that ever sat, and they did not consume the amount appropriated for them by more than $35,000, and the Department had to divide it up among their pets who were there arguing the case. Only $194,223 was really spent and the rest was given away to the amount of $30,000, and even then the heart of the Washington lobby was made sick by having over $5,000 of that appropriation turned back into the Treasury, unable to be expended.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I yield to the gentleman two minutes.

Mr. HITT. From some familiarity with the State Department and its surroundings in the past, I know that Washington is a place where claims breed like microbes. They are worse than bacilli in their facility of multiplication, and claims commissions have been microbe killers. When I was connected with that Department there was a commission appointed which had presented to it $370,000,000—think of that vast sum—of Mexican claims. That commission rejected, extinguished, and wiped out 97½ per cent of that sum; and if we call a commission here, as was proposed by Sir Julian Pauncefote, and name respectable, able men, one from each side and the third chosen by them, to go to San Francisco, where the real claims are, they will ferret them out at a cost of perhaps $15,000, and we will then probably pay about $50,000, which is about what is due. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] is recognized for ten minutes.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, it must be confessed that the present situation in which we have been placed by the Bering Sea award is an extremely disagreeable one. It is, it seems to me, a choice between two admitted evils. We have been brought to this situation by the facts which have been so well stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT]. We seized in Bering Sea in the seasons of 1886, 1887, 1889, and 1890 eighteen pelagic sealers flying the British flag, with ostensible Canadian ownership. We seized these vessels on the contention that Bering Sea was mare clausum and not an open sea, and on the further contention that the seals which were accustomed to herd upon the seal islands during each season were the property of the United States. In consequence of these contentions we submitted to arbitration by a body known as the Paris Tribunal all of the questions involved; first, as to whether or not Bering Sea was an open sea and the seals herding upon the seal islands were the property of the United States, with the provision also that in case of these questions being adjudicated in either direction, then the victorious side might present to this tribunal any facts bearing on the seizures, have them reported upon, the liability, in view of those facts, to be determined by subsequent negotiations.

The tribunal, sitting at Paris in the spring and summer of 1893, determined the two substantial questions against us. First, they determined that Bering Sea was an open sea, and that the United States had no jurisdiction beyond 3 miles from the coast line. Secondly, they decided that the seals herding on the seal islands were not the property of the United States. The two substantial contentions on which the United States rested its claim were therefore decided against this Government.

The tribunal then proceeded to hear and report certain facts that were presented, these facts being that certain vessels floating the British flag, and claiming Canadian ownership, had been seized by the United States, 18 in number. There were really 21 seizures, but 18 different vessels. The only fact that was determined by this tribunal was that these vessels were seized in the open sea. The necessary inference from the facts, although not specifically determined by the tribunal, is that the United States is responsible in damages for the seizure of these vessels.

The tribunal expressly stated that it left open entirely the question as to ownership of these vessels, leaving that to be considered by subsequent negotiations. They of course did not determine as to the liability of our Government for the seizure of these 18 vessels, beyond what could be shown to have British ownership. So far as there was American ownership there was no liability resting against this Government.

Now, that was the state of facts presented to the State Department when it took up this case. After considering it they found that there had been presented claims as damages by the Canadians bills for $542,000, without including interest. This, however, did not include all the damages that may be presented, for there remain the claims of 30 persons arrested or detained by the officers of our Government in the course of these seizures. But in these claims for damages there is found a claim for $375,000 or thereabouts for the expected catch, not actual catch that had taken place at the time of the seizures, but prospective catches, estimated catches, and those estimated catches figure to the extent of $375,000, leaving about $175,000 as actual claimed damages.

Now, I believe with my friend from Illinois [Mr. HITT] that this claim for prospective damages ought to have no standing in any tribunal that may adjudicate this case, but I will not say surely that it will not have a standing in the commission that will be formed to adjudicate this matter. I remember that we had the Halifax Tribunal, where we submitted the question of damages to a commission, one member of which was chosen by ourselves, one by the British Government, and the third, the umpire, to be chosen precisely as the umpire of the prospective commission in this case is to be nominated, from one of the foreign Governments, making him practically the commissioner who decides the damages in these claims.

Now, in the case of the Halifax award we all believed that there never would be a cent of damages awarded against us. But the Belgian umpire made an award of $5,000,000 against the United States, and we were obliged to pay it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Does the gentleman remember how much of it was consequential damages?

Mr. DINGLEY. Nearly all of it; the prospective value of the inshore fisheries.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I wanted to bring that out, and intended to do so in my closing argument.

Mr. DINGLEY. We have felt outraged about that award ever since.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Will the gentleman permit me to make a single suggestion?

Mr. DINGLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. It is that this sum of money can not be appropriated except by Congress; and I do not believe the American Congress will ever make an appropriation for the payment of speculative damages.

Mr. DINGLEY. Well, Mr. Chairman, that may be. We did make an appropriation of $5,000,000 to pay the Halifax award when the verdict went against us.

What troubles me in this case is the fact that we have to choose between two admitted evils. Now, I have no doubt at all that the award of $425,000 is an excessive one.

Mr. HITT. There is no parallel between this and the Halifax award, as it was subsequently proved that the speculative damages as awarded were all obtained through perjury.

Mr. DINGLEY. I agree with you entirely in this matter. Now, what I wanted to call the attention of the committee to was that it is a choice between two evils. I admit that $425,000 is three times the actual damages sustained by those pelagic sealers; and I think, too, with the gentleman from Illinois, that it will be found, if the facts can be brought out, that more than three-fourths of the ownership of the vessels flying the British flag would prove to be American. I believe the offer made by the Secretary of State is excessive. I believe that a much smaller sum would have been accepted to close up the matter. But yet I am brought face to face with this alternative, and that is the alternative of the submission of this question to another umpire, who will be chosen by a foreign Government; and what will come out of that alternative I am unable to say.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, what the gentleman from Maine has said covers so much of what I intended to say in closing the argument that I do not know that it is necessary to add anything. We are presented with the alternative, as he has suggested, that we have to pay something. It is a pure question of what we shall pay and how we shall pay. The gentleman from Illinois is entirely correct in saying that claims are bred and grow rapidly and to great strength and size whenever we have a foreign dispute. We see it here. They have grown, and will grow enormously if we put them off, and give full opportunity and unlimited temptation.

I confess, Mr. Chairman, that I do not look with any degree of alarm upon what seems to grieve the hearts of the gentlemen from Illinois and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON], that some of this money may go into the pockets of American citizens. As between American citizens and Englishmen, if somebody has to get it, I would stand by with some pious resignation and see it go into the pockets of an American rather than into the pockets of an Englishman. When this appropriation is voted down it will only give better opportunity for an illegal Canadian claimant to go before a commission and, on testimony taken at a long distance from here, obtain claims which he can not obtain if this sum of money is given. This $425,000 puts a stop to any further perjury or inflation of claims, and of course is obnoxious to those who hope for fees, salaries, commissions, and illegitimate claims. Unintentionally the gentlemen are making these improper gains possible.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. If this $425,000 is not accepted by the present Congress and arbitration is had to settle it, would not another Congress have supervision of whatever settlement is had? Therefore we have nothing to risk.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Your question is based on the hypothesis that the Congress of the United States will refuse to pay an award of a legally constituted tribunal. If ever under an international agreement we agree to pay a certain amount, God forbid that the Congress of the United States, in the presence of the world, shall refuse to make that payment and be delinquent at the international bar of public honesty and universal integrity. I do not believe that it will ever come to that. It never has yet. We have paid all the judgments obtained at international courts, and I believe always will. It is purely a question of how much we shall pay and how it shall be ascertained.

My friend from Illinois [Mr. HITT] is, as a rule, extremely accurate, but his inaccuracy in this instance shows how in the heat of debate men make statements that they can not stand to. He says that it seems as if most of these claimants charge for legal services $1,250. Now, if he had examined he would have found that there are but three who claim $1,250, while there are nine who put up with $250. That is but a fair specimen of how the gentleman has allowed himself in the heat of debate to make statements about figures. If he will take the record and go over it he will find that the whole amount of consequential damages is $300,000 and not $377,000. It is true that there is a statement of Mr. Foster which seems to confirm that, but when the gentleman adds up these claims he will find that they amount to only $300,000.

Mr. HITT. I stated that there were so many cases where the claim was $1,250 that the aggregate of the legal expenses mounted up to a great deal more than that. There are several at $850, some at $1,250, and in one case I understand the amount was $10,000.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. That may be, but my friend said they were all put at $1,250.

Mr. HITT. Sir Julian Pauncefote expressly states that the claims filed are a complete list and summary of all the claims for the seizure of British sailing vessels in Bering Sea.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. But he expressly states that if they are not settled and a convention is called he shall be at liberty to file other claims.

Mr. HITT. No; he says that this shall in no way prejudice the claimants by limiting them to $442,000, but he does not say that other claims may come in.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. How can you keep claimants out? Let me put one case to the gentleman. We imprisoned certain sailors who were engaged in a lawful pursuit, as decided by the Paris Tribunal, one of whom died from the effects of being imprisoned in a jail on the western coast. No claim has yet been put in by his heirs, but does not the gentleman think that unless we make this settlement there will be a claim, and a just one, for that man's death? It has been decided that his vessel was on the high seas, that he was engaged in a lawful business, and that the United States unlawfully arrested, detained, and immured him in prison, from the effects of which imprisonment he died.

Mr. HITT. The answer is that if a commission were called, according to Sir Julian's letter it would be limited to these claims, and they are all the claims. As to the claim which the gentleman suggests, it could be presented to the State Department at any time, under the international law, as such claims are presented from all foreign countries.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. It would be presented to any commission that might be appointed and we would be obliged to pay whatever they found due.

Mr. HITT. It could not go to the commission.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. It would undoubtedly go to the commission. The gentleman is wholly mistaken. The facts are, Mr. Chairman, that this is a most unfortunate fiasco, a most unhappy chapter in our diplomacy. The agent of the United States (Mr. Foster) and the Secretary of State (Mr. Blaine) believed that Bering Sea was a mare clausum, and they put us before a tribunal resting our claim upon that ground. It was decided against us, and so decided that the only open question is as to the amount of damages. We lost all before that tribunal, and in an attempt by that means to save the seals we are going to lose the seals, which are in process of rapid destruction, which perhaps can hardly be arrested; and now the question, as my friend from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] puts it, is whether it is better to end this bad bargain, to shut up this book of unfortunate diplomacy, to close this chapter of international failure, by a payment less than the amount claimed and less than the amount that will be proven.

Let us, Mr. Chairman, get rid of this thorn under our thumb which makes us uncomfortable, and settle this question between us and Great Britain, and then reopen, with Great Britain and the other nations, the question of better regulations to save the remaining seals. The question, I say, is whether we shall keep the case open for more claimants to come in, tempt them to perjury, have the expense of a commission, and pay in the end more than a million or a million and a half of dollars, simply for the pleasure of shaking our fist in the face of Great Britain and having, perhaps, a partisan triumph, and, in the end, come to the conclusion that we have been unwise in rejecting this proposition.

That is the simple question which is submitted to Congress today. It is not a question whether we ought to have paid this amount or not, or whether we ought to have gone into that arbitration or not, nor whether all those claims are honest. There may be dishonest claims involved, in which there may be perjury. Let us turn over to the British Government the duty of purging them; the honest claims will, beyond doubt, swallow the whole of this appropriation. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] has read from the case presented by us to the arbitrators. We had the right to have that tribunal pass on the facts. If our agent was so sure we were strong on the proof taken why did he not ask judgment on the facts and relieve us of further expense and annoyance on those claims? Why force us to another and expensive trial if the case was made up for us? No, Mr. Chairman, the evidence read, selected with skill, dislocated from its connection, unexplained and contradicted here by the other testimony, may seem to make out a case; but when those claims are heard on all the testimony by a joint commission the result will be wholly different from that predicted, and we must "pay the piper."

These ships sailed under the British flag; they were unlawfully seized by us; the burden is on us to overthrow the presumption arising from British registry, sailing from British ports, supplied in British markets, and sailing under the British flag. I predict that this will never be accomplished. As to the criticism of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] upon the foreign policy of this Administration it does not need any answer. This is not our foreign policy. We are paying a debt which you gentlemen gave us as a part of our inheritance, and we are paying it, not as Democrats, but as Americans. You made this treaty; under it this liability was incurred. In this matter of foreign policy we have no apology to make.

Mr. DINGLEY. Why does the gentleman say that this is an inheritance from a Republican Administration, when he knows that it commenced under the first Cleveland Administration?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Undoubtedly, under Mr. Cleveland we followed the old rule of holding that sea as ours. We claimed that we had purchased it from Russia, and that it was our sea. That had been the ground and the policy under Mr. Seward and other Republican statesmen, and we followed it; because, however we may divide upon internal questions as Democrats and as Republicans, when it comes to international matters, when we have to go out upon the sea and to deal with foreign nations, we ought all to be Americans. Therefore when we came under the Administration of Mr. Cleveland we followed what had always been the policy.

But Canada had claimed certain rights in the East. You gentlemen of New England had fixed upon the policy of America, that we should deny those claims by adherence to the 3-mile limit. Canada said, "If that is good law for the East it is good law for the West; if it is good law for the fish that are to be caught out of Canadian waters in the East, it is good law for seals to be caught out of the Bering sea in the West." They fitted out their vessels in order to take those seals under our law, fixed by New England as the policy of America for the eastern fisheries.

Mr. Bayard opened a negotiation for a modus vivendi under which the seals might be saved. It was, however, upon the distinct understanding that the Bering Sea was not a mare clausum. Mr. Bayard was too good an international lawyer, he understood the law too well, to make that claim. It was upon other grounds. It was an admission, by the very act of asking for this modus, that we had not this right. Mr. Bayard's policy was reversed. The State Department said: "It is our mare clausum; we bought it from Russia. We will hold it as such, and we will arbitrate upon that ground." We did arbitrate under the lead of Mr. Foster—the nominal lead of Mr. Blaine, the real lead, I suppose, of Mr. Foster. We arbitrated upon that ground and lost. We are now met with the consequences of that arbitration. Is it not better for us to pay up like men?

I will not criticize our costs in that unfortunate experiment, nor point out what might justify censure. The arbitrators selected—Justice Harlan and Senator MORGAN—were able and learned jurists; our counsel were among the most eminent and accomplished lawyers in America; and so far as arbitrators and counsel are concerned I have no word save of respect and esteem, as to all engaged, respectful silence. Let us complete that incident in our diplomatic history and put it behind us. On the uppermost shelves, where they can not hereafter be reached, let us place the many printed volumes, the vast mass of useless matter submitted as "our case," and open the way for other labor.

Now, one other matter—this matter of consequential damages. Let us be just to ourselves. Let us not higggle with these matters. Mr. Blaine and Sir Julian Pauncefote laid down this rule when we thought we were going to win. Mr. Blaine thought we were going to win; he laid down the rule in article 5 of the modus vivendi, that this should be the rule of damages. I have had that article read in the course of my previous remarks. I merely repeat that this is the rule laid down in article 5 of the convention agreed upon on the 18th of April, 1892, and approved by the United States, through its President (Mr. Harrison) and its Secretary of State (Mr. Blaine).

Mr. HITT. But subsequently withdrawn.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Withdrawn, as I have explained. But is America going to stand at the bar of the world and say, "It was a good rule when we thought we would win; but now we have lost, and because we technically made that withdrawal we now insist that it ought never to have been admitted?"

Mr. HITT. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. HITT. Both parties, knowing that it was an exception to international law, made that risky engagement. Both, fearing the decision, withdrew. Both knew it was a departure from international law.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I am not in possession of the motives, but I do not believe that the Government of the United States and the Government of Great Britain were two petty gamblers, sitting down at a little game of "craps," trying to see which might get the better of the other upon the mere turn of loaded dice. I do not believe that, and I will not legislate upon that hypothesis. I legislate upon the hypothesis that these two contracting parties, one representing the Government of the United States and the other Great Britain, thought it was a fair criterion, and I affirm their judgment was correct.

Here were men putting their little venture into a vessel costing from six to seven thousand dollars, going out upon the high seas with the right to catch those seals, where the nominal capital was comparatively nothing, but where the real capital was their sweat, their risk, their danger, their skill, their time. The little vessel cost but from $3,000 to $7,000; but the men risked the storms of the ocean; they risked their lives. The true capital was the heart and brain and chance that they put into their work. And when they were seized and put in Alaskan prisons without right and without justice, what better criterion of damage than that which they might have caught and which everybody else did catch during that year? Why did not Mr. Blaine and Sir Julian Pauncefote come to an honest and just measure of damage when they agreed upon that? In my judgment there is no arbitrator who will not decide that this is in this case the fair measure of damages.

These are not remote damages. There is a vast difference—I speak to lawyers—between remote damages and consequential damages. There are innumerable cases where consequential damages are given where they are the immediate and not the remote consequences of the act. I do believe that the Halifax award will be followed when these are proven by honest testimony, and that these questions will be decided in favor of those men who risked their lives upon those seas. Mr. Blaine and Mr. Harrison and Sir Julian Pauncefote will be good authority to justify such decision.

My judgment, after going over this case, is that $300,000 is all that may be called consequential damages. Two hundred and forty-two thousand dollars will be given beyond the possibility of a doubt. These claims have been running an average of seven years, for which we must pay interest to the claimants. Allowing 6 per cent interest, it makes $345,000; at 4 per cent interest it makes $300,000.

Now we are in a dispute over a sum of $300,000, and want to settle it. What is the best compromise that such a nation as ours can ask under those circumstances? Evidently the best way is to divide it in two, take one-half. Adding the one-half of this sum to what it was admitted we were obligated for, it will make a sum larger than the $425,000. So that we save money by that process. Admitting we could get everything we claim, admitting that the gentleman from Illinois is right, what then? We have this sum of $242,000, seven years' interest at 4 per cent and two years' interest during the arbitration, and $150,000 added for the expenses of arbitration, and by that we are out of pocket $50,000 more than if we pay the lump sum of $425,000 suggested. So in any aspect of the case, as far as money is concerned, we have made by this settlement. I append a little calculation under several hypotheses.

Mr. Chairman, a scene occurred in Parliament the other night when the under secretary of state was asked a question about this arbitration. He said that the President of the United States had asked Congress to appropriate the sum necessary to pay it; that the Secretary of State had sent a message to Congress; and when asked if the award would be paid, the under secretary said he had no doubt in the world that the Congress of the United States would appropriate a sum sufficient to pay a debt acknowledged to be due by its own Administration, its President and Secretary of State.

I sincerely trust when Parliament meets again that that statement will not have to be taken back. I sincerely hope that it will never be said of us, as it is of men who are sometimes posted up at clubs, that "they are delinquents," and that we will not stand before the world as men and as a nation who do not keep faith; as a nation that does not follow the dictates of fair dealing when we refer our controversies to arbitration and lose. I do not ask this appropriation because a Democratic President approved the agreement and asks it—though this would be a powerful motive—but it is not that he is my President. Though he is my President, he is the President of the United States.

So far as foreign matters are concerned, he is the nation's President. I am free to confess, and I speak now as a Democrat and a partisan, that when I was elected to this Congress, and the President was elected, as a Democrat, I held it to be a joint commission with which we were both intrusted on behalf of the people. I held it as though my name had been written in a joint commission, and that we were joined to take charge—I mean the Senate and House and the Executive—of the affairs of the nation, and believed it to be my duty, in conjunction with all other Democrats, to do the very best I could for the glory, for the advancement, and for the honor of our common country. And so far as I am concerned, Mr. Chairman, without criticism and without censure as to others, whenever I could with a good conscience I have upheld the arm of the Chief Magistrate of the nation, and when I could not agree with his views I have only voted my own conscience, not condemning his view with abuse, not weakening him in the minds of the people, or attempting to make his policy unpopular in the minds of those who are to aid in the work.

For four years he is President. He and we are charged with the august responsibility of Government; upon the President rests the burden of affirmative action; to us is committed the duty of legislation. This requires wisdom, confidence, mutual aid, mutual concessions. We can not govern to suit every one of us. We must find some common ground on which to stand—some line of policy to be pursued; and he who will not yield something, who will not follow, can only excite and destroy. I thank God that I am not responsible for any divisions. A loyal Democrat, true to my convictions, yet anxious to accord with the official head, the chosen leader of my party, I to-day and always, when possible, sustain him and his Administration.

And looking back now on a Congressional career about to close, I think I can say truthfully that I have never criticised a public officer against me in politics when I could commend him. I have never belittled an Administration I could uphold; and as to foreign affairs so far as possible I have tried to remember, as I do to-day, that on the floor of the House of Representatives, representing the entire imperial Republic of America, I say as to all other countries I am not a Democrat, but an American and a patriot; and that is the view I hope to-day this House will take of the question now before us. #### MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having taken the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8272) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 8479) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CALL, Mr. COCKRELL, and Mr. TELLER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4507) for the relief of Witherby & Gaffney.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee again resumed its session, Mr. TRACEY in the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, which has been read.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 41, noes 53.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I raise the point of no quorum simply to get tellers.

The CHAIRMAN appointed Mr. BRECKINRIDGE and Mr. CANNON of Illinois as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 93, noes 85.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. What is the total?

The CHAIRMAN. One hundred and seventy-seven.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. That is not a quorum. It would save a call of the roll, perhaps, if we can knock this out here.

The CHAIRMAN. The tellers will resume the count. The count having been completed, the tellers reported—ayes 94, noes 86.

So the amendment was adopted.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. By the indulgence of the gentleman from Kentucky I want to state that I will ask, if I can get one-fifth of the members to join me, a yea-and-nay vote in the House on this amendment.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. So far as I am concerned I will gladly vote to give the gentleman the yeas and nays, and hope the House will agree to it. This is too important a matter to refuse.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment, offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM].

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 43, line 12, insert:

"That the Speaker of the House of Representatives is hereby directed to certify, and the Sergeant-at-Arms to pay to Representatives the amounts respectively deducted and withheld from the monthly payments of salary on account of absence."

Mr. BYNUM. I withdraw that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL].

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 53, after line 4, insert:

"To pay Bate Martin $77.80, the amount allowed by the Third Auditor of the Treasury Department under the act of July 4, 1864."

Mr. SAYERS. While I regard the point of order as good on this amendment, and I do not wish its adoption to be considered as a precedent, yet in view of the circumstances of the case I will withdraw the point of order. I have a fondness for the Irish, and inasmuch as we have an Irishman as chairman, and as the mover and the beneficiary of the amendment are Irishmen, I withdraw the point of order, but for no other reason. [Laughter.]

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. RUSSELL].

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 53, after line 17, insert the following:

"For payment on account of transportation of the Army for 1881 and prior years the following numbered Treasury settlements, heretofore allowed and certified by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury under appropriations the balances of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund, and enumerated and described in Executive Documents Nos. 55 and 153, Forty-eighth Congress, first and second sessions, and House Miscellaneous Document No. 33, Fifty-third Congress, third session, viz: Nos. 174, 161, 176, 331, 162, 210, 333, 332, 543, 544, 701, 711, 805, 944, 1206, 1536, 1538, 1715, 930, amounting to the sum of $37,313.44."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I reserve the point of order against that amendment.

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut. That is an amendment I introduced, and the point of order is reserved. I now ask permission to withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will report the next pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 53, between lines 21 and 22, insert:

"For barracks and quarters, $39,590.62."

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I will withdraw that amendment.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I wish to offer an amendment to come in at the end of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

"That the proceeds of sales of the property of the United States, made by the International Boundary Commission, provided for by the convention of July 29, 1882, and the convention of February 18, 1890, between the United States and Mexico, shall revert to the appropriations for the execution of the engagements of said conventions, and be applied to the purposes for which said appropriations were made, and shall not be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts, as provided for by sections 3617 and 3618 of the Revised Statutes."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I desire to print in the RECORD certain letters from the Treasury Department and from the State Department, showing the necessity for this amendment. It involves no new appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection, the letters will be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The letters are as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF COMPTROLLER OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, D. C., January 31, 1894.

SIR: I have to inform you that I have directed the Auditor for the State and other Departments to state and settle an account with you under the fund "proceeds of sales of United States property," and to charge you with the sum of $2,521.05, being the amount received by you from the sale of United States property, and credited by you to the Government in your account for disbursements made under the appropriation "International boundary survey, United States and Mexico," from February 1 to November 30, 1893.

You were informed by the First Comptroller of the Treasury on August 28, 1894, that the proper disposition to be made of this item would be a subject for consideration in the next adjustment of your accounts. I have carefully read your communication of September 17, 1894, and examined the law bearing upon this subject. The parts of the sections of the Revised Statutes referred to and quoted by you are as follows:

3618. "All proceeds of sales of old material, condemned stores, supplies, or other public property of any kind, except the proceeds of * * * sales of materials, stores, or supplies to any exploring or surveying expedition authorized by law, shall be deposited and covered into the Treasury * * *."

3692. "All moneys received from * * * sales of materials, stores, or supplies to any exploring or surveying expedition authorized by law, shall respectively revert to that appropriation out of which they were originally expended, and shall be applied to the purposes for which they were appropriated by law."

The meaning of these sections is to my mind quite clear, and while they direct that all moneys received from sales of United States property sold to any exploring or surveying expedition authorized by law shall revert to that appropriation out of which they were originally expended, they can not be construed to mean that all moneys received from sales of United States property sold by any exploring or surveying expedition shall pursue the same course. It therefore follows that any moneys received by you from the sales of United States property sold to other than exploring or surveying expeditions authorized by law must be deposited by you into the Treasury, in order that they may be disposed of in pursuance of section 3618, Revised Statutes.

In conclusion I will state that any evidence in your possession tending to show that the moneys received by you from the sales of United States property credited in your accounts were sold by you to any exploring or surveying expedition authorized by law should be transmitted to the Auditor for the State and other Departments, in order that you may be credited on account of the sales of United States property and charged on account of the appropriation "International boundary survey, United States and Mexico."

Respectfully, yours,

R. B. BOWLER, Comptroller.

Lieut. Col. J. W. BARLOW, U. S. A.,
Special Disbursing Officer, care of the Department of State,
Washington, D. C.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF COMPTROLLER OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, D. C., February 15, 1895.

SIR: Referring to the accounts of Lieutenant-Colonel Barlow, about which I had some conversation with you this morning, I inclose a copy of a letter recently written by me to him in regard to sales of property used by the Mexican Boundary Commission in the prosecution of its work. Under a misapprehension of the law he has used the money derived from such sales for the purposes of the survey, in lieu of covering the same into the Treasury, as required by the strict letter of sections 3617 and 3618 of the Revised Statutes.

It appears that unless the proceeds of such sales can be used a deficiency appropriation will be required, and that unless made at present serious delay will occur in the final settlement of Colonel Barlow's accounts. It seems proper, under the circumstances, that the proceeds of sales should be credited to the appropriation, but the accounting officers find themselves without authority of law to do so. I therefore have drawn a clause to be inserted in the deficiency appropriation act which will accomplish the purpose. I heartily recommend its adoption.

Respectfully, yours,

R. B. BOWLER, Comptroller.

Hon. J. E. WASHINGTON,
House of Representatives.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, February 20, 1895.

SIR: The inclosed copy of a letter addressed to me by Lieut. Col. J. W. Barlow, United States Army, the United States representative on the United States and Mexican International Boundary Commission, in relation to the disapproval by the Comptroller of his account for sales of property purchased under the appropriation for that survey, is sent to you for your information in connection with an amendment to the deficiency bill, which, as I informally learn, Mr. Bowler has requested you to advocate, authorizing the reversion of the proceeds of such sales to the original appropriation.

Seeing no reason to question the correctness of the Comptroller's decision in view of sections 3613, 3672, and 3692 of the Revised Statutes, yet regarding Colonel Barlow's course as in the interest of the public service and in the direction of the intent of the appropriation in question, I have the honor to request that you will support the proposed amendment, in order that, by relieving the Boundary Commission of the statutory obligation to turn into the Treasury the proceeds of past and future sales of property, the work of the Commission may be completed within the limits of the appropriation already made.

Colonel Barlow represents, as you will observe, that if the amounts realized as above are not to be available for the purposes of the Commission, an additional appropriation by this Congress will be essential in order to carry on the work.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

W. Q. GRESHAM.

[Inclosure.]

From Lieut. Col. J. W. Barlow, San Diego, February 11, 1895.

Hon. JOSEPH E. WASHINGTON,
House of Representatives.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
INTERNATIONAL BOUNDARY COMMISSION,
UNITED STATES AND MEXICO,
San Diego, Cal., February 11, 1895.

SIR: I have the honor to state that, in a communication just received from the honorable the Comptroller of the Treasury, I am informed that an item of $2,521.05, received from sales of property pertaining to the appropriation for the international boundary survey, must be covered into the Treasury.

This decision is directly the reverse of what I have conceived to be the meaning of the Revised Statutes on this subject, and if sustained and applied to the other sales of property pertaining to this survey it will result in compelling me to turn in a sum considerably greater than the balance now remaining from the present appropriation.

When all liabilities are paid this balance will be about $5,000, an amount which, if available, would carry on the map construction next fall until a further appropriation could be obtained.

In view of the Comptroller's decision it would now appear to be expedient, in fact imperative, that an appropriation be obtained before the close of the present session of Congress to provide for the necessary expenditures which must occur before the next Congress can act in the premises. I would therefore respectfully and urgently request that an amendment be added to one of the appropriation bills to provide for the completion of the maps of the international boundary survey between the United States and Mexico. This appropriation is specially urgent, as an agreement has been made with the Mexican commissioners to have the Joint Commission assemble in Washington in October next to carry forward the work of the Commission.

It is suggested that the sum of $10,000 be asked for, a part of which may perhaps be available for publication of the report.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. W. BARLOW,

Lieutenant-Colonel of Engineers, Commissioner.

Hon. W. Q. GRESHAM, Secretary of State.

The amendment offered by Mr. BRECKINRIDGE was agreed to. And then, on motion of Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TARSNEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8892) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for prior years, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments, and with the recommendation that as amended the bill do pass.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I ask for the previous question on the amendments and the bill to its passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any of the amendments?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I ask for a separate vote on the amendment giving a month's compensation to the officers of the House and Senate and the amendments thereto, and I ask a separate vote upon the amendment to appropriate $425,000 to carry out the Bering Sea arbitration.

The SPEAKER. Is any other separate vote demanded? If not, the question will be upon agreeing to the amendments in gross, with the exceptions indicated.

The amendments, with the exceptions indicated, were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment on which a separate vote is demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, after line 9, insert the following:

"Bering Sea damages: For the payment to the Government of Great Britain, under the agreement reached by exchange of notes of August 21, 1894, in full satisfaction of all demands for damages against the United States growing out of the controversy between the two Governments as to the fur seals in the Bering Sea under the award and findings of the tribunal of arbitration at Paris, $425,000."

The SPEAKER. The question is upon agreeing to this amendment.

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Division.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER appointed as tellers Mr. BRECKINRIDGE and Mr. CANNON of Illinois.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 112, nays 143, answered "present" 5, not voting 89; as follows:

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER]. If he were present he would vote "yea;" I should vote "nay."

The following pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts with Mr. COGSWELL.

Mr. MCRAE with Mr. GEAR.

Mr. HUTCHESON with Mr. DRAPER.

Mr. WOODARD with Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee.

For this day:

Mr. COVERT with Mr. HOUK.

Mr. ENLOE with Mr. HEINER of Pennsylvania.

Mr. RAYNER with Mr. SWEET.

Mr. McDANNOLD with Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana.

Mr. BURNES with Mr. WHEELER of Illinois.

Mr. CADMUS with Mr. VAN VOORHIS of Ohio.

Mr. RUSK with Mr. SHERMAN.

Mr. COOPER of Indiana with Mr. SMITH of Illinois.

Mr. HARTER with Mr. SCRANTON.

Mr. SICKLES with Mr. BABCOCK.

On this question:

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi with Mr. GROSVENOR.

Mr. ALDERSON with Mr. DINGLEY.

On this vote:

Mr. BERRY with Mr. BINGHAM.

Mr. McMILLIN with Mr. REED.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

[Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay to the officers and employees of the Senate and House borne on the annual and session rolls on the 1st day of February, 1895, including the Capitol Police and Official Reporters of the Senate and House, and including the clerks to members of the House of Representatives now in Congress, to be certified to by the members as now prescribed by law, for extra services during the Fifty-third Congress, a sum equal to one month's pay, at the compensation then paid them, the same to be immediately available.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Is that amendment divisible?

The SPEAKER. It is not, having been reported as one amendment.

Mr. SAYERS. I demand the yeas and nays on that.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, and the gentleman from New York, Mr. TRACEY.

Mr. HERMANN. I ask that the amendment be again read; there is so much confusion we could not hear it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again report the amendment. The amendment was again read.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 143, nays 111, answered "present" 1, not voting 94; as follows:

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER. I would like to have my name called.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let us have a recapitulation of the vote.

The SPEAKER. The vote will be recapitulated.

Mr. TARSNEY. I ask for order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is endeavoring to secure order.

Mr. TARSNEY. I rise to a point of order. I desire to inquire if it is in order to proceed with all the employees and brevet employees of this House surrounding the Clerk's desk.

The vote was recapitulated.

Mr. COX. I desire to change my vote from nay to yea, for the purpose of moving a reconsideration of that vote. [Cries of "Oh!"]

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, while I am paired with the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. SMITH, the understanding was that I should vote if I desired to do so.

Mr. BROSIUS. Mr. Speaker, how am I recorded?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recorded in the affirmative.

Mr. BROSIUS. I did not vote. I am paired with the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER]. If he were here, he would vote "yea," I would vote "nay."

Mr. BOWERS of California. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. NORTHWAY, is confined to his room, sick, and I ask that he be excused.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have my colleague, Mr. HOLMAN, excused. He is detained from the House on account of sickness. If he were present he would vote "nay."

Mr. MEYER. My colleague, Mr. OGDEN, is confined to his room, on account of sickness, and I ask that he be excused.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. WEADOCK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to withdraw my vote. I was paired with my colleague, Mr. GORMAN. If he were present, he would vote "yea;" I should vote "nay."

The following additional pairs were announced:

For the rest of the day:

Mr. GRAHAM with Mr. AITKEN.

Mr. CULBERTSON with Mr. DINGLEY.

Mr. BERRY with Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa.

Mr. ALDERSON with Mr. SCRANTON.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland with Mr. WHITE.

Mr. HOLMAN with Mr. NORTHWAY.

On this question:

Mr. BROSIUS with Mr. PICKLER.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. COX. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAYES. I move to lay that motion on the table, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The question will be taken on the motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. COX. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. HAYES, and the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. COX.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 145, nays 91, not voting 113; as follows:

The SPEAKER. Upon this question the yeas are 145 and the nays are 91. The yeas have it, and the motion to reconsider is laid on the table. The question now is upon the engrossment and third reading of the amended bill.

The question being taken, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill with the instructions which I send to the desk.

The motion of Mr. MADDOX was read, as follows:

Resolved, That House bill 8892 be recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to report the same back forthwith with all provisions for one month's extra pay for members' clerks stricken from the bill.

Mr. MADDOX. Upon that I demand the previous question.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that question has just been voted upon by the House.

The SPEAKER. Not singly. There was something else connected with it.

Mr. SPRINGER. This motion relates only to the clerks of members.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. But it is practically the same question that has just been voted upon.

The SPEAKER. Not at all. This motion applies to one class of clerks, while the amendment just voted upon by the House related both to those clerks and to another class of employees.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I find on page 313 of the Manual this:

It is not in order to move to recommit a bill with instructions to insert what the House has just voted to strike out.

Now, the converse of that ought to be true, and where the House has just refused to strike out an amendment made in Committee of the Whole and has voted to sustain it, in my judgment it would clearly be out of order to move to recommit the bill with instructions to strike that provision out.

The SPEAKER. Would the gentleman regard the amendment which has just been voted upon as identical with this? As the Chair understands it, the amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole was to pay the clerks and other employees of the House one month's extra pay, and also to pay the clerks of members one month's pay. This motion, as the Chair understands it, is to recommit the bill with instructions to strike out so much of the amendment as provides for a month's extra pay to clerks of members alone, without reference to the House employees.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Well, the greater includes the less. If such a motion as that made by the gentleman from Georgia is in order, we can never dispose of a bill.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules there can be but one motion to recommit made. The gentleman from Georgia moves to recommit the bill with instructions, and on that he demands the previous question.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The previous question is demanded. The question is upon ordering the previous question.

The question being taken on ordering the previous question, the Speaker declared that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. MADDOX. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—yeas 75, yeas 125; so the previous question was refused.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Georgia to recommit by inserting the portion of the amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole that was omitted by him.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. TRACEY. I rise to a point of order. I submit that this proposition would practically require the House to vote again upon the question we have just voted on.

The SPEAKER. But if the motion to recommit is in order it is undoubtedly amendable under the rules.

Mr. McMILLIN. The Chair, then, holds that to amend it would not be putting it in a condition so that it could not be voted on.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not reached that point. [Laughter.] The Clerk will report the proposed amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. I desire to modify my amendment by omitting the reading clerk now reading at the desk. My amendment is to strike out all of the amendment in regard to extra month's pay except that relating to the reading clerk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will please reduce his amendment to writing.

After a pause the amendment of Mr. GROSVENOR was read, as follows:

Amend the instructions as proposed by adding the following: "Strike out all persons, clerks, and employees to be paid extra pay, except the Capitol police."

[Laughter.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. On that I demand the previous question. The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to; there being—yeas 127, yeas 39.

The SPEAKER. The question is now upon the motion to recommit as amended.

The SPEAKER proceeded to put the question.

Mr. MADDOX (during the vote). Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. MADDOX. To demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The House is dividing.

Mr. McMILLIN. But the gentleman has the right at any time to demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The demand for the yeas and nays can not interrupt a division.

Mr. McMILLIN. I submit, with deference to the Chair, that the yeas and nays can be demanded at any time.

The SPEAKER. Not during a division.

The question being taken, there were—yeas 49, yeas 125.

Mr. MADDOX. I now demand the yeas and nays.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, there were—yeas 32.

The SPEAKER. Not a sufficient number, in the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. MADDOX. I ask for a count of the other side.

The question being taken, there were 167 in the negative.

Mr. WELLS. I call for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays. Tellers were not ordered, only 18 voting in favor thereof.

Mr. WELLS. I move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER. But the Chair must announce the result of the vote. Tellers are refused; the yeas and nays are refused; and the motion to recommit is rejected. The question is now, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. WELLS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I hope the gentleman will not filibuster. The motion of Mr. WELLS was rejected.

Mr. WELLS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry: Is a motion to recommit without instructions in order?

The SPEAKER. It is not. Only one motion to recommit can be made. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The question being taken, there were—yeas 181, yeas 24.

Mr. BLAND. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DAILY HOUR OF MEETING.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I ask unanimous consent that the House meet at 11 o'clock every day for the rest of this session.

Mr. SAYERS. I object.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. SAYERS. Yes, sir; I object.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. We desire to give an opportunity to the Committee on Labor to bring their business before the House to-morrow.

Mr. SAYERS. I withdraw the objection if the gentleman will limit his motion to to-morrow.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Very well, I ask unanimous consent that to-morrow the House meet at 11 o'clock.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I ask unanimous consent that the special order for eulogies at 2 o'clock to-morrow be postponed until 3 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that this will be agreeable to the gentlemen from Illinois. In the absence of objection, the special order will be postponed as requested.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. PEARSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill and joint resolutions of the following titles: when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 8237) for relief of William W. Buckley, late first lieutenant One hundred and ninety-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteers;

Joint resolution (S. R. 117) granting permission for the erection of a bronze statue in Washington, D. C., in honor of the late Prof. Samuel D. Gross, M. D., LL. D., D. C. L.;

Joint resolution (S. R. 138) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to deliver unserviceable or condemned cannon to the mayor of Burlington, Vt., to be used in decorating Battery Park; and Joint resolution (S. R. 109) to fill vacancies in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a conference report on the Post-Office appropriation bill, which is a partial agreement.

Mr. LOUD. I hope the gentleman will not present that this evening. It is not an agreement in full, and it is now nearly half past 5 o'clock.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. I only want the report adopted, and then the other may go over until to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the statement of the House conferees.

The Clerk read as follows:

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8272) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, submit the following written statement in explanation of the action taken by the conference:

The House agreed to the following amendments of the Senate: (1) To increase appropriations for printing slips, etc., from $12,000 to $15,000, and (2) to increase appropriation for railway-car service from $3,105,000 to $3,205,000. These increases are in accordance with the estimates. The House also agrees to an amendment striking out "Springfield" and inserting "Boston" in the clause for necessary facilities on trunk lines. This is an immaterial amendment.

The committee of conference report a disagreement in regard to the amendment of the Senate relating to the residence of postal clerks on the route to which they are assigned.

POST-OFFICE BILL, 1896.

Amount as passed House.....	$80,442,997.86
Increase made by Senate.....	103,000.00

Amount as passed Senate.....	89,545,997.86
Amount as agreed to by conference.....	89,545,997.86
Amount of estimates.....	91,059,283.64
Amount of act for 1895.....	87,236,599.55

JOHN S. HENDERSON.
EDW. J. DUNPHY.
E. F. LOUD.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the partial report.

The report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now report the question that is at issue between the two Houses.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend on page 4, line 20, after the words "Postmaster-General," by inserting:

Provided, That all clerks hereafter appointed to the Railway Mail Service, and to perform duty in railway post-offices, shall reside at some point along the route to which they are assigned; but railway clerks heretofore appointed, and now performing such duty, shall not be required to change their residence.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. The Senate ask a conference on this amendment, and my motion will be to agree to that conference. The gentleman from California, I understand, wishes to move that the House recede and agree to the amendment. I am willing to let that lie over until to-morrow morning to satisfy his convenience.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves to further insist on the disagreement to this amendment.

Mr. LOUD. I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment and agree to the same. And pending that, I move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest that if the House does not remain in session until a later hour it will be difficult to transact the business.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows: To Mr. HOLMAN, for this day, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. NORTHWAY, definitely, on account of sickness.

DUPLICATE BILL FROM THE SENATE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Senate be requested to furnish to the House a duplicate of the bill (S. 2243) in aid of the exposition to be held under the auspices of the Baltimore Centennial Exposition, and for other purposes, the same having been lost or mislaid.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from California will withhold his motion to adjourn until I can call up the Friday night bills. It will not take over eighteen or twenty minutes to dispose of them.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. I understood the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] to request that this conference report be laid aside until to-morrow morning. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. That will of course take time from a committee which expects to present business to-morrow. The gentleman asks consent, however, to let this conference report go over until to-morrow morning.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. And to make it a special order for 12 o'clock.

Mr. MAGUIRE. I object to that.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. Then I have no objection to going on with it and concluding it to-night. I have made the motion that we agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California has made a motion which must be first disposed of.

Mr. LOUD. I move that the House now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

And accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

By Mr. MAHON, from the Committee on War Claims: A bill (H. R. 2325) for the relief of the estate of James S. Clark, deceased. (Report No. 1926.)

By Mr. TURPIN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs: A bill (S. 2364) for the relief of Silas P. Keller. (Report No. 1927.)

By Mr. LACEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: A bill (H. R. 6356) granting a pension to George W. Johnson. (Report No. 1928.)

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced, and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. HAINER of Nebraska: A bill (H. R. 8949) to establish a national university—to the Committee on Education.

By Mr. TUCKER (by request): A resolution to establish a national park at Appomattox, Va., and to appoint commissioners to locate same—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ALDRICH: Petition of Frances E. Willard and 79 ethers, of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, for the passage of House bill of January 19, 1895, for a permanent treaty of arbitration between the United States and Great Britain—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. BRODERICK: Memorial of Francis G. Peabody and 50 others, of Howard University, and of Frederic E. Dewhurst and 75 others, in favor of the passage of the antilottery bill now pending in the House—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, resolution of Division No. 161, Order of Railway Conductors of Kansas, in favor of the Wright and Hermann labor arbitration bill—to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. COX: Petition of J. W. Howard and other citizens of Maury County, Tenn., in regard to bounty on sugar—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. DALZELL: Resolution of American citizens of Fayette City, Pa., in favor of an amendment to the Constitution that neither Congress nor any State shall pass any law respecting an establishment of religion—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GROUT: Memorial of the Houston Board of Trade and the Fairbanks Company of New York, in behalf of the sugar producers of 1894 and in favor of giving them the bounty for that year—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, memorial of J. B. Scully and others, of Frontier Cavalry, for unpaid portion of bounty—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HAYES: Petition of J. Ellen Foster and others, of the National Council of Women, asking for the passage of House resolution of January 19, 1895, for the ratification of a permanent treaty of arbitration between the United States and Great Britain—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. HERMANN: Petition of citizens of Woodburn and Astoria, Oreg., for a constitutional amendment prohibiting the granting of the right of franchise to persons not citizens of the United States—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, resolution of the Chamber of Commerce of Portland, Oreg., favoring the Lodge bill for the reorganization of the diplomatic service—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. HICKS: Petition of 40 citizens of Casselman, Pa., prohibiting any State from granting the right of franchise to any person not a citizen of the United States—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of 44 citizens of Pennsylvania who served in the various construction corps and on military railroads attached to the United States Army from 1861 to 1865, asking that a law be enacted to allow them the benefits of a pension, as provided in the act of June, 1890—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota: Resolution of St. Paul (Minn.) Order of Railway Conductors, Division No. 40, favoring House bill 8556, providing for adjustment of differences between railroads and their employees—to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. MILLIKEN: Petition of B. L. Whitman and others, for a law to suppress lotteries—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. PENCE: Resolution of the American Federation of Labor, in favor of the free and unlimited coinage of both silver and gold at the ratio of 16 to 1—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Also, protest against exempting mining claims from annual work—to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Also, resolutions adopted at a meeting of 125 citizens of Denver, Colo., against granting the right of franchise to persons not citizens of the United States—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, resolutions of 125 citizens of Denver, Colo., against appropriating public money and in favor of a law prohibiting an establishment of religion—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. PICKLER: Petition of Burt Fuller and 835 others, of Sisseton, S. Dak., praying for the passage of the Pickler bill, providing for a reduction of price of Government lands to $1.25 per acre—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. PIGOTT: Petition of the Wine, Liquor, and Beer Dealers' Association of Ansonia, Conn., against an increase in the tax on beer—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. REYBURN: Petition of B. F. Nickersham and others, of Philadelphia, Pa., for the passage of House resolution of January 19, 1895, for the ratification of a permanent treaty of arbitration between the United States and Great Britain—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. RYAN: Petition of Journeymen Bookbinders' Union, No. 4, and Columbia Union, No. 101, journeymen printers, per W. B. Hyde and B. L. Smith, chairmen of committees, in favor of the passage of House resolution 244, to revise the wages of certain Government Printing Office employees—to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. WANGER: Preamble and resolution of meeting of citizens of Pottstown, Pa., for the passage of House bill 5246—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, February 26, 1895.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

THE JOURNAL AND THE RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Journal of yesterday's proceedings will be read by the Secretary.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. MANDERSON. I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings.

Mr. HALE (at 11 o'clock and 10 minutes a. m.). I ask that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am constrained to object to that request.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. An objection is interposed.

The reading of the Journal was resumed and concluded.

Mr. HALE. Before the Journal is approved, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the difference between the Journal and the RECORD. The Journal is completed, as it should be, down to the moment of adjournment, but I find on examining the RECORD that a considerable portion of the report of last evening is not included in the RECORD for the day. As every Senator knows, this, particularly in the last days of the session, is very troublesome, because we only gain the knowledge of what is done in this and in the other branch by reading the RECORD. It is the first thing that I do in the morning, so as to be apprised of what is going on.

I call the attention of the Committee on Printing to this matter. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] is, I think, the only member present. I am told that so faithful was the work of our reporters that at half past 1 the last page of the report of the proceedings was copied and completed and sent to the Printing Office.

Mr. HAWLEY. At 1.

Mr. HALE. It may have been 1 o'clock. I was told at half past 1. Either is enough to show that we might have had the RECORD. But the Printing Office, whose main business it is to report the proceedings of Congress, shut off its work, put out its lights, and declined to complete the RECORD and furnish it to us for this morning.

Mr. President, unless some note of warning and some monition is served upon the Printing Office (I hope the Committee on Printing will attend to it) we shall be in this situation all the time. We must have night sessions; we shall have to get a knowledge of the proceedings of the Senate from the RECORD the next morning, covering the day before; and if every night this office, which is our servant, the servant of Congress, shuts off work, extinguishes lights at 2 o'clock, or at any hour when copy is coming in, we shall be in the same situation as we are now.

I am aware that the fault, if there is fault, should not be attributed to our reporters, who are very constant in their work. There will be cases—I have known cases—where Congress sits all night and into the early hours of morning, when the proceedings can not be got into the RECORD; but the adjournment last night was inside of 11 o'clock, and there was no reason why we should not have had every word from the Printing Office.

Mr. MANDERSON. I simply desire to say that no one questions the capacity and the interest, day and night, of the reporting force of the Senate; and it is seldom that there is occasion to question the industry and faithfulness of those who are responsible for the conduct of the Public Printing Office. It is very exceptional that this has occurred. Usually when we sit until 12 or 1 o'clock we find in the RECORD the next morning the full account of our proceedings, or if there is delay for an hour or two, it is laid on our desks during the morning.

I have no question but that there is some good excuse for this omission. It is, as the Senator from Maine suggests, an omission that is to be regretted, because it causes embarrassment. Those of us who desired to read what was done in the later hours of last night's session found ourselves unable to get that information this morning.

Mr. HALE. A Senator tells me he was informed by the Printing Office that they would receive nothing for the RECORD after 12 o'clock.

Mr. MANDERSON. That of course should not be, and will be remedied.

Mr. HALE. The question is whether they are the masters or whether we are the masters.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Journal will be approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, requested the Senate to furnish the House with a duplicate copy of the bill (S. 2243) in aid of the exposition to be held under the auspices of the Baltimore Centennial Association, and for other purposes, the original having been lost or mislaid.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. 444) making the surveyor of the District of Columbia a salaried officer, and to provide for more efficient service in the surveyor's office.

A bill (H. R. 962) for the relief of Captain Ceran Saint Vrain's company of New Mexico Mounted Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. 1314) for the relief of Mathew S. Priest; and

A bill (H. R. 4507) for the relief of Witherby & Gaffney.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War transmitting a letter from the Adjutant-General inclosing a draft of a joint resolution providing for the printing, under an act of Congress approved January 12, 1895, of publications necessary for the instruction and discipline of the Army; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Printing and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, in response to a resolution of the 23d instant, transmitting correspondence and reports on file in that Department relative to the remission of time penalties on the Yorktown, Baltimore, Philadelphia, and Newark; which, on motion of Mr. HUNTON, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

BALTIMORE CENTENNIAL EXPOSITION.

The Vice-President laid before the Senate the request of the House of Representatives that the Senate furnish the House a duplicate copy of the bill (S. 2243) in aid of the exposition to be held under the auspices of the Baltimore Centennial Association, and for other purposes; and by unanimous consent the request was ordered to be complied with, and the duplicate furnished to the House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8518) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes.

Mr. VEST. Let us have half an hour for reports of committees.

Mr. MILLS. Let morning business be transacted.

Mr. PALMER. Will the Senator yield, that I may submit some reports?

Mr. COCKRELL. I am perfectly willing that fifteen or twenty minutes shall be given for the submission of amendments and reports, and I will yield as soon as the bill is taken up.

Mr. HOAR. I do not hear the Senator.

Mr. COCKRELL. I said I am perfectly willing, when the bill is taken up, to yield ten, fifteen, or twenty minutes for making reports of committees and submitting amendments.

Mr. SHERMAN. And petitions.

Mr. COCKRELL. Petitions and so on—morning business; but not to take up and pass bills. I hope to make such progress with the appropriation bill that we can yield to the Senate to-night to consider unobjectioned bills, according to the general agreement.

Mr. CAFFERY. I rise to morning business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being interposed to the request of the Senator from Missouri, morning business will be received.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, stating that he had forwarded to the House of Representatives a petition of the officers and enlisted men of the U. S. S. Yantic, praying for an amendment to the act of February 14, 1885, authorizing a retired list for privates and noncommissioned officers of the United States Army who have served for a period of thirty years or upward, so as to include enlisted men of the Navy; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. CAFFERY. I present a telegram, evidently intended to be a petition, signed by the leading business men of New Orleans, asking that the sugar producers of the country be granted a portion of the bounty on the crops of 1894. I move that the petition lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAREY presented a joint resolution of the legislature of Wyoming; which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint resolution No. 7.

Be it resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring therein), That, believing that the proposed additional issue of bonds on the part of the National Government is a movement in the East on the part of New York bankers to force the country to a gold basis beyond the possibility of a change and to drive the National Government from its constitutional supervision of the currency of the country, and believing that this would entail untold misery on the common people of the land, we most respectfully ask that the Representatives in the National Congress from the State of Wyoming protest against the issuance of gold bonds or any bonds which would fasten a debt upon the people for generations to come.

We further ask that the Representatives of this State use all honorable means to prevent legislation as proposed by the President's message sent to Congress on Monday, January 21, 1895, and to defeat the Administration bill now before the Banking and Currency Committee of the House of Representatives in Washington.

Be it further resolved, That a copy of these resolutions, suitably indorsed and engrossed, be sent to Hon. J. M. CAREY and Hon. C. D. CLARK in the Senate of the United States, and Hon. H. A. COFFEE in the House of Representatives.

GEO. W. HOYT,
President of the Senate.
JAY L. TORREY,
Speaker of the House.

Approved, February 11, A. D. 1895.

WM. A. RICHARDS, Governor.

STATE OF WYOMING, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, State of Wyoming, ss:

I, Charles W. Burdick, secretary of state of the State of Wyoming, do hereby certify that the annexed copy of house joint resolution No. 7 is a true and correct copy of the original, which was duly passed by the third legislature of the State of Wyoming, signed by the governor, and is now on file in the office of the secretary of state.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Wyoming.

Done at Cheyenne, the capital, this 12th day of February, A. D. 1895.

[SEAL.] CHARLES W. BURDICK,
Secretary of State.

Mr. PERKINS. I present two joint resolutions of the legislature of California, the first in favor of the free and unlimited coinage of silver, and the second asking an immediate appropriation for the United States Debris Commission. My colleague and myself have received similar resolutions, and I ask that these presented by myself be printed in the RECORD and referred to the appropriate committees.

The following joint resolution was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Assembly joint resolution No. 13.

Passed the Assembly February 6, A. D. 1895.

Passed the Senate February 14, A. D. 1895.

Chief Clerk of the Assembly.

Secretary of the Senate.

This resolution was transmitted to the governor this 18th day of February, A. D. 1895.

E. L. COLMON,
Private Secretary to the Governor.

Chapter — Assembly joint resolution No. 13, relative to the free coinage of silver.

Whereas we recognize the fact that by the demonetization of silver, and by refusal to give it equal standing in the coinage system of the United States, the material interest of the nation is dangerously impaired; and whereas it is recognized to be a fact that the opposition to silver coinage emanates from speculative syndicates and moneyed classes who seek to embarrass the people of the nation for the advancement of their own selfish ends; and whereas we entertain the firm belief that the full measure of national prosperity will never be restored until the coinage of silver is resumed, in accordance with the true intent and spirit of the Constitution of the United States, and having unbounded faith in the power and ability of this nation to restore and maintain silver in its proper position alongside of gold; and whereas, we believe that the issue of United States bonds for the purpose of maintaining a single gold standard, or any standard that does not contemplate the free and unlimited coinage of silver is a practice fraught with the greatest danger to the stability of our institutions and the maintenance of national credit: Therefore be it

Resolved, That our Senators in Congress be instructed, and our Representatives be requested, to earnestly and urgently advocate the immediate enactment of such laws as may be necessary to provide for the immediate resumption of the free and unlimited coinage of silver in the ratio of 16 to 1; and be it further

Resolved, That our Senators be instructed, and our Representatives be requested, to actively advocate the enactment of such laws as may be necessary to prevent the issue of United States bonds for the sole purpose of maintaining a single gold standard of money; and be it further

Resolved, That the governor be requested to immediately transmit a copy of these resolutions to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

The following joint resolution was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Assembly joint resolution No. 20.

Passed the assembly, February 14, A. D. 1895.

Passed the senate, February 15, A. D. 1895.

Chief Clerk of the Assembly.

Secretary of the Senate.

This resolution was transmitted to the governor this 20th day of February, A. D. 1895.

E. L. COLMON,
Private Secretary of the Governor.

Chapter — Assembly joint resolution No. 20, relative to securing immediate attention from Congress to the United States debris commission.

Whereas the appropriation for the contingent expenses of the United States Debris Commission is about exhausted and the prosecution of their work is endangered, therefore be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be requested to give the matter their immediate attention with a view to securing an additional appropriation at the earliest possible moment.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be immediately telegraphed to our Senators and Representatives.

Mr. GORDON. I present a communication from Mr. Flynn Hargette, jr., of Harris County, Ga., suggesting certain amendments to the pension laws. I move that the communication be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a petition of sundry citizens of Nova,

Ohio, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting the appropriation of moneys for sectarian institutions; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Nova, Ohio, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing that "no State shall grant the right of franchise to any person who is not a citizen of the United States;" which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of Cleveland, Ohio, favoring the enactment of legislation providing for the reorganization of the consular and diplomatic service of the Government; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BLANCHARD presented resolutions adopted by the Board of Trade, Limited, of New Orleans, La., favoring the enactment of legislation in behalf of the Tennessee Centennial Exposition; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. PEPPER presented a resolution of the legislature of the State of Kansas; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House concurrent resolution No. 20. [By Mr. Schlyer.]

Whereas the experience of the settlers upon the plains of western Kansas, covering a period of more than twenty years, has demonstrated conclusively that agriculture can not be pursued with profit under existing natural conditions, and that artificial means and methods must be substituted therefor; and

Whereas the tests and experiments required to determine the fitness of new methods applicable to these higher altitudes and limited rainfall can not be made at the agricultural college of the State; and

Whereas the Fort Hays Military Reservation, at an altitude of 2,000 feet above sea level, contains a valuable body of native timber that should be preserved to posterity, and the land of said reservation is admirably adapted for such experiments in agriculture as are required in the premises; and

Whereas the buildings upon said military reservation, formerly used as residences for officers and their families, barracks for troops, storehouses, etc., are large and commodious, but can not be moved without destruction of their value, but in their present position are of great value, and could be used with little additional repairs for the purpose of a branch of the State Normal School; and

Whereas the location of a branch of the State Normal School at this place would be central and convenient for the whole of the north half of the State; and

Whereas the said military reservation has long since been abandoned by the United States Government as a military post: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, by the house of representatives of the State of Kansas (the senate concurring therein), That our Senators and Representatives are hereby requested to secure the passage of an act of Congress donating the said Fort Hays Military Reservation to the State of Kansas for the following public purposes:

First. For a western branch of the Kansas Agricultural College.

Second. For a western branch of the Kansas State Normal Institute.

Third. For a public park.

Resolved, further, That the secretary of state be, and he is hereby, instructed to transmit a copy of these resolutions to the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Representative in Congress from the State of Kansas.

STATE OF KANSAS,
Office of the Secretary of State.

I, W. C. Edwards, secretary of state of the State of Kansas, do hereby certify that the following and annexed is a true and correct copy of the original instrument of writing filed in my office February 13, 1895.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto subscribed my name and affixed my official seal. Done at Topeka, Kans., this 19th day of February, 1895.

[SEAL.]

W. C. EDWARDS,
Secretary of State.

Mr. PEPPER presented a concurrent resolution of the legislature of the State of Kansas; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas part 3, section 4693, Revised Statutes of the United States, granting pensions to soldiers, sailors, marines, and militiamen, et al., in its restrictive provision limiting the time of the validity and successful prosecutions of claims for pensions of "militiamen and nonenlisted persons on account of disability from wounds or injury received in battle with rebels or Indians while temporarily rendering service" to the 4th of July, A. D. 1874, has done and does great injustice and wrong to tens of thousands of men who risked their lives, health, and property for the Government in the hour of peril, and their widows and dependents; and

Whereas if that class of persons were ever by right entitled to a pension (which they were, equal to all other pension claimants and pensioners), they are equally so entitled for all time. The right and justice of their claims does not die by statutory limitation, that only deprives them of the pecuniary blessings of the pension which they are by right entitled to: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of Kansas (the Senate concurring), That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be, and they are hereby, instructed to obtain the repeal of the following part of section 4693 of the Revised Statutes of the United States: "But no claim of a State militiaman or nonenlisted person, on account of disability from wounds or injury received in battle with rebels or Indians, while temporarily rendering service, shall be valid unless prosecuted to a successful issue prior to the 4th day of July, 1874."

And be it further resolved, That the secretary of state is hereby instructed to send an engrossed copy of this resolution to each of our Senators and Members of Congress.

STATE OF KANSAS,
Office of the Secretary of State.

I, W. C. Edwards, secretary of state of the State of Kansas, do hereby certify that the following and annexed is a true and correct copy of the original resolution filed in my office February 19, 1895.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto subscribed my name and affixed my official seal. Done at Topeka, Kans., this 21st day of February, 1895.

[SEAL.]

W. C. EDWARDS,
Secretary of State.

Mr. SQUIRE presented a resolution of the legislature of the State of Washington; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution No. 12.

Whereas there is now pending in the Senate of the United States House bill

No. 119, providing for the protection of the forest reserves of the United States; and

Whereas the protection of said forest reserves is a matter of very serious importance: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring), That the legislature of the State of Washington hereby approves said bill and desires that the Senators from this State exert their influence to secure its early enactment, and that a copy of this resolution be sent to the Senators of the State of Washington.

Adopted by the senate, February 13, 1895.

F. H. LUCE,
President of the Senate.

Adopted by the house, February 14, 1895.

ELLIS MORRISON,
Speaker of the House.

(Indorsed:) Senate concurrent resolution No. 12. Relative to the protection of forest reserves. Filed in the office of the secretary of state February 13, 1895.

J. H. PRICE, Secretary of State.
UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

State of Washington, Office of the Secretary of State.

I, J. H. Price, secretary of state of the State of Washington, do hereby certify that I have carefully compared the annexed copy of the Senate concurrent resolution No. 12 with the original now on file in this office, and find the same to be a true and perfect copy thereof.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of the State of Washington.

Done at Olympia, this 16th day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and ninety-five.

[SEAL.]

J. H. PRICE, Secretary of State.

SUSPENSION OF PENSION.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to have printed the opinion of Judge Bradley, of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, delivered in the case of The United States ex rel Charles D. Long v. William Lochren, Commissioner of Pensions, and Hoke Smith, Secretary of the Interior. I move that the opinion be printed as a miscellaneous document.

The motion was agreed to.

FALL OF PRICES.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present an address by President E. Benjamin Andrews, delivered before the Manufacturers' Club of Philadelphia, Pa., on Monday, February 18, 1895, on "The fall of prices: The cause and the cure." I move that the address be printed as a miscellaneous document.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MILLS, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2594) for the relief of Charles W. Russey, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. PALMER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3128) for the relief of Samuel Burrell, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 952) for the relief of Catherine Caine, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6651) to pension Susannah Kepford, of Noble County, Ind., reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8884) granting a pension to Alexander M. Laughlin, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3977) to pension Jane Webster, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 995) for the relief of J. M. Billings, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2640) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of Susannah P. Swoope, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. CAFFERY, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1322) for the relief of William Leach, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2753) authorizing the Dyersburg and Mississippi River Railway and Improvement Company to bridge the Obion River, in the State of Tennessee, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8659) to authorize the construction of bridges across the Emory and the Clinch rivers, in the State of Tennessee, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MARTIN, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6461) to grant a pension to Mrs. Mary Button, of Arkansas, widow of Asa Button, deceased, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8264) granting a pension to Saloma Mangold, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill

(S. 2746) granting an increase of pension to Napoleon B. Breedlove, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MARTIN. I report from the Committee on Public Lands a substitute for Senate bill No. 2169 fixing the times when, regulating the manner in which, and declaring the character of the accounts which shall be hereafter stated to the Treasury Department for settlement between the United States and the several public-land States relative to the net proceeds of the sales of the public lands made and to be made therein by the United States, and for other purposes.

I ask that this bill be postponed indefinitely, and will state that hereafter I shall submit a written report to accompany the substitute I have just reported.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Senate bill No. 2169 will be postponed indefinitely, in the absence of objection. The substitute bill reported by the Senator from Kansas will be read twice by its title, and placed on the Calendar.

The bill (S. 2803) fixing times when, regulating the manner in which, and declaring the character of the accounts between the United States and the several public-land States relative to the net proceeds of the sales and other disposition of the public lands made and to be made therein by the United States, which shall hereafter be stated and certified to the Treasury Department for payment, was read twice by its title.

Mr. BERRY. With reference to that bill, I wish to state that, though the majority of the Committee on Public Lands reported the bill favorably, I, as a member of that committee, did not agree to the report, and do not think the bill ought to pass. If the Senator from Kansas [Mr. MARTIN] who reported the bill shall hereafter submit a written report on behalf of the majority of the committee, I shall ask leave to file the views of the minority.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Leave will be granted, in the absence of objection.

Mr. MANDERSON. From the Committee on Printing, I report an amendment intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill. I offer it on behalf of the Committee on Printing, it having the approval of that committee. I move that the amendment be printed and that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8882) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Illinois River at or near the town of Hennepin, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred an amendment submitted by Mr. WOLCOTT on the 22d instant, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8391) for the relief of Michael Ryan, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. VOORHEES, from the Committee on Finance, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8900) to amend section 9 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the Kansas City, Pittsburg and Gulf Railroad Company to construct and operate a railroad, telegraph, and telephone line through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," reported it without amendment.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6870) for the relief of James Phelan, internal-revenue collector at Detroit, Mich., reported it without amendment.

Mr. GORMAN, from the Committee on Printing, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2090) to remove the charge of desertion and grant an honorable discharge to Helmuth F. Soeckel, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

MEXICAN FREE ZONE.

Mr. HARRIS. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was recommitted the joint resolution (H. Res. 277) in reference to the free zone along the northern frontier of Mexico and adjacent to the United States, to report it with an amendment, and I ask unanimous consent to have it considered at this time. This is the joint resolution that was recalled from the House of Representatives yesterday. I will briefly state that the joint resolution as it came from the House was intended to prohibit the passage of imported merchandise through the Territories of the United States under bond to a part of the free zone in Mexico. The Senate committee has unanimously amended the joint resolution so as to make it apply to the whole of the free zone. I ask unanimous consent that it be now considered.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in line 8, after the word "exists," to strike out:

At any point between the western boundary of the city of Laredo, in the State of Texas, and the Pacific Ocean.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the joint resolution and amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. HARRIS, Mr. MORRILL, and Mr. COKE were appointed.

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY CONFERENCE.

Mr. VOORHEES. I am instructed by the Committee on Finance to report an amendment to the pending sundry civil appropriation bill. It is in lieu of the amendment introduced by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] the other day, which was referred to the Committee on Finance. I ask that the proposed amendment be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

That whenever the President of the United States shall determine that this Government should be represented at any international conference called with a view to secure, internationally, a fixity of relative value between gold and silver, as money, by means of a common ratio between those metals, with free mintage at such ratio, the United States shall be represented at such conference by nine delegates, to be selected as follows: The President of the United States shall select three of said delegates; the Senate shall select three members of the Senate as delegates; and the House of Representatives shall select three members of the House as delegates. If at any time there shall be any vacancy, such vacancy shall be filled by the President of the United States. And for the compensation of said delegates, together with all reasonable expenses connected therewith, to be approved by the Secretary of State, including the proportion to be paid by the United States of the joint expenses of such conference, the sum of one hundred thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask that the amendment may be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and I also ask that it may be printed in the RECORD, together with the original amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado, so that they may both appear together.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The amendment, submitted by Mr. WOLCOTT on the 23d instant, is as follows:

That whenever the President of the United States, upon invitation of the Governments of Germany or Great Britain, or any of the governments of Europe, or otherwise, shall determine that this Government should be represented at any international or other conference to be held with a view to secure, internationally, a fixity of relative value between gold and silver, as money, by means of a common ratio between those metals, with free mintage at such ratio, he shall be authorized to request the attendance of the commissioners, to be appointed as hereinafter provided, to attend such conference on behalf of the United States.

That the number of such commissioners shall be nine. The President of the United States shall appoint, by and with the consent of the Senate, three of said commissioners, prior to the adjournment of this Congress; the other six members of said commission shall be a joint committee of this Congress, three of said committee to be members of the Senate and three of the House of Representatives. If, after the adjournment of this Congress, there shall be any vacancies in said commission so appointed, by death, resignation, or otherwise, such vacancies shall be filled by appointment by the President.

That for the compensation of said commissioners and for all reasonable expenses connected therewith, to be approved by the Secretary of State, including the proportion to be paid by the United States of the joint expenses of such conference, the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated. If such commissioners shall not be called upon to serve, no compensation shall be allowed them.

Mr. HAWLEY. I should like the attention of the Senator from Indiana for a moment. I notice no provision in the amendment reported by him for the appointment of delegates on the part of the Senate before our adjournment on Monday next. I take it for granted some provision ought to be made for that.

Mr. VOORHEES. I think that is provided for. That is the understanding of the committee.

SENATOR JOHN MARTIN.

Mr. GRAY, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, reported the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the Senate to John Martin, a Senator from the State of Kansas, the sum of $1,000 in full of compensation and all expenses incurred by him in the contest for his seat in the Senate by Joseph W. Ady.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. ALLISON introduced a bill (S. 2804) to extend the time in which the Illinois and Iowa Railway and Terminal Company shall commence to build and complete the building of its bridge across the Mississippi River at Moline, Ill.; which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. BLANCHARD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BUTLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. PROCTOR submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. VEST submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. PLATT submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. DANIEL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. GORMAN, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to D. W. Mullan to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers relative to S. R. 34, upon complying with the rule relating thereto.

ANNIE M. WIGGIN.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and is hereby, authorized to pay out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate to Annie M. Wiggin, widow of A. D. Wiggin, deceased, late conductor of elevator of the Senate, the sum of $600, being an amount equal to six months' salary as such conductor of elevator, said sum to be considered as in lieu of all funeral expenses and other allowances.

TREASURY CLAIMS.

Mr. COCKRELL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate a schedule of all claims allowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury under appropriations the balances of which have been exhausted, or carried to the surplus fund under the provisions of section 5 of the act approved June 20, 1874, since the allowance of those which are embraced in House Ex. Doc. No. 234, present session, and to and including the 28th instant; also a list of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims, and not included with those transmitted to Congress February 4, 1895, and embraced in House Ex. Doc. No. 283, of the present session.

JUDGMENTS AGAINST UNITED STATES.

Mr. COCKRELL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General be directed to report to the Senate, under section 11 of the act of March 3, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," all judgments rendered in the circuit and district courts of the United States against the United States not heretofore reported which require an appropriation for their payment.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CALL submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8727) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3, 4, 6, 7, 9, 10, 13, 14, 16, 17, 19, 20, 22, 32, 34, 35, 36, and 37.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 5, 8, 11, 12, 15, 18, 23, 24, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 33, 38, 39, and 40, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in the amended paragraph insert the following: "$252,840;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Insert after the word "Secretary" in line 1 of said amendment the words "of Agriculture;" and the Senate agree to the same.

WILKINSON CALL,
CALVIN S. BRICE,
S. M. CULLOM.

Managers on the part of the Senate.

W. H. HATCH,
W. S. FORMAN,
DAN WAUGH.

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the report may be printed and lie on the table for the present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, requested the Senate to return to the House the joint resolution (S. R. 117) granting permission for the erection of a bronze statue in Washington, D. C., in honor of the late Prof. Samuel D. Gross, doctor of medicine, doctor of laws, and doctor of civil law.

The message also requested the Senate to furnish the House with duplicate copies of the following engrossed bills:

A bill (S. 15) for the erection of an equestrian statue of Maj. Gen. John Stark in the city of Manchester, N. H.; and

A bill (S. 266) providing for the erection of an equestrian statue of Gen. Francis Marion.

SAMOAN CORRESPONDENCE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I transmit herewith, in response to a resolution of the Senate of the 29th ultimo, a report from the Secretary of State, accompanied by copies of correspondence touching Samoan affairs.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, February 26, 1895.

RETURN OF BILLS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the request of the House of Representatives to furnish to the House duplicate copies of the bill (S. 15) for the erection of an equestrian statue of Maj. Gen. John Stark in the city of Manchester, N. H., and the bill (S. 266) for the erection of an equestrian statue of Gen. Francis Marion, and by unanimous consent the request was ordered to be complied with and the bills returned to the House.

STATUE OF PROFESSOR GROSS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the request of the House of Representatives to return to the House the joint resolution (S. R. 117) granting permission for the erection of a bronze statue in Washington, D. C., in honor of the late Prof. Samuel D. Gross, doctor of medicine, doctor of laws, and doctor of civil law, and by unanimous consent the request was ordered to be complied with and the joint resolution returned to the House.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. COCKRELL. If there be no further morning business, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8518) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes.

Mr. QUAY. I desire to give notice to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and to the Senate of my intention to move to reconsider the last amendment adopted last evening relating to the Government Printing House. I do not propose to reopen just now the discussion of the printing-house site question, and probably it will not be necessary to do it at all, but I think it proper to give this notice.

Mr. COCKRELL. There are two or three amendments which I desire to offer this morning, as I am anxious to have the first part of the bill completed as far as possible, so that it may be perfected and ready for the printer.

On page 5, at the end of line 9, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, for the construction of a public building which has been authorized by law, and which has been reported favorably by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 9, on page 5, it is proposed to insert:

For public building at Paterson, N. J.: For commencement of the construction of the public building, $50,000; and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to contract for the completion of said building within the limit of cost prescribed by law, subject to appropriations to be made by Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in on page 7, after line 21.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, after line 21, it is proposed to insert:
For public building at Troy, N. Y.: For additional amount for completion, including elevator, painting, clocks, storm doors, and other necessary work, $22,950.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. On page 9, after line 10, at the special request and on the estimate of the Secretary of the Treasury, I move to insert the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 9, after line 10, it is proposed to insert:
For special repairs to the Winder Building, namely, for redeeming foundation of front wall, necessary repairs for the preservation of the building, interior repairs, calcimining and painting the front walls, $5,485.

Mr. PLATT. Is the word "redeeming" proper there?

Mr. COCKRELL. "Redeeming" is the language used. It refers to the strengthening of the foundations.

Mr. PLATT. Very well.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. On page 106, after line 9, I move to insert the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 106, after line 9, it is proposed to insert:
To enable the Secretary of War to reimburse Col. F. C. Ainsworth, Chief of the Record and Pension Office, War Department, for such expenses incurred by him in legal proceedings growing out of the Ford's Theater disaster on the 9th day of June, 1893, as the Secretary of War may decide to have been necessary, proper, and reasonable, $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Missouri whether he has a similar amendment to propose to those he has proposed in relation to public buildings in regard to the building at Brockton, Mass.? The bill for the construction of that building has become a law. The appropriation is a small one, $75,000 in all, I think. It was referred to the Senator's committee some days ago.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have not had the time to run over all of the amendments which have been submitted to me. Has the amendment referred to by the Senator been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds?

Mr. HOAR. Undoubtedly. The bill has passed and become a law.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand that, but some of the amendments have been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and some have not been.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to have the Senator inform me. I think I had the amendment referred directly to the Committee on Appropriations, and thought, as a matter of course, that it would go to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have it probably amongst my papers here.

Mr. HOAR. I will not delay the Senator, but I trust he will give it proper attention.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the limit?

Mr. HOAR. The limit is $75,000, if I recollect aright.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will have the amendment prepared for $75,000, and offer it in a few moments.

Mr. HOAR. That is satisfactory.

Mr. MANDERSON. I have an amendment to offer in the line of the action of the Senate with reference to those who suffered death from the Ford's Theater disaster, which I ask may be now considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 62, line 16, before the word "thousand," it is proposed to strike out "fifteen" and insert "twenty-five," and on page 63, line 2, after the name "George W. Roby," it is proposed to insert "John T. Reynolds, George C. Bollinger," so as to read:

For payment to the heirs and legal representatives of those who were killed by reason of the falling of the Ford Theater building on the 9th day of June, 1893, the sum of $125,000, of which sum there shall be paid to the legal or personal representatives of each of the following persons the sum of $5,000: George Q. Allen, George Michael Arnold, Samuel P. Banes, John Bannas, John E. Chapin, Jeremiah Daly, Joseph R. Fagan, Joseph Barker Gage, David Clark Jordan, Justus Boyd Jones, Frederick B. Loftus, Jay Hirst McFall, Otto F. W. Meder, Howard S. Miller, Benjamin Franklin Miller, Burrows Nelson, Emanuel G. Shull, Frank M. Williams, Alfred L. Ames, Arthur Napoleon Girault, Michael T. Mulleday, George W. Roby, John T. Reynolds, George C. Bollinger, and Charles Best Sayers.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to one thing in relation to the appropriation on account of the Ford's Theater disaster. On page 63 the amendment reported by the committee reads:

That where the deceased died leaving a widow but no children the $5,000 shall be paid her; where the deceased left a widow and children, the widow shall receive one-half and the children shall share alike; and where the deceased was unmarried, the sum shall be paid to the legal heirs.

I think that is the most remarkable statement I have seen in a law for a great while—"shall be paid to the legal heirs." Certainly it should go to the personal representatives. In any event, there could be no possibility of its going to the illegal heirs. If the phraseology is to be continued as it is now in the bill, that particular phrase should be changed, so as to give the money to the legal representatives, and not to the legal heirs. I am not a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, but I suggest that some member of that committee should prepare a proper amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. The amendment came from the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], from the special committee having charge of the subject.

Mr. MANDERSON. It came from the joint committee of the two Houses. There was a change of the language in the Committee on Appropriations, which, however, does not affect that feature.

Mr. COCKRELL. Not in that part.

Mr. MANDERSON. Not in that part, I was about to say; but I think perhaps the word "heirs" should be changed to "representatives," so that it will read "legal representatives."

Mr. FAULKNER. I suggest that it should not be "personal representatives."

Mr. MANDERSON. No, "legal representatives."

Mr. FAULKNER. Because the object and purpose of this donation, for that is what it is, is not to give it to the creditors of the deceased persons; and if it goes to the personal representatives, it necessarily would go to the creditors of the deceased. It ought simply to go to the heirs.

Mr. MANDERSON. Very well.

Mr. COCKRELL. What suggestion does the Senator make?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I propose to strike out "legal," and let it run to the heirs.

Mr. MANDERSON. I have no objection to that, as the word "legal" is surplusage.

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me that there is a distinction between "heirs" and "next of kin." The sums proposed to be appropriated ought to go to the next of kin. It seems also that the duty of inquiring who are the next of kin, where a large number of persons are concerned, ought not to be imposed upon the Department here, as that might involve in some cases a bill of interpleader. It strikes me that the true way would be to say "the personal representatives for the benefit of the next of kin." That would save the Department any inquiry, and the money would be paid over to the person who is under bond, and who will discover the next of kin, and get a legal decree if necessary. I make that suggestion.

Mr. COCKRELL. The amendment was not prepared by the Committee on Appropriations. We took it just as we received it, except where it provided that children should share by stirpes, we provided that they should share alike. That was the only change the Committee on Appropriations made.

Mr. HOAR. I move to strike out "legal heirs" and insert "personal representatives for the benefit of the next of kin." That will exclude creditors.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 8, on page 63, it is proposed to strike out the words "legal heirs" and insert "personal representatives for the benefit of the next of kin."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BERRY. An amendment was passed over last night, on page 70, in regard to the appropriations to protect the public lands. I inquire of the Senator from Missouri if there is any objection to considering that this morning.

Mr. COCKRELL. No, sir.

Mr. BERRY. Then, I shall move at this time an amendment to the amendment of the committee on page 70, line 10. The committee propose an amendment striking out "$90,000," and inserting "$60,000." I offered an amendment last night to the amendment to strike out "sixty" and insert "one hundred and twenty."

The provision relates to the appropriation to protect the timber on public lands and prevent fraudulent entries of public lands.

I have been utterly unable to comprehend any public reason why the Committee on Appropriations have undertaken to reduce the appropriation made by the House of Representatives, which was altogether inadequate for the purpose named. I have a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and I wish to state here and now that there is no more efficient officer in the public service than the Commissioner of the General Land Office, Mr. Lamoreux. He has the respect and confidence of every man who has had to do with the public lands of the country during his incumbency in office. In a letter written and signed by his assistant, in regard to this matter, but which I know he approves, he states:

There is no more important branch than the special service division of the General Land Office, which has charge of protecting the Government lands, and the moneys appropriated for this service are more than returned to the Government in the actual value of the moneys recovered from cash forfeited on entries canceled by the action of the special agents of this division, and recovered in the prosecution of timber trespasses. During the four fiscal years from 1886 to 1889, inclusive, principally covered by Mr. Cleveland's first Administration, the total appropriations for this service amounted to $680,000, and during this same period the cash recovered from these two sources was $1,017,414.17, showing an excess of recoveries over appropriations of $337,414.17.

In another part of the letter—and I shall not read all the letter—he says:

In giving the above amounts recovered only the cash obtained by the Government as a result of this service was stated, but in addition to that item this service during these eight years caused the cancellation of 7,161 entries of various descriptions of the public lands, embracing 1,228,272 acres, and restored the land to the public domain. The value of such restored land at the rates fixed by law was $1,636,190.

From the years 1886 to 1894, inclusive, the total stumpage value of the timber reported as unlawfully cut from the public lands amounted to $6,527,372.91, a yearly average of about $725,000.

The principal reason why the recoveries fall so far below the value of the timber cut is that the force of special agents at the command of the General Land Office has been too small to promptly and thoroughly investigate these trespasses, and so prepare the cases as to insure judgments for the United States.

The appropriation for special agents for the current fiscal year is only $60,000, which is the smallest amount appropriated certainly within ten years. During the fiscal years ending June 30, 1890, 1891, 1892, and 1893, the amounts appropriated for this service were respectively $212,462.15, $340,000, $223,000, and $120,000. It will be observed that the amount appropriated for this year is just one-half of the smallest amount above appropriated, and one-fourth of the amount appropriated in 1891. Should the amount asked for now, which is the same as that appropriated in 1891, $240,000, be granted by Congress, there is not the slightest doubt that fully half a million dollars will be recovered and turned into the Treasury as the result of this appropriation.

In conclusion, the letter says:

I sincerely hope that you may be able to obtain for this service at least $120,000, as no smaller amount will permit us to maintain a sufficient number of agents to cover the territory under the jurisdiction of this office, as at the present time there are large sections of country, including whole States and Territories, where there is not even a single agent, and as a consequence we are compelled to decline to take action upon reported trespasses and frauds because of the inadequacy of our force.

I will state further, Mr. President, that the President of the United States thought this matter of sufficient importance to refer to it in his annual message, and expressed the hope that there might be a sufficient appropriation made for this service.

The Secretary of the Interior estimated the amount at $240,000; the House of Representatives only gave $90,000, and for some unexplained reason the Senate committee has sought to still further reduce the $90,000, and cut it down to $60,000.

The Commissioner of the Land Office says the very least amount by which the public lands can be protected is $120,000, and he shows that when the other appropriation was made, $700,000, there was covered into the Treasury from money actually recovered from those who had cut timber from the public lands more than $1,000,000. I can not understand why the Committee on Appropriations should seek to cripple this service and thereby enable timber thieves from one end of the country to the other to cut and strip the public lands of timber. Before this reduction came there was an agent in my own State. I understand he has been withdrawn. There is a large amount of timber land there. I am informed that a great many men have cut timber from those lands. They have been taking timber from the land in the Western States in large quantities. The estimate is $240,000, and it does seem to me that it is the duty of Congress to give the Commissioner of the General Land Office or the Secretary of the Interior at least $120,000, which the Commissioner says is the least amount by which he can protect those lands.

The land belongs to the Government; the timber is the Government's, and if there is no protection and no timber agents, men will cut timber by the thousands of feet and appropriate it to their use. One hundred and twenty thousand dollars is the least amount the service can be rendered for, and I hope the Senate will adopt the amendment striking out "$60,000" and inserting "$120,000."

Mr. GORMAN. I trust the amendment will not be agreed to. I confess my astonishment at the constant attempt to increase appropriations in these items where it is a mere matter of increasing the number of small officials of the Government. While I am liberal, I think, in all matters of appropriation that are necessary to carry on the Government, I think the time has come when we ought at least to check this tendency on the part of heads of Departments to make appointments where there is absolutely no necessity for them. As a matter of course, if we followed the estimates from the heads of Departments the appropriations would be over $550,000,000 for this year; and the particular item that is under consideration has been used over and over again for what is known as a fund for the purpose of taking care of a few favorites. It ran up to a hundred and twenty or a hundred and thirty thousand dollars, as stated by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. BERRY. Two hundred and forty thousand dollars.

Mr. GORMAN. Two hundred and forty thousand dollars, and so gross was the abuse, so useless were the officers, that Congress reduced the appropriation, so that in 1895 we reduced it to $60,000, with a provision that that amount should not be exceeded. In 1894 the Senate, by an almost unanimous vote, reduced the appropriation to $40,000, and I regret that the officer administering this portion of the law exceeded his authority and spent $45,000 more than that, and came here for an appropriation to make up that deficiency.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator from Maryland allow me? The appropriation for the last fiscal year, according to the statement of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the Land Office, was $120,000.

Mr. GORMAN. I give the exact figures. For the fiscal year of 1894 we appropriated $40,000. The Senate by a decided vote, I think upon the motion of the distinguished Senator from Colorado, reduced the amount to $40,000. We did fail to put in a provision that no greater amount should be expended, and what was the result of the operation of it?

The Secretary of the Interior appointed enough officials to consume the $40,000 in six months, and then came back for a deficiency of $45,000. Then in 1895—that is for the year which terminates on the 30th of June next—Congress appropriated $60,000, and provided that the Department should not exceed that amount. Now comes the bill from the other House, and as there are a great many gentlemen interested in this matter traveling over the country, or supposed to be traveling over the country, at a per diem and expenses, they induced the coordinate branch of the Government to increase it to $90,000. We have reduced it to $60,000 for this year, which is ample.

Now, let me read to the Senate for one moment the result of these appropriations. The total received from cash forfeited on entries canceled because of these examinations and from the prosecution of timber trespasses was $1,017,414.17. The total appropriation was $680,000, all for offices, making a net return to the Government of $337,414. But the total recoveries during the four years ending June 30, 1893, was $564,648, and the total appropriations to keep these gentlemen at work was $792,462.15, or a loss to the Government of $227,814.

I submit that on such a showing the appropriation ought not only to be reduced from $90,000, as it came from the other House, to $60,000, but that $40,000 is ample.

Mr. WOLCOTT obtained the floor.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator from Colorado yield to me?

Mr. WOLCOTT. For what purpose?

Mr. BERRY. I want to—

Mr. WOLCOTT. The Senator from Arkansas will have plenty of time to answer. If I take the floor and the Senator from Arkansas reflects, he will answer the Senator from Maryland more mildly than he intends to do.

Mr. BERRY. Very well.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, I desire to say that if this appropriation was ever increased to $60,000 from $40,000 it was a great outrage. Forty thousand dollars is an excessive appropriation for these timber depredation agents, and why in the world $20,000 more was given last year, I am at a loss to understand. With every increasing appropriation for these timber depredation inspectors, they tumble over each other in the Western States, broken-down politicians from the Eastern States, hunting for some man who has a mine which looks as if it might produce, or some miner up on the mountains developing a silver mine, who may cut a little timber for his mine, that they can compel him by blackmail into giving them a hundred or a few hundred dollars to save himself from indictment in the Federal court.

These appropriations simply furnish a means for the appointment of men who are not fit to stay at home and who can be unloaded upon the Western States at Government expense. Talk about timber thieves! These people are far worse than any timber thieves that Eastern men can imagine. When the inspectors are not trying to blackmail some railroad out of a pass or a thousand dollars in money, in order that they may not report the road for cutting timber on Government land for ties, or some miner or prospector, they are hunting up some poor devil in a remote canyon, where the timber is not worth a dollar, and where it only stays until some wandering tramp or prospector will carelessly see that it is burned down. Then they bring him to the Federal court, often on foot, to wait an information for cutting timber on Government land. I have known informations to be filed in the Federal court where not only the defendants, who were perfectly innocent, who went on the hillside behind their cabin and cut a few pieces of timber to keep the fire going, were hauled two or three hundred miles, but the witnesses, too, sometimes on foot. I have seen them in Denver without money enough to pay their daily expenses, because they could not get their fees until the cases were tried.

When people talk about the necessity of $220,000 for these sinecures, for people who do no good whatever, I am tired of it. When the people of the States which have the public lands ask for it, it will be time enough. If these timber depredation inspectors are to be appointed, let them stay in the States from which they are appointed. We do not want them in Colorado. They have never served a good or useful or decent purpose out there.

Mr. BERRY. Inasmuch as I heard the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] make the same speech a year or two ago, I take it that the agents to whom he refers were those appointed under the last Administration.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Oh, Mr. President, there is no party in this matter.

Mr. BERRY. He knows more about it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. If the Senator from Arkansas is of the opinion that timber agents appointed under one party are better than those appointed under another, he has a very poor opinion of his own party.

Mr. BERRY. I wish to state that I read officially. I do not make wild statements which can not be sustained by the facts. I will state the facts which occurred under Mr. Cleveland's former Administration, as shown by the records of the Land Department, and I call the attention of the Senator from Maryland and the Senator from Colorado to it. Let us see whether the agents do good or not. During the four fiscal years, from 1886 to 1889, inclusive, principally covered by Mr. Cleveland's first Administration, the total appropriations for this service amounted to $680,000, and during that same period the cash recovered from those two sources was $1,017,414.17. That money was collected from men who cut timber off public lands. Six hundred and eighty thousand dollars was appropriated, while more than $1,000,000 was collected from men who had taken the timber. The Senator from Colorado says it is merely some poor man up in a canyon in Colorado. It is the sawmill men in the Western States—it is the large timber corporations that habitually and continually depredate upon the public lands.

When the Senator from Colorado says these agents do no good, here is the record confronting him which shows that during the last Democratic Administration more than $400,000 was put into the Treasury over and above what was paid out. In addition to that, there are several million acres of land saved—I forget the number of fraudulent land entries which were set aside by these timber agents whom the Senator from Colorado denounces so recklessly.

It may be true that in the appointment of so many now and then you will find a bad man, but I tell the Senator that there are men in the employment of the Land Office, and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], who has been Secretary of the Interior, will bear me out, who are as honorable, and honest, and as lighted gentlemen as is the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] or any other man. There may have been thieves amongst them, but that is no good reason why we should not protect the timber.

Now, the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] stands here and says they must protect the Treasury from these large appropriations.

Mr. GORMAN. Useless appropriations.

Mr. BERRY. Useless appropriations. Yet yesterday, when there were any number of appropriations in the pending bill that cannot be defended, the Senator from Maryland sat silent, and made no objection to them. I do not wish to say anything disrespectful to the Committee on Appropriations, but it seems to me that that committee have not been actuated in every instance by the highest desire to cut down the appropriations where they could be cut down. When the Senator from Maryland and the Senator from Missouri reported an appropriation that went through the Senate by a majority vote, which proposed to pay what was admitted to be an extravagant sum, and far beyond the value of the property for which it was to be paid, neither of those gentlemen spoke of economy.

In relation to the Coast and Geodetic Survey, the other House cut down the number of officers. The Senate Committee on Appropriations reinstated them, and I say to the Senator from Maryland, when he denounces these men and says they do no good, that he goes in the face of the record made by the Secretary of the Interior. It is true that for the years last named by the Senator from Maryland there was less recovered than the appropriations amounted to, but that was during President Harrison's Administration, the period ending, I think, in 1893. But the Secretary of the Interior says $240,000 is necessary, and the Commissioner of the Land Office says he can not get along with less than $120,000, and that if that sum is given $500,000 will be recovered during the coming year from the men who cut timber and appropriate it to their own use.

Yet the Senator talks about economy, and says $40,000 is enough. It seems to me that it depends somewhat upon who and what official or persons ask the appropriation as to whether or not certain members are struck with the idea that they must be peculiarly economical.

Mr. GORMAN. I wish to say only one word in relation to the last remark of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY], who, I see, is very much excited on this small question. You can always get up excitement in the Senate on a matter of the appointment of a few small officers. It seems to attract more attention and excitement than do the great appropriations for the support of the Government. The Senator from Arkansas says it seems that I am disposed to be economical because the appointments come under a certain officer of the Government. There is not anything in my record or my action in the Senate to warrant such a statement.

It is as far from being accurate as anything the Senator ever uttered. If the Senator knows anything about this case, he will know that under the last Administration I pursued the same course. I was convinced that it was unnecessary, and I voted and aided and spoke for cutting down the appropriation to $40,000. I did that under an Administration that was adverse to me politically, not because of politics, and I state to the Senator from Arkansas that believing it to be true then, and the facts having proved that we were justified in doing it, I shall not vote to grant to my own Administration, although there might be additional appointments, $100,000 more than I voted for under the last Administration.

If that is a matter which enters into the consideration of this question, I submit to the Senate whether a gentleman who suspects such a motive is not himself somewhat influenced by the fact that some friend or some party associate of his may use the appropriation to take care of his own favorites. I know no Administration in this matter or any other. The Senator from Arkansas is not justified in making such an intimation. There is nothing in the record that warrants it. I wish to state to the Senate and to the Senator from Arkansas that whether it is $5,000 or $60,000 I have no interest whatever in these officials.

Mr. BERRY. It seemed to me most remarkable that the Senator from Maryland, of all men, and the Appropriations Committee should insert in the paragraph appropriating money for timber agents or to protect the public lands a provision that the officials should be put under the civil-service law. I have never heard the Senator from Maryland accused of being a civil-service reformer. I saw that committee oppose a provision of that character in the amendment in relation to the income-tax law; I saw them oppose and make the point of order against the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who proposed to put the consuls provided for in the consular and diplomatic bill under the civil service, and yet in regard to this particular item, in the committee where the influence of the Senator from Maryland is known to be most potent, on an insignificant matter, as he calls it, it is proposed that the men who are to go out and determine whether timber is cut shall be examined by the civil-service board and appointed under the Civil Service Commission.

In regard to his, the Senator's, intimation that I desire to get an appointment under this or that particular appropriation, I will state that if the Senator means to say that I would advocate any appropriation here in order to secure an appointment, he states that which is not true. If, under a Democratic Administration, there are appointments to be made, I should feel that I would be untrue to the people of my State if I did not seek to have a fair division of them, but the idea that the Senator from Maryland should criticize any man because he seeks to get a political appointment is to me most astonishing.

Mr. President, it has been charged again and again that the Senator from Maryland has filled one of the public offices of this Government with his own appointees, and I will not say it is for that reason that there never has been any complaint in that Department about appropriations. I do not mean to make any charge, but I do say that the question of economy coming on this small matter does not come well from a committee which reported an amendment and asked us to pay $150,000 for property with a defective title, where it is universally known that the fee simple of the property itself is not worth over $100,000. I say that would have been a better place for the Senator from Maryland to practice his economy.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I have said a great deal against this system. It was a most ruinous and cruel system, so far as Nevada is concerned. It closed down all the mines in the eastern part of the State and did an infinite amount of harm. These agents arrested men and brought them 300 miles to the western part of the State, and they had to be sent back by subscriptions made up by good citizens. After infinite harm had been done the courts held that the miners who used the timber had done it according to law, and the Government recovered nothing. The Government must have lost a good deal of money, but the people lost a good deal more.

I have always objected to this system, because the Department did not appoint men competent to discharge the duties. They did not appoint lawyers or experts of standing who could discharge the duties. It has been the practice of all Administrations to appoint men entirely unfamiliar with the business, and men who in many instances turned out to be mere adventurers and blackmailers. The whole system is a curse to my State. I have heretofore advocated the appointment of a fewer number of agents and men of a higher grade. The Committee on Public Lands took up the question as to fraudulent entries. We had a great many laws under which entries were made—timber culture and other laws—where there were frauds. If the matter had been in the hands of competent men, they would have gone to the land office and selected entries and corrected it. It could have been done with very little money. But it was done in a very expensive and harassing way by incompetent adventurers, who have played upon the West in that manner until there is a feeling of persecution.

When the law was passed which repealed all laws under which fraudulent entries could be made, it was said that we could substantially get rid of the system of special agents; that very few would be needed. The number was reduced. There is no necessity for a large number. There is necessity for a smaller number and men of a higher grade, if it can be done. This picking up of inexperienced men all over the country and sending them to the West to harass the people is a great mistake. Every fellow thinks he must do something, and he will kick up some kind of a stir to show that he is zealous in the cause of the Government. Even if he is honest, not having experience enough to do his duty well, he wants to find something to report, and nine times out of ten he puts the people to great inconvenience, drags them before a court, and ruins them to make a reputation for himself. I submit that the system is all wrong.

Mr. HOAR. What would be the proper system?

Mr. STEWART. The proper system would be to appoint ten or fifteen men and give them a proper salary. They should be men who have judgment and character, and who could look into the matter. It is very easy to go into the land office and see if dummy entries have been made. It is very easy to find out all about the matter. A man can attend to three or four States. A sawmill is conspicuous, and if he has judgment enough to report the facts and not annoy the people he can supervise a very large region; whereas if you send a horde of inexperienced men to persecute the people it is a waste of public money. The whole system and plan has been a great grievance from the beginning.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, I regret that the temperate remarks I made with a view of pouring oil upon the troubled waters did not accomplish the result. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] feels rather indignant at the suggestions made. I beg to assure him that he must misapprehend the character of what he terms timber depredations in the far West. One would think that timber was something lying around loose, which a man could steal and put in his pocket and carry off. There is not a foot of timber shipped out of Colorado, and there has not been for a generation. There is no timber stolen there. There is no wanton destruction of timber. All that is ever done is where citizens, seeking to build up the industries of a new State, take that which is at hand for that purpose; and only some officious and spying officer of the Government, who desires, as the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] suggested, to make a record with his Department, would ever dream of attempting to call them to order for it.

In addition to that, there are forestry associations in those Western States which look carefully after timber depredations, so far as they effect the water supply. Those voluntary associations do infinitely more in the line of protecting timber than all the ignorant, paid agents in the world that any Administration can send out. It is not in the slightest degree a question of party. Those who have been longest in the service are the best agents, because they are the best fixed. The newer men have to have more. Therefore the older in service the timber agent is, the less exacting he is in the community upon which he is inflicted.

But reference has not been made until now to the civil-service provision. It is an admirable provision. I can understand the hostility it would create. I can understand that if we compel an examination of the applicants for these positions there are some sections of the country which would naturally be deprived of the opportunity of furnishing timber agents. I suggest that if we could have timber agents undergo a proper examination, and as a part of the examination a recital of the Ten Commandments, and as one of those the Divine injunction, "Thou shalt not steal," we might have timber agents who would do a great deal better service than any that have yet been sent out by either party.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I deprecate and seriously regret that anything in the nature of personal reflection should have crept into this debate. I think every Senator can afford to recognize the fact that there is ample margin for honest differences of opinion in respect of public policies and public questions, and this matter should be determined strictly upon its merit.

I find from the public record certain facts that I think it material for the Senate to remember before acting upon this question. The total recoveries growing out of the action and services of these agents during four years ending June 30, 1893, were, as stated by the Senator from Maryland, $564,648, while the total appropriations for the same period were $792,462.15. But the total recoveries during eight years ending June 30, 1893, were $1,582,062.17, while the total appropriations for the same period were $1,472,462.15, making an excess of recoveries over the appropriations of $109,600.02. These are cash recoveries to the Treasury.

But in addition to these, during that period there have been a number of suits pending, brought about by the action and investigation of these agencies, involving several millions of dollars, in which the services of the agents are necessary in the conduct of the suits. Besides the amount of cash recovered, as I have stated, 7,161 settlement, mineral, desert, timber culture, timber land, and private cash entries, embracing 1,228,272 acres of land, have been canceled and the land restored to the public domain. The value of the restored land at the rates fixed by law aggregates $1,836,190.

Now, when you look at the cash recovered and restored to the Treasury, taking the eight years, there is $109,000 more than it has cost, and in addition to that here is at least $1,836,190 in value of lands restored to the public domain. However wisely or unwisely they have been selected, however fortunate or unfortunate they may have been, their services in the last eight years ending June 30, 1893, aggregate nearly two million dollars more than they have cost the Government.

In view of these facts I shall vote against the amendment of the committee, and I shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas. This much I have deemed it necessary and proper to say in order that the facts may be understood.

Mr. CAREY. The Senator from Tennessee read a statement as to the amount of money recovered. Will the Senator please tell me from what he read?

Mr. HARRIS. A memorandum that I obtained from the Land Office.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, the conditions to-day are almost directly opposite from what they were during Mr. Cleveland's first Administration when so much money was collected. March 3, 1891, Congress passed a law which was an amendment to all the land laws of the United States. The Western men took a good deal of interest in the sections applying to timber lands or the cutting of timber upon the public lands.

In section 8 of that law it was provided that the Secretary of the Interior could issue certain rules and regulations which would permit the settler and the miner to cut timber on the public lands. It removed in a great measure the necessity for the settler to go and take timber from the public lands, as permits were obtained for the cutting of timber on certain sections or subdivisions of land by persons engaged in the lumber business, and they, on orders from the settlers, furnished lumber. There was no longer any real necessity for any great number of timber agents.

Two years ago Congress passed another law, which permitted the sale of timber lands in all of the public-land States and Territories. Under the provisions of that law a quarter section of land can be bought by the individual for $2.50 an acre. This made it possible for settlers to obtain timber from the public lands.

There has been no class of men more obnoxious and objectionable to Western people than the men who call themselves timber agents. The objection has not been so much to the kind of duties which they were called upon to perform as to the manner in which they have performed them. If those agents could have been residents of States where they were called upon to act there would not have been any objection to them; but they were taken from other sections of the country. They hung about the towns; they drew their per diem and expenses. I know no direction in which more money was wasted in a small way than in the employment of the men who were known as timber agents.

If $250,000 was necessary before the timber-land laws were amended and the passage of the law of 1892, which permitted timber lands to be sold, $60,000 will more than supply the place $250,000 would at that time have supplied.

The various cases cited by the Senator from Tennessee occurred during the famous Sparks administration of the Land Office. I do not believe the Land Office was ever managed more to the disadvantage of the people of this country than during that time; and I can say that I do not believe that the Land Department was ever better managed than it is being managed to-day under General Lamoreux. He is a man who understands the question involved here. He has lived in the West, and his administration is entirely satisfactory to those who have to act under the public-land laws of the United States.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator from Wyoming permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. CAREY. Certainly.

Mr. BERRY. Does he know that Judge Lamoreux has said that $120,000 is the very least sum that he can get along with and protect the timber lands, and that he has only 12 agents now, and there are a number of States and Territories in which there is no agent whatever?

Mr. CAREY. I will state, in reply to the Senator from Arkansas, that the trouble with the Land Department in this case was that they employed too many at the commencement of the present Administration. The Senators and Representatives who were of the Democratic faith were importuning for office, and all of us who live in the West know that many men were appointed who were not competent to fill the position. They appointed more men than they had appropriations to pay, and the result was that they incurred an indebtedness. I do not deny that if it is the desire to employ as many as were employed at the commencement this appropriation of $60,000 is not enough; but I believe that $60,000 will employ all the agents necessary to prevent depredations upon the public timber of the country.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, I have always differed with my colleagues from the West in regard to this subject. They must have been very unfortunate in the class of agents who served in their States. So far as my own State is concerned, agents have done us an immense amount of good. At different times they have stopped forest fires. They were the authorized agents of the Government, and when the fires started they telegraphed the Department for funds, and the Department telegraphed back to them, and they employed men and went in and stopped what would have been a disastrous conflagration.

Mr. CAREY. That was some time ago.

Mr. DUBOIS. I am speaking of two or three years ago. These agents of the public lands have in hundreds of thousands of instances protected the settlers. They have investigated the contests and they have been of great service to our people. It happened that two of the agents were appointed from my State and served in the State. That, I believe, is the proper system. I believe if that was done there would be no complaint, because the men appointed from the States live there after their term of office expires; they are responsible to the people; their record will be kept; and they are anxious to serve the people well among whom they live.

This wholesale abuse of the agents is, in my opinion, unjustifiable. It may be, as I have said, that the Senators who have spoken have been unfortunate in the class of their agents. I would much sooner take the judgment of the Senator from Virginia, for instance, or any other Senator on this floor as to the fitness of a man than to take the chances of a civil-service examination. The time has not come with me when I would not prefer an agent appointed through the influence of Senators or Congressmen to one appointed by the civil-service methods.

I trust this amendment of the committee will not go into the bill. If in the judgment of the committee they think $60,000 is enough, very well; but I would prefer to have $90,000.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, I do not think I am amenable to the charge of any personal interest whatever in this matter, as I have not been the subject of any patronage of consequence from that Department. But when I hear it said here, and conceded by all who have spoken, that the head of the Land Office, Judge Lamoreux, is a man of the highest order of integrity, of vigilance, and of economy in the administration of his official duties, it strikes me that we ought to listen to what he says in regard to this matter; and in doing so I am informed through the Senator from Arkansas, who has just spoken, that $120,000 is the lowest amount by which this service can be carried on successfully.

Mr. President, one thing we ought to do, in my opinion, is to discard this law requiring such appointments altogether and withdraw all agents, or we ought to provide for a sufficient number of agents to effect the object for which they are appointed. If that is so, we ought, for this purpose, to give $120,000 instead of adopting the amendment of the committee, which is $60,000. Upon looking at the bill I find that the committee have stricken out $90,000 and inserted $60,000. The other House, after a full and fair investigation of this matter, as I understand, have seen fit to appropriate $90,000 and not $60,000. That would enable the employment of perhaps some thirty agents.

Now, I understand there are only about 13 employed. In my opinion we had better do away with them altogether if we are to have only 13, considering the amount of work there is to do, or else we ought to provide for a sufficient number as is required by the Department. There are 600,000,000 acres of land that belong to the Government, scattered over 27 States and Territories. On the present basis of 13 agents each of them must look after more than 46,000,000 acres. On the basis of 30 agents, which number can be carried with $90,000, each will then have 20,000,000 acres to protect from depredation and fraud, which is by far too much for any one agent.

Added to that, we find, as has been stated by my colleague, by reference to the report of the Secretary of the Interior, in the last eight years, which, I believe, was the date of the beginning of this law in regard to protecting timber from depredations and to prevent frauds being practiced upon land titles, there has been a clean net amount of $109,000 paid into the Treasury by virtue of these agents operating under the law. It is true that in the last four years there has been a deficit of some $200,000, but taking the eight years together there is $109,000, as shown heretofore, which actually came into the Treasury from this source.

Not only is that the case, but Congress has recently legislated so as to require greater vigilance by creating forest reservations and granting permission to cut timber in certain cases. That has to be guarded and watched, and it increased the necessity for a greater number of agents. In addition to all this, we have the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior concurring in what is said by Judge Lamoreux. We have, in addition to that, the President, who has in his message recommended this. The President says that the force is inadequate, and that there should be a larger appropriation made to carry out the purpose and intent and spirit of the law.

That being so, Mr. President, I am inclined to support the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas. I do not believe these are useless officers, as has been stated by the Senator from Maryland. I think they are useful, as it has been shown they are; and I shall vote for the purpose of giving a greater number, so as to increase those officers, for I believe them to be necessary to the interest of the Government.

Furthermore, as to the point made by the Senator from Colorado, the remedy is right here. If a few bad men have gone into that country under the appointment of the Administration, and have acted badly, it is no reason that all of them should be so. I have the acquaintance of one or two whom I know to be very high and honorable and capable men. One of them is from my own State; and he informs me that the process which was going on there in investigating these matters has been stopped, and stopped right at a point that is dangerous to the Government; and the appropriation ought to be made so as to complete the work that is already on hand.

To remedy the objection made by the Senator from Colorado, there is a clause in this very paragraph of the bill that puts it under the civil service. Then, if the parties who are there are objectionable, here is the relief in the very amendment to the bill itself. I do not believe in the civil service going on so as to absorb all the offices in this country, but here it is presented by the committee, and it gives the remedy for the evil spoken of by the Senator from Colorado.

He should not object, while I do, to putting these agents under civil-service rules.

Taking it all together, when I look at these strong facts, that there are 600,000,000 acres of land, that there are only 13 agents, and that some 36, 40, or 50 more, in all, would be needed, I think we ought either to wipe out the law or give that which is required by the man who stands at the head of the Land Department, and who is supposed to know what is necessary, and in whom we have faith and believe him to be economical, honest, faithful, and capable. Therefore I shall favor the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not care to continue this discussion. I believe in the last Congress we appropriated $60,000 for this service. The committee thought that it was ample, and propose to keep the appropriation the same. At the session before we appropriated $40,000.

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] has stated very clearly, and I will not repeat it, why we do not now need these great appropriations. It is because of the changed conditions of the land system and the timber system. In my judgment 13 men well selected are ample for the purpose. I am very well satisfied that with $60,000 we shall get better service and better men than we would get with $120,000.

I have not any fault to find with the present force so far as I know anything about it. I have not heard any complaint of it, but I do know that when a great number of them are employed you are liable to have the same complaint that has been very justly made here on the floor of the Senate. That is not the fault of any official. Nobody condemns the Secretary of the Interior when these men are spoken of disparagingly, because he can not know. I have had some experience in the matter. I found after I had gone out of office that I had had just as bad men in office under me in this service as anybody ever did have, I think. I believe that in the present condition, considering the changed relations of the people to the timber and the land, by reason of the enactment of new laws, $60,000 is better now than $120,000 was five years ago. I think it is ample for all practical purposes, provided the Department will select good men.

I repeat, I am not complaining that the men who are in the service now are not good, for I do not know anything against them. I have an idea that a small force is always more efficient than a large one, and that when there are only a half dozen men to be selected the Department will give a great deal more attention to the matter and select them with a great deal more care than they would if there were twice that number to be appointed, and they will be quite as efficient.

A few years ago there were large depredations in the lumber regions which swelled the great recoveries. There never was any recovery in my section of country that amounted to anything at all. There were two or three cases where railroad companies went in and cut timber. The railroad companies were assailed and judgments rendered, but the Supreme Court declared afterwards that the railroad companies had under the law the right to cut the timber, and those cases were reversed.

There was a great deal of complaint under former Administrations, I think much more so than now, as to the abuses by these agents. Last year we had an appropriation of $60,000, and everything went well. I believe the stealing of timber from the public land has practically stopped. There is very little of it done now. I do not think it is safe to entirely dispense with the services of some of these people. There should be somebody in the country who can keep a general supervision and see that the depredations do not go on. No complaint, I think, has been made that these people have not been capable of finding out all the depredations which have been committed, and when they do find them out they have nothing further to do with them, except to turn them over to the legal department of the Government.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I should like to suggest to the Senator from Arkansas, for I partially agree with him in this matter, that it would be better for us to take a vote upon agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations. For myself, I should like to support the appropriation as it came from the other House, at $90,000. I happen to know personally that very great abuses in regard to spoliation upon public land exist in the State of Montana. I saw myself a few years ago in that State, then a Territory, canyon after canyon absolutely denuded of every stick of timber in it by portable sawmills belonging to a great lumber company called the Montana Improvement Company. Millions of feet of lumber were cut and exported from that Territory and the Government of the United States never recovered a dollar, and never will recover a dollar.

Mr. TELLER. I think the Senator is mistaken. I think one of the judgments the Government recovered was against that company.

Mr. VEST. I believe a small judgment was recovered, but I happen to know, because a friend of mine sent me not long since, in a newspaper published at Missoula, in Montana, an account of enormous ravages upon the public timber in that vicinity, and appealed to me as a Senator whom he knew personally to devise some legislation that would stop this outrage upon the public domain.

Mr. BERRY. If the Senator from Missouri will permit me, I wish to call his attention and the attention of the Senate to the charge of Judge Laughlin, in New Mexico, printed in a New Mexico paper of January 7. Judge Laughlin says:

The depredations of trespassers on the Government domain, devastating the timber growing thereon, is becoming a most threatening menace to the forests and limited timber lands of New Mexico. This seems to be a growing evil and a source of revenue to those engaged in the illegitimate traffic.

That is from Judge Laughlin's charge to the grand jury in New Mexico.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I should like to ask the Senator from Arkansas if there is not a United States attorney in New Mexico.

Mr. BERRY. I presume so.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Any citizen who is aggrieved can go to the United States attorney and have an information and indictment found. It is not necessary to have as a middleman a depredation agent before you can punish a depredator.

Mr. VEST. I take it for granted you must exercise the ordinary instrumentalities in order to institute litigation. It goes without saying that in these subordinate officials you will find bad men, men who can be bought, and men who do not discharge their duty; but if you adopt the objection made by the Senator from Colorado as to this class of officials you stop all attempts on the part of the Government to reform abuses that exist in the public service. You must use human instrumentalities, and as a matter of course you frequently find them imperfect and even corrupt. I have not the slightest doubt that some good, and a good deal of evil, has come from this system, but you can not find a better one. It is useless to talk about stopping the entire system, and handing over the public lands of the country to bad men and corrupt men, who seek to use the timber for their own purposes. That great corporations have abused this system there can be no doubt. But I simply rose to say that I should like to vote for the provision as it came to us from the House.

Mr. BERRY. Very well, then; if there is no objection upon the part of those who agree with me, I will consent to withdraw the amendment and take the vote on the amendment proposed by the committee, which I hope will be voted down. If the amendment is voted down it leaves the appropriation $90,000, as proposed by the other House. I do not want to detain the Senate on the matter. If the Senator from Missouri and others who are friendly to it think $90,000 is enough, very well. I withdraw the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Arkansas is withdrawn.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, the questions connected with the adoption of this amendment involving a larger or a smaller amount are far broader and deeper than the mere question of the economy of employing a few special agents. We all know that there is nothing so important in the public policy of a country as the preservation of the land for the use of the people; that the homestead law of free homes to the people of the United States has been adopted by all parties and become a part of the legislation of this country for many years.

Yet, Mr. President, we know that under this law nearly the entire public domain has passed into the pockets and become the private property of a few individuals. We are confronted to-day with the question which presents itself in England, and is a subject of greatest solicitude to the statesmen of that country. Mr. Chamberlain, one of the leaders of public opinion there, recently said in a speech that the great question was how to get the land back to the people; that that was the great question for the preservation of English institutions and conservatism in that country.

So in the United States we know that this public domain, the most important of all species of property, has passed away from the use of the great mass of the people into the possession of a few individuals, and that tribute must be paid to them for the privilege of a home upon the public land of the country, which has been dedicated to the use of the people.

Mr. President, whose interest is it that the public domain should be unguarded? Is it the interest of the poor man who is to go upon that land, or is it the interest of the men of large means who desire to appropriate it for their personal benefit? The question answers itself. Is it better that there should be no guard and no protection upon the public land? Is it possible that the Government shall be so administered that suitable agents can not be found? Must they of necessity be corrupt men, bad men, men who can not be made responsible for their conduct?

Mr. President, there is no question so important as the tenure of the soil of the country. That tenure must be such that it will be more or less within the reach of the great mass of the people.

I have a paper here which will present some facts as against general assertion and statement. I am referred to the Report of the General Land Office for 1894, which shows that there are about 600,000 acres of public land now watched over by 11 men—600,000 acres protected from fraud and avarice and from superior intelligence by 11 men only. The land lies in 26 different States and Territories. In Florida there are about 3,000,000 acres, about 750,000 of which are unsurveyed. Of the 39,000,000 acres of land bought from Spain more than two-thirds, under fraudulent pretenses, have been appropriated as the private property of individuals.

Fraudulent entries are being constantly made by the corporations and by rich mill companies, leasing the chances for the poor men of Florida to get homes. The timber on these lands is valuable, and depredations are constantly being made, and every tree taken therefrom makes the land less valuable to the homestead settler.

The General Land Office asks for $240,000; the House of Representatives gave them $90,000, and the Senate Committee on Appropriations now cuts it down to $60,000. This statement goes on to say:

It would take several special agents in Florida to keep down the depredations and prevent the land from being fraudulently entered. The General Land Office asked for $240,000, and the House gave them $90,000; now the Senate committee cuts that down to $60,000. It takes about $3,000 to pay the expenses and wages of each special agent per year, and only 20 could be employed under the $60,000 proposed by the appropriation committee, and 16 men who have been in the service will be discharged.

If a large amount of land is surveyed, as proposed in the bill, the number of agents should be increased rather than diminished, as the lands will then be subject to the greed of those not entitled to them.

Larger appropriations should be made to protect when more land is made subject to entry.

In one county in Florida a mill company, located in Alabama, constructed a railroad 8 miles into Florida and denuded about 2,000 acres of land of the finest pine timber grown in that State. The special agent was surveying and estimating the timber taken from these lands when furloughed December 5 last.

In the West the railroad companies and other syndicates are denuding the forests of their timber and appropriating to their uses by fraudulent entries all the coal and mineral lands adjacent to the railroads and from 20 to 40 miles on each side of the railroads, and they now have men surveying and fraudulently entering said lands to the detriment of the settlers and those who may hereafter wish to settle on these lands. I herewith attach a report of the United States district court grand jury, clipped from the Daily New Mexican of February 2, 1895, Santa Fe, N. Mex.

Accompanying this paper is the presentment of the grand jury, which has been read by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY].

So we have the report of the General Land Office for a series of years, reciting in detail the enormous depredations of public lands, both in reference to private entries and in reference to timber entries and timber depredations. In California it is recited in these reports, which I shall publish with my remarks, if there be no objection to it, that a vast amount of land, amounting to millions upon millions of dollars in value, were taken away from the use of the people under the homestead laws of the country and put into the pockets of foreigners who have not even a domicile in the United States.

By unanimous consent the extracts referred to were ordered to be published in the RECORD, as follows:

During the year just closed 1,291,535.83 acres of land have been selected and reported to this office under the acts of Congress granting swamp and overflowed lands to the several States, making the total area selected and reported under said acts 75,748,385.76 acres.

From this statement it will be seen that, so far from this having ceased or diminished, it still goes on without check or limit. As population increases land monopoly by fraud increases.

I have observed in former speeches that the tribute imposed on the farmers and laborers of this country through this fraudulent monopoly of the land and the free homes of the people will exceed the entire cost of the civil war.

The total amount of swamp-land indemnity adjusted and allowed since the passage of the indemnity acts is $1,438,473.05 for cash entries of swamp land, and 572,306.49 acres patented, in lieu of swamp land located with military-bounty land warrants and scrip.

Mr. CALL. It will be seen from these reports that the people have had at least one faithful and fearless public servant, the Hon. W. A. J. Sparks, Commissioner of Public Lands, who has sought earnestly to preserve the public land for free homes for them. It will also be seen that the depredations and the fraudulent indemnity claims and the fraudulent corporation claims have practically nullified the homestead law and converted the public domain into a great holding for a few great corporation landlords.

The consequence of such legislation would unquestionably be to give to the States, or, more correctly speaking, to the parties interested in prosecuting these claims in the name of the States, the entire proceeds of the sale of the greater part of the public lands.

Depredations upon the public timber by powerful corporations, wealthy mill owners, lumber companies, and unscrupulous monopolists, though to a certain degree checked, are still being committed to an alarming extent and great public detriment. The Sierra Lumber Company, of California, and the Montana Improvement Company, operating in Montana, Idaho, and Washington Territories, against whom legal proceedings are now pending, which are being pressed with all the vigor possible under the limited resources of this Department and the Department of Justice, are bold, defiant, and persistent depredators on the public domain. Similar corporations and companies of less magnitude are depredating on the public timber in other States and Territories.

In 15 of the public-land States the swamp and overflowed lands, "made thereby unfit for cultivation," were granted by Congress to enable these States "to construct the necessary levees and drains to reclaim such lands." At the date of the original acts, in 1849 and 1850, it was estimated that 5,000,000 acres would satisfy the grant. Claims have been presented up to the present time for more than 75,000,000 acres, and patents have been issued for over 50,000,000 acres.

The area thus claimed is greater than the whole surface of the States of New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, Vermont, Maine, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, and West Virginia.

From 1850 to 1880 it was properly held that only such land as was wholly unfit for cultivation without reclamation passed by the grant, but since that time the State selecting agents have presented claims for alleged "low" and "wet" lands and for "bottom lands," notoriously the most valuable and available farming lands in the country. Up to the past year many claims of this class appear to have been loosely and inconsiderately allowed, thus contributing to the otherwise swollen proportions of this grant.

But claims for cash indemnity, based upon the alleged swampy character of lands preempted and otherwise purchased from the United States between 1850 and 1857, have already been allowed to the amount of nearly $1,400,000, and land indemnity has further been allowed to the amount of 572,000 acres; and such claims at the present time are more freely presented and more importunately urged than at any previous period.

In view of these facts, Mr. President, to say that there is no necessity for the employment of an increased force, that in 26 different States, upon 600,000,000 acres of land, 11 men are sufficient to protect the poor man, the homesteader, in his right to a free home upon the public land, it seems to me requires no answer.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, I am inclined to think, on the whole, that special timber agents have done more good than harm. It is true that men have been appointed who have levied blackmail, and they have become very unpopular in the Western States; but, on the whole, I believe that these timber agents have checked in a great degree the destruction of the forests, and therefore conferred a great benefit upon that country. I think their powers should be enlarged, and that a law should be passed by Congress taking charge of all the forests of this country, withdrawing the land from sale, that the trees should be classified, only the ripe trees that will grow no larger or better cut, and the younger trees preserved.

Under the present system great mining and milling corporations cut down whatever timber they choose to use, leaving the branches and tops, which shortly become dry, and after a few years fire runs through the forests, destroying all the small trees, and as there are no large trees to furnish seed the utter destruction of the forest follows. As much timber can be cut as is cut now and the forests maintained in their primitive strength and splendor and never destroyed. We can put men in charge of these forests, selling the timber, selling the stumpage, and cutting only the trees which are so large that they can grow no longer, destroying the tops and the limbs and giving the young trees a chance to grow, planting trees where they are too thin, and thus perpetuate these forests forever.

It seems to me the most important duty we can perform with regard to the forests in the arid region, where timber is so scarce and so valuable, is to enact laws for their preservation, as I have indicated, selling the timber fit to be cut and using the proceeds to preserve the smaller trees and replant the forest, and thus confer a great benefit upon the whole country, without any expense whatever to the Government. The first Napoleon did this for France. He caused the trees in all the forests of France to be measured and classified, and only those of a certain size were marked and cut each year, and thus her forests were preserved. The system which he inaugurated has been continued to this day to the great benefit of France, preserving her wealth in this direction. So jealous was he of this system, so determined that it should be carried out, that he supervised the lists himself, and in many instances the great Napoleon indicated where mistakes had been made in the selection of trees for cutting, and he severely criticised his agents if trees below the size indicated by the law were selected or destroyed.

Napoleon was the world's greatest civil administrator, and we can well profit by his example and preserve forever these grand forests from destruction and confer a great blessing upon posterity.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, I wish to make a few observations in respect to this matter, which I trust will be entirely devoid of any of the feeling which has been exhibited from various quarters on both sides of the Chamber.

We have, as has been said, a very large body of public land scattered through a great many States, covered with valuable timber. The question is, whether that land ought to be protected from depredations, and, if so, by what means can it be best protected? That very great depredations are made upon it is proven by the recoveries, which represent probably but a very small part of the actual injury inflicted, as was well said by the Senator from Missouri.

We now have a system of appointing officers or agents, who go about over the public lands seeking to discover the guilty authors of the depredations upon timber.

Is there any better system to be devised? If not, ought not this system to be maintained? We have been reckoning here this morning the amount of recoveries as contrasted with the expenditures made; but that is a very poor way, however, to reckon the value of the agents employed. They ought to do a great deal more service in protecting the timber lands from depredations than merely in recovering damages for depredations made. If it be true that the recoveries of actual damages far exceed the expenditures made, how much that tends to prove the necessity for maintaining a system of this kind. Until some better system can be suggested—I never heard of any better one being proposed—why should we not maintain this one fairly? If we are to appoint special agents, if we are to undertake to maintain this system, to submit it to the government of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office, we ought to deal with them in respect to those as we deal in other matters with respect to other officers of the Department. We take their judgment and reason. Here is a case in which it is proposed to give to the Department in such an important matter as this only one-quarter of what is esteemed to be absolutely necessary in order to protect the public property from common plunder. It certainly seems to me that the House of Representatives made a very moderate provision, and I for one trust that the amendment which the committee has proposed will not be agreed to, but that the provision which the other House has made, moderate as it is, little more than one-third of what the Department esteemed necessary, will be allowed to remain.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GORMAN. I call for the yeas and nays on the amendment. The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote.

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE].

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question I withhold my vote.

Mr. WHITE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUR]. Not knowing how he would vote I withhold my vote.

The roll call was completed.

Mr. HIGGINS (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. McPHERSON] has voted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. HIGGINS. I withdraw my vote, not knowing how that Senator would vote if present.

Mr. VILAS. I have a general pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL]. Not knowing how he would vote I withhold my vote.

Mr. McLAURIN. I desire to say that my colleague [Mr. GEORGE] is unable to attend the sessions of the Senate to-day by reason of sickness.

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—30.

Aldrich,	Dixon,	McMillan,	Pugh,

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BERRY. I give notice that I reserve the amendment which has just been agreed to for a separate vote in the Senate.

I desire to make the point of order on the next amendment in regard to putting these officials under the civil-service law. The question was decided the other day upon the same point. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] offered an amendment to put consuls of the United States under the civil-service law, and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], as I remember, made the point of order against it, and the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts was held not to be in order. I make that point against the amendment which is proposed to place these officers under the civil-service law.

Mr. DUBOIS. I desire to offer an amendment as a substitute for the amendment now under consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the point of order made by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] be acted upon, and that will end the question, I think. The amendment changes existing law.

Mr. HARRIS. It is general legislation.

Mr. STEWART. Let the substitute of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 70, line 12, it is proposed to strike out all after the word "selected" and insert "from and serve in the States from which they are appointed."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho. The amendment reported by the committee will now be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 70, line 12, after the words "shall be," the Committee on Appropriations report to insert "selected under the civil-service law, rules, and regulations, and shall be;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That agents and others employed under this appropriation shall be selected under the civil-service law, rules, and regulations, and shall be allowed per diem, subject to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, in lieu of subsistence, at a rate of not exceeding $3 per day each and actual necessary expenses for transportation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Arkansas please restate his point of order?

Mr. BERRY. I make the point of order that this amendment is general legislation on a general appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What was the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. COCKRELL. My suggestion was that the amendment is subject to the point of order, being general legislation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has no doubt about that, and the point of order is sustained. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS], and the amendment proposed by him will be stated.

Mr. GORMAN. That amendment is out of order now.

Mr. DUBOIS. Then I will offer my amendment as an original amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The committee amendments are not all disposed of, the Chair will state to the Senator. The next committee amendment will be stated. The Chair will recognize the Senator subsequently.

The SECRETARY. On page 71, in line 11, before the word "thousand," the Committee on Appropriations propose to strike out "one hundred and seventy-five" and insert "three hundred;" so as to read:

For surveys and resurveys of public lands, $300,000, at rates not exceeding $9 per linear mile for standard and meander lines, $7 for township, and $5 for section lines.

It is proposed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] to strike out of the committee amendment, in line 11, the words "three hundred" and insert "four hundred."

Mr. DUBOIS. I do not feel like detaining the Senate with any argument in regard to this amendment. I think every Senator here will agree that there should be a larger appropriation for surveys of public lands. I know the Committee on Appropriations think so, and there never has been a time when the Senate has not voted an increase of this item.

From my own State alone petitions have come from men living on farms which have not been surveyed, but have been cultivated, and which would use up more than $80,000 during the next year. These petitions are from men living on farms which they have cultivated. Out of this appropriation of $300,000 our share fairly would not be more than twenty-two or twenty-three thousand dollars. We should appropriate at least a million dollars a year for this purpose. It would be to the advantage of the Government to do so. When those lands are surveyed they are taxed. In their present condition neither the General Government nor the States nor the counties derive any benefit from them. When they are surveyed the Government gets the final payment of $1 an acre. The expenditure for the survey comes back to the Government, and is to its advantage in every direction.

I trust the Senate will vote in this appropriation of an additional $100,000, and that the Committee on Appropriations will sustain it in conference.

Mr. SQUIRE. Mr. President, I never could understand why Congress should not be willing to make sufficient appropriations for the survey of the public lands, so that they may be occupied, and that settlers may obtain title to them. There is every reason for wanting the people who are congesting in the great cities to go to the West and establish themselves there and take up lands and make them their homes in a legitimate way. Still, there seems to be an almost impossibility to secure sufficient appropriations to have these surveys made.

Mr. President, according to the statement of the surveyor-general of the State of Washington there were last year 8,523,838 acres of public lands in the State of Washington which were occupied, but which were unsurveyed. Just think of it! These settlers or squatters are there awaiting the action of the Government to survey that land; they can not get a title; they go on from year to year, hoping and waiting for the Government to survey this land. They are already occupying the land, but can get no title to it.

What sense is there in continuing this policy? It is true we have in some years appropriated fairly reasonable amounts; but then, again, we relapse into merely insufficient provisions. As was well stated some time during last session by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, there was appropriated in the year 1885, $350,000; for the year 1886 there was appropriated $300,000; for the year 1887 there was appropriated $50,000; for the year 1888 the appropriation was $50,000; for the year 1889, $100,000; for the year 1890, $200,000; for the year 1891 we appropriated $425,000; for the year 1892, $400,000; for the year 1893, $375,000; and for the fiscal year 1894, $200,000. That appears in the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. President, what about the receipts of money from the sale of public lands? It appears that during about eight years, from 1886 to 1893, inclusive, the sale of public lands in the United States amounted to over $50,000,000, upon an expenditure for the surveys of only $1,790,000.

Certainly this is a profitable business for the Government. Besides, after sale by the Government these lands become tax-paying. Does it not appear that it is a proper thing for the Government to provide the settlers to an adequate extent with means of obtaining their homes—that is, as to the technical mode of securing title to the land?

It appears from the Land Office reports for 1892 and 1893 that there were received from the sales of public lands in the State of Washington, in 1893, $453,059, and that the net proceeds above the expenses of the sale of public lands in that State in the same year were $401,399. There are net proceeds of over $400,000 in one year. In 1892 the gross receipts from the sale of public lands in the State of Washington were $496,422, and the net receipts in that year were $440,381. So it appears with reference to other States. But I speak especially in regard to my own State, because in that State there have been the greatest sales of public lands of any State in the Union.

It appears that the receipts from public lands in the State of Montana in 1893 were $306,190, and the net receipts in that State for the same year were $274,613. In the State of Wyoming the gross receipts were $90,640 and the net receipts $78,495. In Idaho the gross receipts were $162,230 and the net receipts $138,475. In Oregon the gross receipts were $422,600 and the net receipts $380,235. In Utah the gross receipts were $94,637 and the net receipts $84,387.

In the State of Colorado the gross receipts were $369,317, and the net receipts $295,884. It will be seen that the net amount received from the sale of public lands in the State of Washington alone in 1893, and the same is true of 1892, was largely in excess of the entire amount appropriated for the surveys of public lands in the whole of the United States.

I do not think it is necessary to argue this question any longer, but I appeal, in behalf of the people of my State, who want to be able to get title to the land on which they have already settled, for an adequate amount. As the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] has well stated, there ought to be a million dollars appropriated annually for the surveys of public lands.

Some of the other States have had more money expended in them relatively than the State of Washington. I do not know but that there ought to be some system of division of the moneys better than that heretofore adopted. At least $50,000 is required for surveys in the State of Washington this year. I am assured that surveys in the State of Washington have not been ahead of the actual needs of the settlers of that State, as 39 per cent of the vacant lands in that State are occupied by bona fide settlers, while 76 per cent of all its surveyed lands are so occupied.

I have before me a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of Seattle, Wash., setting forth at considerable length the reasons for desiring an increase in the amount of money for the survey of public lands, specifically stating that the bona fide settlers in various parts of the State are clamoring for surveys, as in the western ends of Jefferson and Clallam counties, and in the Grays Harbor region at the southwest corner of the State; and it is also stated here that there is a large demand for surveys of public lands in the county of Okanogan and Stevens County, in eastern Washington. The same urgent needs exist as to other portions of my State. The petition concludes in these words:

Feeling that the demands of these honorable and thrifty and courageous workers should be met with reasonable consideration from our Government, and further that the new lands be rendered easier of occupancy and cultivation by being surveyed, thereby aiding in relieving the "congested population" of many of our cities and adding so many more home makers and wealth producers to our body politic, the Chamber of Commerce of Seattle has instructed its president and secretary to respectfully ask your attention to this matter and your aid in securing a large increase in the appropriations mentioned.

The demands of other States for surveys are also to be fairly considered.

I hope the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho to increase the amount for public surveys to $400,000 will be adopted.

Mr. POWER. Mr. President, three-fourths of the public lands of Montana are unsurveyed. More than half of the lands of the settlers are unsurveyed. It is false economy to make small appropriations for public surveys. The proceeds of the sales of lands pay back tenfold into the Treasury, net, over all expenses, including the item of surveying of the land.

Referring to the timber depredations in Montana, the large corporations cutting timber there have stated repeatedly that if the lands could be surveyed they would then buy the land where the timber is located, and they would much prefer to do that to cutting the timber on leases made with the Interior Department. The mines in Montana are extensive. One mine alone uses 100,000 feet of lumber daily, which amounts to over 350,000,000 feet of lumber consumed in one mine in a year. That is the reason the timber is cut everywhere, and those who cut it are blamed and criticised.

The Senator from Missouri stated that the timber cut upon public lands was exported from the State. That is not the situation. No lumber has been exported. There is no call for it outside of the State. I mean by this that on account of the long rail haul competition from Minnesota on the east and Washington on the west prohibits. But there are millions and millions of feet cut on public lands for which the Government is not paid, and if large appropriations were made for surveys, so that the land could be selected, the people interested in cutting the timber would then buy the land; and they would prefer to do it. They are all responsible, and do not want to violate the law. But the requirements for timber in carrying on the mines are so great that it must be cut to carry on the different enterprises of the State. I hope the amendment of the Senator from Idaho will prevail.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I merely wish to state my concurrence in the views expressed by the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE], the Senator from Montana [Mr. POWER], and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS]. There is a vast area of land in my State, as there is in the other States, not surveyed, and upon which the settlers have located. It is not only in their interest, but it is in the Government's interest that the matter should be closed up. There are frequent disputes as to boundary lines. In California, where Mexican grants are frequently encountered, it is a question sometimes whether the land was properly located, and often it is necessary to ascertain from Government surveys of adjacent lands just how the coterminous boundaries are situated and where they are located. This is not an infrequent case, but one which is a matter met with almost every day.

I have received letters by the score from people, in good faith, who have settled upon public lands in California, and do not know why they have not been able to obtain surveys. I can see no good reason why the Government of the United States should invite settlers to occupy the public lands and should not also provide for their speedy survey. There is, as I have observed, no economy in small appropriations, because the theory is that in the end the money will have to be expended. Above all things it is necessary for the settler to have his title if he is to improve his land and make it that which he hopes to establish, his home. Hence it appears to me there should be liberality displayed in this regard, not in the interest of any section, not in the interest of the States where the land is located, but in the interest of the Government itself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Arkansas in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I offer an amendment to come in after line 5, on page 2. It is an amendment for a public building authorized by an act of Congress passed at the present session.

The SECRETARY. After line 5, page 2, insert:

For post-office and other Government offices at Brockton, Mass.: For securing a site and for the construction of the public building, $25,000; and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to contract for the completion of said building within the limit of cost prescribed in the law, subject to the appropriations to be made by Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] made a reservation as to an amendment to come in at the end of line 18, page 27.

Mr. FRYE. I offer an amendment to come in at that point.

The SECRETARY. After line 18, on page 27, insert:

That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to convene, from time to time as he may deem proper, a board, to be composed of three surgeons of the Marine-Hospital Service, to examine and report upon all officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service who, through no vicious habits of their own, have become or may hereafter become incapacitated by reason of the infirmities of age or physical or mental disability to efficiently perform the duties of their respective offices. And such officers as, under the terms of this act, may be reported by said board to be permanently incapacitated shall be placed on waiting orders out of the line of promotion, and the vacancies thereby created in the active list of the officers shall be filled by promotion in the order of seniority, as now provided by law: Provided, however, That no such promotion shall be made until the professional qualifications of the candidate shall have been determined by written examination before a board of officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service convened by the Secretary of the Treasury for that purpose: Provided further, That the number of officers upon the active list now authorized by law shall not be increased by this act; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to make all necessary regulations, not inconsistent with law, to properly and impartially carry into effect the provisions of this act and for the general government of the Revenue-Cutter Service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine offer it as an amendment to the amendment?

Mr. FRYE. As an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to reserve any point of order on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. COCKRELL. I reserve the point of order on it. If the Senator desires to make a statement I will not make the point now.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to make a statement, and I confess I should like to have more Senators present when the statement is made. It is a very important matter, and I should like to have an intelligent decision of the question if it is put to a vote.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let there be a call of the Senate, then.

Mr. FRYE. I suggest that there is no quorum present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Dubois,	McLaurin,	Pugh,
Allen,	Faulkner,	McPherson,	Quay,
Bate,	Frye,	Manderson,	Roach,
Blackburn,	Gallinger,	Mantle,	Squire,
Blanchard,	Gibson,	Mills,	Teller,
Butler,	Gorman,	Mitchell, Oreg.	Tarpie,
Cañero,	Gray,	Mitchell, Wis.	Vest,
Cameron,	Hansbrough,	Palmer,	Vilas,
Cockrell,	Hawley,	Pasco,	Walsh,
Daniel,	Higgins,	Peffer,	White,
Davis,	Huston,	Perkins,	Wilson, Wash.
Dixon,	Jones, Ark.	Pettigrew,	Wolcott.
	Lindsay,	Platt,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I should like the attention of the Senate for a very few minutes. I have offered an amendment to the provision in the bill for the construction of a revenue cutter which retires the present disabled officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service. I believe it to be germane and in order. There are several provisions in the bill and there have been in other bills for the last four or five years for the construction of revenue cutters. I say to the Senate, from information, that you may build as many cutters as you please, you will have no officers to put into them.

There are thirty disabled officers in the Revenue-Cutter Service to-day, men from 68 to 94 years of age, men who were disabled by the civil war, men who have been disabled in the service to which they belong. No Secretary of the Treasury will for one moment think of discharging those officers and throwing some of them, if he did, into the poorhouse over the hill. They have served all their lives here. It is one of the best arms of the national service to-day. It is one of the most deserving. It supplies the best sailors we have outside the fishermen to-day. It supplies the only officers in the Navy who are capable of and understand the piloting on the Pacific and Atlantic coasts. It is crippled and has been crippled for ten years, because of the disabled officers at the head of the list who can not be retired and whom the Secretary of the Treasury will not discharge. Let me give a statement as to them which I made when the bill as to these officers was reported from the Committee on Commerce:

"Of the 207 officers borne upon the last official register of the cutter service there are 17, the youngest of whom will have reached the age of 63 at this time. Of this number (17) 1 is 90, 1 is 91, 1 is 77, 2 are 72, 2 are 70, 2 are 69, 2 are 68, 2 are 65, 1 is 63, and 2 are 62. Thirteen others have become physically unfit for duty from disease contracted in the service, and some among them are suffering now from old wounds received in the war. The total number, then, who would be eligible for retirement under the provisions of this amendment is 30. Without exception these officers entered the service originally in the prime and vigor of young manhood, and they have all served the Government faithfully for more than half a lifetime. Seventeen of the 30 served in the Volunteer Navy during the war. Twenty-six of the 30 are kept upon 'waiting orders' while the other 4 should be off duty, being too old for active service."

The law permits only 220 officers. Out of the 220, 30 to-day are disabled by wounds or by age from rendering any service; and there they stand in their positions as officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service. No man in the service can be promoted while they stand there, and the limit of officers being fixed at 220 the country is deprived of the services of 30 more active young officers who ought to be in the service.

The service is older than the Navy, five years older, and it is no discredit to the Navy to say that it is the equal in importance of the duties it is called upon to perform. There were read letters yesterday which showed how the lives of these men were in danger in every storm upon the ocean which beats upon our coast; how they saved millions and millions of dollars' worth of property; how they saved thousands of lives. If you will go back to the history of this country you will find that in the first war, the war of 1798 to 1801, with the French, there were eight of these cutters acting under the Navy in the United States service. In the Seminole war there were ten of them in the service. In the Mexican war there were ten or twelve. In the war of 1812, in the civil war, in every war this country has fought, one of the important arms of the war service has been that of the revenue marine of the country, and it has in every war, too, been conspicuous. They were called upon to destroy the pirates. They have been called on for the last half-dozen years to protect the seals. Their service is more perilous than any service on the sea in the Navy.

You must remember, too, Mr. President, that these men have not shore duty; that these men are compelled to beat sea in every storm; that they have no homes except on board their vessels; that their lives are in constant and daily peril.

It may be said in reply that this is an arm of the civil service and that there ought not to be a retired list. Mr. President, in 1799 the following law was passed:

The revenue cutters shall, whenever the President so directs, cooperate with the Navy, during which time they shall be under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, and the expenses thereof shall be defrayed by the Navy Department.

I have just said, in every war, they had been ordered by the President of the United States to enter the service under the Navy.

Mr. BUTLER. That is the law now.

Mr. FRYE. That is the law now, and it has been the law since 1799.

Mr. GRAY. They are in the Bering Sea service.

Mr. FRYE. They are in the Bering Sea service now.

Mr. GRAY. And controlling it.

Mr. FRYE. They are in constant service, Mr. President. As I said, in every war the President has ordered them in the service of the United States. If you will look at the statutes you will find they provide for pensions when they are disabled while in the naval service and for promotions. How can this be compared to any civil service of the United States? It is essentially a war service, and they are an adjunct, an annex of the Navy whenever ships of war are required for naval service in battle.

Mr. GRAY. In military service?

Mr. FRYE. In military service.

Now, both Secretary Chandler and Secretary of the Navy Tracey reported in favor of the transfer of this arm of the service to the Navy. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] had charge of the bill here. For two Congresses we fought in the Senate to transfer this service to the Navy in order to save it from its crippled condition, and we were opposed in seeking to make that transfer. It was urged that it belonged under the Secretary of the Treasury; that it ought not to be transferred; and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], distinguished and influential as they are, succeeded in defeating it.

Mr. GRAY. By preventing a vote?

Mr. FRYE. By preventing a vote. Still the crippled condition continues. Now here is a chance to do our duty and to save this service.

The Senator from California [Mr. WHITE] suggests to me that when our ships were lost in the Arctic Ocean this service was called upon to rescue and to search for them. It is called upon on every occasion of peril.

The Secretaries of the Treasury for twenty-five years have called the attention of the Congress to the condition of this service and have insisted that Congress should put these men on the retired list, and yet Congress has been deaf. Secretary Richardson, when Secretary of the Treasury, called the attention of Congress to it.

Mr. LINDSAY. What was the report of the Committee on Commerce?

Mr. FRYE. In favor of it. The bill is on the Calendar, and a similar bill has been reported favorably in the other House. I understand that 160 or 170 members of the House signed a paper asking for a day to consider the bill.

Secretary Folger called attention of Congress to it in 1881. He says:

The service is seriously embarrassed by the large and constantly increasing number of officers who, through old age or physical disability, have become unequal to the performance of the duty.

He asked Congress to place these officers on the retired list. That was in 1881. Secretary Sherman also says:

The operations of the Revenue-Cutter Service are seriously embarrassed and its efficiency impaired through the want of some provision of the character proposed in the communication referred to.

That was a communication in favor of retiring these officers. He says:

A similar measure was recommended by my predecessors in their several annual reports for the years 1871, 1872, 1873, and 1876. The necessity for the relief contemplated increases with time, and is greater now than when the recommendations referred to were made. The number of line officers of the service is limited by the act of July 25, 1861, to one of each grade for each revenue vessel. The exigencies of the service require several of its officers to be constantly engaged upon special service, and so forth.

Secretary Carlisle sent a communication to the very last Congress, in which he called attention to the fact that this service was terribly crippled, and that something must be done; and said that if nothing could be done he must send these old men, who had served their country for fifty years, perhaps, over the hill to the poorhouse. No Secretary of the Treasury desires to do that. Secretary Carlisle sent only day before yesterday to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations a letter asking him to place this amendment on one of the appropriation bills, so that the service might be saved. He says in that letter:

The efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service has already been seriously impaired on account of the inability of a large proportion of its officers to perform active duty, and the Department has been frequently much embarrassed in its efforts to secure competent and experienced officers of proper grade to conduct important operations for the enforcement of the customs and other laws.

I beg, therefore, to recommend the adoption of the proposed amendment.

Now, Mr. President, I can say nothing more. Surely the Senate of the United States, from what I have said (and there is not a word of it open to contradiction), can see the absolute necessity, if this important and valuable branch of the service is to be preserved, of doing something now and on the appropriation bills.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, as the Senator from Maine has said, some three or four years ago I united with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] and with other Senators in opposing the merging of the Revenue-Marine Service into the Navy. I believed it was a bad measure. It seemed so to me in every aspect in which it was presented to my mind. But the proposition now made meets with my hearty approval.

There is no branch of the civil or military or naval service of the United States that is more valuable to the country at large than this force. It has been engaged since the beginning of the Government in protecting the revenue, in saving lives, and in rendering a great variety of service that could not possibly fall within the line of the Navy. It is a peculiar service. It is not a naval service, but it is a mercantile service. It is a service organized to protect the Treasury on the ocean, at the ports of the United States. It has been composed from the beginning of hardy, able, and brave men; men, as my friend from Maine says, who have been distinguished in war as well as in peace.

There is no part of the naval service that is more valuable or more useful, and it is used on every occasion whatever, when a naval force is probably not adapted to the peculiar service. It is used now in connection with Alaska, and it is used in all branches of the naval service, but it is a distinct body of men.

There is no reason in the world why the officers who perform such important duties should not have the same privilege of retiring at a suitable age and of being protected, opening the door by their retirement to junior officers in the full vigor of life. The proposition, so far as I can appreciate it, meets with my hearty approval. It is very unlike the measure that was proposed two or three years ago.

I shall therefore vote for this amendment with the greatest pleasure. I believe it will be a valuable aid to this important branch of the service. This is all I desire to say in regard to it.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I shall make the point of order on the amendment, but I reserved the point of order because I did not want to cut off Senators from a plain statement of the case. I desire simply to say in reply that this is as much a branch of the civil service as the collectors of internal revenue and the deputy collectors whose lives are endangered in the suppression of illicit distilling.

This is just as much a branch of the civil service of the United States as the ocean mail service, and those who go upon the high seas in charge of the mails which are transported to and from our country. I am opposed to it in principle. It is the first step towards a civil pension list. I am astonished that the Secretary of the Treasury and other officers approve and indorse and recommend the establishment of a civil pension list, for that is practically what this proposed establishment is. It is giving to this corps the right of retirement upon three-fourths pay, and then follows the right to pensions.

Mr. GRAY. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me?

Mr. COCKRELL. With pleasure.

Mr. GRAY. I interrupt the Senator, as he has given notice he will make a point of order immediately, and I shall not have an opportunity of saying what I would like to say. The statement the Senator has just made seems to be the objective point of all the criticism that can be made or has been made, so far as I know, upon this proposition. I would remind the Senator and the Senate that the only matter that distinguishes this from the other military service of the United States is that it is put where it ought not to be, under one of the civil departments of the Government. But this service itself in every other Government of the civilized world, so far as I know, is a part of the military arm of that Government. In England it is a part of the navy, and is entitled there the coast guard. In France it is a part of their military service. It is an essential feature of that service in this country; it is as much a military service as that of the Navy itself.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now, Mr. President, what do they do? It is for the protection of the revenue, just as the Senator from Ohio says. It is no more for the protection of the revenues than the internal-revenue collectors or customs officers—not one particle. I know the effort has been made to transfer them, and thereby make them a part of the permanent Navy and give them the right to pensions and to retirement.

This amendment is legislation pure and simple. It is to make a retired list for the first time in the history of this country for officers of the civil service, the Revenue-Cutter Service, those who are simply engaged in protecting the Treasury from false importations. They are here in this port, they are there in that port, and they have an easy time, just as much so as the collectors of customs, except that they have the greater privilege of sailing all around the coast. It is true when war comes they are called into it, and so are all civilians of the United States liable to be called into it, and so are all the other civil officers. There is no distinction to be drawn.

If this is not general legislation upon an appropriation bill there can not be any. I make the point of order against the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. GORMAN. I trust the Senator from Missouri will not make a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am bound to make it.

Mr. GORMAN. I hope he will allow a vote of the Senate upon the proposition. Will the Senator withdraw it?

Mr. COCKRELL. I will withdraw it for the Senator to make remarks, but I shall renew it when he concludes.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, a very determined effort has been made during the last Congress and the present to put this service exclusively under the Navy Department, which I have opposed. I believe it ought to be retained in the Treasury Department for various reasons. The naval officers ought to have nothing to do with the execution of the customs laws. But the justice of making some provision for the officers of this service is so perfectly clear that it seems to me there ought not to be the slightest hesitation on the part of the Senate to do it. We are appropriating now in this very bill for the Revenue-Cutter Service, and have been for the last year or two. The question came up yesterday on the appropriation to construct a revenue cutter on the Pacific Coast. Those steamers are being constructed now. They are practically war vessels, and they are more effective for the service South and in the Pacific and on the Atlantic than the cruisers we have built which have cost millions of dollars.

In examining this very question in connection with the Navy, I find that the opinion of the best officers in the service to-day is that the great want of the service is vessels of this class. In time of war they would be of immense service. They can do this coasting without being put in dry dock every five or six months. One of these vessels will go twelve months or two years without being scraped off. The testimony of the officers is that they are most efficient vessels in every respect, and the Navy is most anxious to duplicate some of them for their service.

At first they wanted the whole organization in their corps, so that nobody could enter it except through the Naval Academy. Mr. President, this is the only branch of the service that relates to war that the sons of fishermen and watermen, the captains who are thoroughly equipped for the service and have grown up from generation to generation in it, can enter the national service and serve not only in time of peace but during time of war. I do not wish to see that door closed by transferring the service to the Navy Department, but I do want to see provision made, as is made in the Navy, so that when they reach an advanced age some relief may be given them, and it may be kept an efficient service.

Mr. COCKRELL. I renew the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The Senator from Missouri has made a point of order against the amendment of the Senator from Maine, which point of order the Chair submits to the Senate. Senators who are of the opinion that the amendment of the Senator from Maine is in order will say "aye." [Putting the question.] Those of a contrary opinion "no." The ayes have it.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. MCPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HIGGINS].

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. WHITE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DUBOIS. I am paired with the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH].

The result was announced—yeas 46, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—46.

Blanchard,	Gallinger,	Manderson,	Roach,
Brice,	Gibson,	Mantle,	Sherman,
Butler,	Gordon,	Mills,	Squire,
Call,	Gorman,	Mitchell of Oreg.	Stewart,

So the amendment to the amendment was decided to be in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the adoption of the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. On page 65, at the end of line 5, an amendment comes in proposed by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 5, on page 65, it is proposed to insert:

Bounty on sugar: That there shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury to those producers and manufacturers of sugar in the United States from maple sap, beets, sorghum, or sugar cane grown or produced within the United States, who complied with the provisions of the bounty law as contained in Schedule E of the tariff act of October 1, 1890, a bounty of 2 cents a pound on all sugars testing not less than 90° by the polariscope, and 1½ cents a pound on all sugars testing less than 90° and not less than 80° degrees by the polariscope, manufactured and produced by them previous to the 28th day of August, 1894, and upon which no bounty has previously been paid; and for this purpose the sum of $233,289.08 is hereby appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

That there shall be paid to those producers who complied with the provisions of the bounty law as contained in Schedule E of the tariff act of October 1, 1890, by filing the notice, application for license, and bond therein required, prior to July 1, 1894, and who would have been entitled to receive a license as provided for in said act, a bounty of eight-tenths of a cent per pound on the sugars actually manufactured and produced in the United States testing not less than 80° by the polariscope from beets, sorghum, or sugar cane grown or produced within the United States during that part of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, comprised in the period commencing August 23, 1894, and ending June 30, 1895, both days inclusive; and for this purpose the sum of $5,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated: Provided, That no bounty shall be paid to any person engaged in refining sugars which have been imported into the United States, or produced in the United States, upon which the bounty herein provided has already been paid or applied for.

The bounty herein authorized to be paid shall be paid upon the presentation of such proof of manufacture and production as shall be required in each case by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and under such rules and regulations as shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

And for the payment of such bounty the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to draw warrants on the Treasurer of the United States for sums as shall be necessary, which sums shall be certified to him by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, by whom the bounty shall be disbursed, and no bounty shall be allowed or paid to any person as aforesaid upon any quantity of sugar less than 500 pounds.

For examination of claims and ascertaining the amount due and the prevention of fraudulent claims for said bounty, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is hereby authorized to employ two internal-revenue agents, in addition to those already provided for, and upon the same terms as to compensation.

That any person not entitled to the bounty herein provided for, who shall with intent to defraud apply for or receive the same, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall pay a fine not exceeding $5,000, or be imprisoned for a period not exceeding five years, or both, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. MILLS. I make the point of order on that amendment that it is general legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I simply desire to say a word—I have no objection to meeting the question of the point of order—

Mr. MILLS. I make the point of order, but I will wait to hear from my friend from Kentucky.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not propose to discuss the amendment at this time, nor at all, unless it is made necessary. I simply desire to explain to the Senate why this proposed amendment is not printed in the bill. The amendment, however, was submitted by me under instructions from a majority of the Committee on Appropriations, the final vote upon the amendment not having been taken until after the bill had gone to the Printer.

I simply desire to make this statement by way of explanation. The amendment I have offered is a committee amendment, sent here by a majority vote of the Committee on Appropriations, and I make this explanation of its not appearing in the print of the bill.

Mr. MILLS. Now, I make the point of order, Mr. President, that the amendment is general legislation on an appropriation bill, and forbidden by Rule XVI of the Senate.

Mr. MANDERSON. I hope the Senator from Texas will not make the point of order to this amendment at this time. It is a matter which certainly should have very full and free discussion. I know there is no desire on the part of anyone to do more than present it fairly in argument to the Senate. I realize that it is somewhat embarrassing to present an argument in favor of a proposition and address one's self to its general merits on a point of order. Of course, it is possible, under our liberal rules, to debate the merits of the subject on a point of order, but that is rather an evasion of the rule, and those of us in favor of the amendment desire to debate it fairly and without any waste of time. If the Senator from Texas insists upon the point of order we shall have to meet it by those indirect processes.

Mr. MILLS. I will withhold the point of order, Mr. President, so that the Senator may be heard upon the question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas withholds the point of order. The Senator from Nebraska is recognized.

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President, this proposition is one that comes to us with the approval of the Committee on Appropriations. In somewhat different form it came to the Senate with the approval of the Committee on Claims, quite different in its wording and somewhat different in its provisions, which differences I will briefly explain.

The amendment, as it came from the Committee on Claims, with the approval of its majority, provided for the payment of the entire bounty granted under the McKinley act on the sugar produced from the 1st day of July until the 28th day of August, 1894, when what we call the Wilson bill went into effect. It provided further for the payment on all sugar produced from the crop of 1894 of one-half of the bounty provided in the McKinley act, or at the rate of 1 cent per pound.

It will be remembered that under the McKinley act 2 cents a pound and  $1\frac{1}{2}$  cents a pound bounty was to be paid upon all sugars produced from either sugar cane or sorghum or sugar beets, or from maple sap, dependent as to the amount to be paid upon the polariscope test of the sugar. I shall not take the time of the Senate to show in detail the enormous advantage that came to the country by this bounty provision of the McKinley law.

Under its fostering provision, there resulted not only an enormous increase in the sugar production of Louisiana and great additional investment there, but a new industry, most important and of vast value to the country at large, was started in the West, and the experiment, which it had taken many, many years to bring to the fruition of full success in Germany and France, in a very short space of time became successful in parts of this country, and as the result of the direct promise of the Government of the United States that, commencing in the year 1890 and continuing to the year 1905, for a period of fifteen years, bounty should be paid for sugar produced, men who understood the business, who had the intelligence, the skill, and the experience needed to start it, embarked in this industry, and in the State of Nebraska at great expenditure of money, running into over $1,000,000 for the mere plants themselves, built and have operated for nearly four years two splendid sugar-beet factories.

In the Territory of Utah and in the State of California, also, sugar factories were started, all built under rather adverse conditions, notwithstanding this flattering promise of a bounty, for the farming element in the vicinity of all these factories had to be educated to that degree of intelligence required for the growth and production of sugar beets. There has been no profit, at least in the State of Nebraska, even with the bounty awarded by the Government under the McKinley act, as yet, to those who have produced sugar.

What profit has been made has accrued to the farmers of that State who have produced the sugar beet, for every year, by contract made before the crop was planted, the farmers have been promised and have finally received $5 per ton for the sugar-beet product of their farms; and at this rate per ton they can make a little money. At less than that, if they are to be paid but $3.50 or $4 a ton for sugar beets, the sugar-beet culture of that section of country will certainly cease, and I doubt whether there is any place in the North, in any of its agricultural sections, however rich they may be, however well adapted to the culture of this Northern sugar plant, where beet sugar can be produced at a profit if but $3.50 or $4 per ton be paid for the beets.

Mr. GRAY. May I ask the Senator what is the average production of sugar beets to the acre?

Mr. MANDERSON. As I now recall it, about fifteen tons to the acre where the conditions are the best possible. Of course, that depends on many things; it depends largely on the way in which the soil is prepared, the extent of the fertilization of the soil, the skill and intelligence with which the beets are thinned out, as the process is termed, during their growth, and the selection, in the first instance, of the seed of the beets which contain the greatest amount of saccharine substance.

Mr. SQUIRE. May I ask the Senator a question at that point?

Mr. MANDERSON. Certainly.

Mr. SQUIRE. I should like to ask whether the Senator can state to the Senate the relative value of the best sugar beets produced in America, in the State of Nebraska or in any other State of the Union, as to saccharine matter, and give a comparison of the value in that respect with the sugar-beet production of Germany and France?

Mr. MANDERSON. I can give it in general terms, and were I not very desirous of getting along rapidly, and of taking no more of the time of the Senate than is absolutely necessary, I could give it in detail and with exactitude.

Mr. SQUIRE. I only desire the Senator to state it briefly, if he will.

Mr. MANDERSON. I think it will suffice to say that under the cultivation in this country, particularly in California and Nebraska, where the climatic conditions are favorable for the growth of the sugar beet, it being remembered that the sugar beet is largely a sun plant, seeming to derive its saccharine substance from the rays of the sun—where these conditions exist the saccharine principle in the beet is very much greater than in Germany or France.

I think you may say in general terms that, with the saccharine in the German beets averaging at this time perhaps 13 to 14 per cent, the average of saccharine in the beets produced in the State of Nebraska is 18 to 19 by the latest developments. Indeed, there is on record one experiment in California where, taking not a single beet, not a few beets, but taking quite a large product of beets, the amount of saccharine substance was over 26 per cent—the astonishing fact being that over one-fourth of the beets which were thus tested was pure sugar.

We have made very great progress in the direction of the increase of the saccharine substance by simply making selection of the fittest beet. The doctrine of the "survival of the fittest" has been carried out to very excellent purpose and to an admirable degree in the cultivation of this most interesting of all our valuable food-giving plants.

Mr. President, with this impetus given to the sugar-beet industry it received a staggering blow when, by the action of Congress at the last session, the bounty and adequate protection was divorced from the sugar industry. It seems to me that that act were a piece of unfair, unrighteous, and unjust legislation. It was in the highest degree inequitable, and why?

In the first place, here was the contract upon which this industry was based. I call it "a contract," for had the transaction been between private individuals there would have been no question of the fact that it was contractual, and here the Government said to these people: "If you will invest your money and embark in this industry, which is for the public good, if you will embark in an enterprise which will permit this country to produce all the sugar which it shall consume—instead of producing but one-tenth, produce all, saving to this country an exportation in money of from $150,000,000 to $200,000,000 every year, which we now pay to other countries—we will for fifteen years pay you this bounty."

Citizens relying upon this governmental promise embarked upon the industry with enormous incidental expenditure. In the spring of 1894 before planting commenced, aye, before the spring plowing, during the winter of 1893-94, the sugar-beet factors made their contracts with the farmers, supplying to them the seeds which they were to plant, and contracting with them, as they had contracted in years previously, to pay them $5 a ton for all beets delivered at the factories. The farmers planted their seed, having prepared the ground the fall previous, and again giving it the preparation incident to spring by plowing.

Mr. ALLEN. Will my colleague permit me at this point to make a suggestion?

Mr. MANDERSON. Certainly.

Mr. ALLEN. I desire to suggest that the contracts for the growing of beets were made in December of last year, prior to the introduction of the Wilson bill in either branch of Congress.

Mr. MANDERSON. In December, 1893. I said during the winter previous the contracts were made, and am pleased to be corroborated by my colleague.

Mr. President, June came, and the farmers were at work during that month thinning out their beets, and most of the expensive work incident to the growth of sugar beets had been performed before the 1st day of July, and all of it, except the mere gathering of the crop, had been done before the 28th day of August, 1894.

Under the requirements of the McKinley act it was necessary that every man who proposed to produce sugar from any sugar-producing plant should, before the 1st day of July, make his application to the Secretary of the Treasury, setting forth the character of his factory, the number of places and the localities where he proposed to produce sugar, giving in much detail—prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue—the particulars of business in which he proposed to embark. Upon such application being filed before the 1st day of July, on that day it was the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to issue to this proposed sugar producer a license.

Unfortunately, I have not at my desk a copy of the application and the license, but before this debate shall close I will produce them, and show their exact nature. On the 1st day of July the Secretary of the Treasury issued to A B, the applicant, the license required by law, which licensed him to produce sugar under the terms and conditions of the McKinley act; and on the 1st day of July this license was issued, not only to sugar-beet producers in Nebraska, Utah, and California, but to the hundreds of cane-sugar producers in Louisiana, to the producers of sugar from sorghum in Kansas, to the producers of sugar from maple sirup in New England and Ohio, and all were warranted to go on with the business in which they proposed to embark, and to which they had been invited by the solemn promise of the Government.

Following this license, there was filed by every one of those licensed a bond in a large amount of money conditioned that they would comply in every respect with the law; and thus licensed and thus bonded they embarked in this industry. Between the 1st day of July and the 28th day of August, when the Wilson bill was pending in the two Houses of Congress, much of that time in conference between the two Houses, quite an amount of sugar was produced—produced, however, not from any cane or sugar beets which were grown during the year 1894, except a small portion produced in the State of California.

But that which was produced between the 1st of July and the 28th day of August was very largely produced from that which may be called the residue or the overplus left over from the crop of 1893. Take it as to beet sugar. In the crop of 1893 there were produced about 6,000,000 pounds of sugar prior to the 1st day of July, but of the sugar beets there were quite a large quantity that could not by the first process be converted into sugar, and this comparatively small amount was made into sugar between the 1st day of July and the 28th day of August. Yet the law was so unfair that, although it was produced, and although there can be no question of the fact that those who produced it were entitled to the full bounty of the McKinley Act, not a dollar has been paid them for the sugar thus produced.

The amendment which was reported by the Committee on Appropriations proposes to pay a bounty of 2 cents a pound on all sugars testing not less than 90° by the polariscope, and 1½ cents a pound on all sugars testing less than 90° and not less than 80° by the polariscope, manufactured and produced by them previous to the 28th day of August, 1894.

It seems to me it needs no argument to convince any man not only of the equity of that provision, but that in strict law it is a contract made with the Government of the United States which the United States should be quick and prompt to perform. It has been performed by the one party, as is suggested by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], and this requires merely performance by the other. In other words, it is simply an effort to collect a debt that is due and owing.

The second part of the amendment provides for the payment of not quite half the bounty of the McKinley act for sugars produced from the crop of 1894. It does not go so far as it should, in my opinion. I think it should go to the extent of the payment of the full bounty for the crop of 1894. The Committee on Claims thought it should go to the extent of one-half of the bounty for the crop of 1894, but the Committee on Appropriations have seen fit to reduce the amount of payment to eight-tenths of 1 cent per pound on sugars actually manufactured and produced from the sugar crop of 1894. That is but partial justice, but such as it is we must, I suppose, be content with it.

I believe as firmly as I believe in my own existence, that not only the progress but the permanency, the very life of the beet-sugar industry depends upon the payment of this bounty. I look forward to the time when in the political change that is bound to come in this country we shall return fully to the principle of protection.

Mr. PLATT. Before the Senator from Nebraska leaves the point on which he was speaking just now, will he permit me to ask him what the sugar planters did, in 1894, before the repeal of the McKinley law, toward earning the bounty for which eight-tenths of a cent per pound is now proposed to be paid to them?

Mr. MANDERSON. I will speak for the State of Nebraska, hoping that the Senator from California will address himself to the interests in his State, and that the Senators from Louisiana will tell the story as to the sugar-cane industry in Louisiana. As to the sugar-beet growers or producers in Nebraska, they had performed most of their part of the contract before the 28th day of August.

Mr. WHITE. Will the Senator from Nebraska permit an interjection?

Mr. MANDERSON. Certainly.

Mr. WHITE. We commenced even earlier in California, because of climatic reasons. The beet was ready for the manufacture of sugar at an earlier part of the year.

Mr. MANDERSON. I understand that in California, even before the 28th day of August, when the law went into effect, a part of the crop of 1894 had been converted into sugar.

Mr. WHITE. The crushing commenced early in August of that year.

Mr. MANDERSON. But in Nebraska, of which I desired to speak more particularly, the contracts for 1894, as I said, were made the winter before. My colleague says in December, 1893. The farmers did their fall planting; they made that preparation of the soil, its fertilization, which is essential to a growth of sugar beet; they put in their spring work; they planted; they cultivated; they performed that most expensive part of sugar-beet production, the thinning out their beets, for that part of the cultivation of beets is of the most intelligent character.

No machine can be invented by the most ingenious man which will perform that part of the work. It is a process of selection by the eye and hand, and it requires expert work. It is true a well-grown child can do it, but the child must be taught, and it takes a great deal of time to teach the child as to what beets shall be selected to be thrown out and what shall be selected to remain. All this had been done long before the passage of the Wilson bill.

As I have said, the manufacturers had applied for their licenses; they had given their bonds, and the licenses had issued to them the 1st day of July, and by the 28th day of August there was nothing left to be done by the farmers except to permit the beets that had been left in the ground to mature themselves. No further cultivation was needed after that date, for in September the beets are taken from the ground and carried to the factory, and there, by the processes which I have heretofore described and will not repeat, are converted into sugar.

Mr. President, I say I do not believe the beet-sugar industry can exist without protection, and that protection should assume the form of bounty. I think it was an unfortunate moment when the Congress of the United States repealed the bounty provision of the McKinley act, but I do not propose at this time to make argument in reference to that subject-matter. I firmly believe that if these people in Nebraska, who have had these years of continuous loss, are not awarded that which I say they are fairly entitled to from the Government of the United States this important industry will disappear.

I had an object lesson during the last fall that impressed me as strongly of the importance of the beet-sugar culture as anything ever impressed me in my life. As is well known, we had a terrible drought in the Western States last year. Usually in the fall of the year I have seen in Nebraska abundance of small grain and corn. We are the great corn-producing State of this country, and I have driven my wagon and have gone by train through miles and miles of waving corn ready for the fall and winter gathering. But how different the scene last fall!

I went over hundreds of miles of that State where there was no more vegetation of value than could be raised upon the carpet on this floor. There was no corn, there had been no small grain; and the only crop that was being moved to a market was the sugar beets that were being carried to the one factory which was enabled to exist last year. It is true there was a tremendous loss from the amount that should have been produced, but the beets stood the drought. Their sweetness being underground rather than above it, they stood the drought very much better than any other crop. It has been the great boon to the farmers of that State this year, giving them not only a little money, but much encouragement.

I believe that if this bounty, partial as it is—not so much as it should be—is awarded, at least one of those factories can continue as it has this year. We had two, but only one could be operated with profit during the year. I believe with the bounty we can exist until a change of political conditions will give that which I think this country demands, from the agricultural standpoint and from the standpoint of the general good of all, to a greater degree just now than it demands anything else, and that is a fair protection to the sugar industry, particularly that of beet sugar.

Without having before me the notes that I gathered for the purpose of addressing myself to this subject, I have given rather a rambling and disconnected statement as to the beet-sugar culture in Nebraska, and I hope the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS] will not present the point of order until other gentlemen whose States are so strongly interested in this subject-matter may have a chance to present their views.

Mr. MILLS. That is all right.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire at this point in the debate to send to the desk and have read a telegram relating to this subject which was sent to me this morning from Louisiana, but which is evidently intended for the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as indicated. The Secretary read as follows:

NEW ORLEANS, LA., February 25, 1895.

Hon. WM. B. ALLISON,

United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

Your petitioners respectfully ask for favorable consideration of the amendment to the sundry civil bill granting portion of the bounty on sugars produced in the United States from crops grown in 1894. While not sugar producers nor the immediate recipients of the bounty, your petitioners represent the banks, mercantile firms, manufacturing concerns, and exchanges of this city, who, together with others in distant cities, are the creditors to whom much of the money will go when paid by the Government, and who became such creditors trusting to the good faith of the United States.

The regulations of the bounty law were complied with by the producers. The bonds were furnished as exacted by the Government and accepted by it and many licenses issued to the sugar producers, whose sole remaining work to entitle them to the 2 cents per pound under the provisions of the law was to harvest the cane and granulate the sugar. Your petitioners knew and the Government knew that sugar had never been raised and could not be raised within the borders of the United States without protection, either direct as bounty or incidental as tariff.

They were justified in expecting and trusting to the continuance of this governmental policy, and dealt, therefore, with the producer last year as in previous years, because during eight months of that year the bounty law at 2 cents per pound stood on the statute books, because the first Wilson bill engaged that the bounty for 1894 should be paid in full, and when this was wiped out by the action of the House every leading man of the Senate gave promise that this course could not and would not be countenanced by the Senate.

Caucus promises of the majority of the Senate pledged the continuance of the bounty act to the 1st of January, 1895, and the personal, kindly expressions of the minority made one believe that the sentiment in favor of maintaining the bounty in good faith to the beginning of 1895 would be almost unanimous. Under these circumstances the sugar producers expended their own money and contracted debts to your petitioners and others to the amount of $20,000,000. Every expense, except that of harvesting the crop, was incurred before the end of August, 1894, the date at which this violent change without notice occurred.

They were obliged to advance the producers harvesting expenses, and these, added to the expenditures previously made, created a deficit, now that the crop is being marketed, of millions of dollars over and above the value of the total crop. Fairness and a sense of equity would suggest that the bounty, which should be paid this year, should not be less than the amount provided for in the pending amendment. Petitioners, therefore pray that your honorable body will accept the pending amendment as a compensating bounty for the crop of 1894, to save from financial ruin the sugar producers, to whom the Government promises were held out, and from commercial distress those who have trusted these producers in good faith on the policy and laws of the United States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Has the Senator from Texas renewed his point of order? The Chair understood the Senator from Texas to reserve a point of order upon the pending amendment.

Mr. MILLS. I was asked to withhold it until other gentlemen could discuss the question. If they are through I will renew the point.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is not advised as to whether any other Senator desires to discuss the amendment.

Mr. BRICE. If the Senator from Texas had not renewed the point of order I certainly should have done so, especially in view of the statement made by members of the Committee on Appropriations, that this is the report of a majority of the committee. That is entirely true, but there was a strong minority in the Committee on Appropriations against the amendment. I was one of that minority. I certainly shall not consent to an appropriation of so vast a sum, involving eight or ten million dollars—

Mr. MANDERSON. Oh, no!

Mr. BRICE. I can not consent that such an amendment shall be put on an appropriation bill against the rules, in the present condition of the Treasury.

Mr. PLATT. What is the point of order?

Mr. MANDERSON. I desire to correct the statement of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It is less than $6,000,000.

Mr. MANDERSON. Although one of the minority of the Committee on Appropriations, he certainly could never have read the amendment. The appropriation is not eight or ten million dollars. It is, as to the sugar produced before the 28th day of August, $238,000, and as to all other sugar the appropriation is limited to $5,000,000. If 1 cent per pound had been paid it would have been very much less than the sum stated by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BRICE. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut rose to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. PLATT. I desire to know what the point of order is. What ground is stated why the amendment is not in order?

Mr. MILLS. The point of order is that it is general legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. BRICE. And a claim as well.

Mr. MILLS. Yes, that is true.

Mr. PLATT. If I may be permitted, being on my feet, to say one word, I think the amendment is in order. It is not general legislation. It is a proposition that the Government shall pay what we think it owes, and the appropriation of money for that purpose; and that is all there is about it.

Mr. MANDERSON. That is all there is of it.

Mr. ALDRICH. The suggestion which I have to make is along the line made by the Senator from Connecticut. This is a new item of appropriation for a specific purpose to carry out provisions of law, the friends of the amendment claim. It has no provisions which extend beyond the present session of Congress or beyond the appropriations which are made in the bill. It is a new item recommended, proposed, in the language of the first clause of the sixteenth rule, by a standing committee, and is not subject to the point of order made by the Senator from Texas. That seems to me very clear.

Mr. BRICE. The point of order includes as well that it is a claim pure and simple. It is taken out of the jurisdiction of the Committee on Claims, where it is now pending. It is taken out of the jurisdiction of the courts which take jurisdiction of claims against the United States. It is assumed to finally audit and give final judgment and appropriate the money to pay a claim, and a disputed claim.

Mr. WHITE. If it be true, as contended by the friends of this measure, that it is not only a claim but that it is presented under such circumstances as to make it justly due from the United States, there can be no impropriety in inserting it in this bill; but it would certainly be eccentric in this body, after permitting the many measures which it has allowed to be voted upon in connection with appropriation bills, if it would now turn around and say that this matter, which, whatever may be said of it, is far less objectionable than many which have been held to be in order, shall be excluded from consideration.

While it might be asking a great deal to suppose that these rules would be interpreted the same way three days consecutively, yet as we have had almost a three days' consecutive interpretation the other way, it is too bad now, so late in the session, to be inconsistent. If we are violating the rule in presenting the amendment it seems to me that Senators who have participated in antecedent and glaring violations should retire when the subject is now being debated or cast their vote consistently with those that they have heretofore registered in this Chamber.

Mr. President, it has come to be the case, as the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] stated some time ago in this Chamber, that when the Senate desires to make an appropriation it will make it, rule or no rule. One of the features of the rules that has been spoken of with admiration undisguised is that they are only to be observed when Senators are antagonistic to the legislation proposed.

Perhaps one good will result from all this, and we may some day adopt a rule to which we may occasionally adhere. But it is too late now to suggest any change in the almost uniform disregard of the rules in this particular. It would be unjust discrimination to hold at this late date that this amendment, which, I think, is under any circumstances, a proper one under the rules, should be disregarded upon the theory that the time had come when the Senate looked upon all appropriations as improper, except those which, in the strictest sense, were within the rule referred to by the Senator from Texas.

Mr. MANDERSON. I think the Senator might well supplement his excellent remarks with the further suggestion that here is a bill that comes to us from another body bristling with matters of general legislation and with private claims, and yet the proposition is that the Senate, a coordinate branch, shall emasculate its legislative powers and not place upon the bill similar provisions, because it is against the strict construction of rules made by a majority of the body.

Mr. WHITE. I will state that, in my judgment, almost every paragraph of the bill negatives the point of order made.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, before the point of order is determined I desire to submit simply a word.

One of the beet-sugar factories of which my colleague has spoken is located in the county in which I reside. I have some personal knowledge of the way it has been conducted, and of the culture of beets in the State of Nebraska. It is well known that I am not in favor of what are known as protective laws. I do not propose to discuss that question at this time. I simply desire to discuss what I regard as the legal and moral feature of this amendment. In 1890 Congress passed the so-called McKinley act providing—

That on and after July 1, 1891, and until July 1, 1905, there shall be paid, from any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, under the provisions of section 3639 of the Revised Statutes, to the producer of sugar testing not less than 90° by the polariscope, from beets, sorghum, or sugar-cane grown within the United States, or from maple sap produced within the United States, a bounty of 2 cents per pound; and upon such sugar testing less than 90° by the polariscope, and not less than 80°, a bounty of 1½ cents per pound, under such rules and regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe.

On the strength of that act two factories were erected in the State of Nebraska. Certainly the one which was erected in the county in which I reside was erected after the passage and approval of the act, and after it became operative by its terms. The one erected at Grand Island, in Hall County, in my State, I think was erected also after the passage of the act; but of that I am not so certain.

Congress offered to the persons who saw fit to develop the beet-sugar industry a bounty of 2 cents per pound upon all the beet sugar they produced, and upon the strength of that there were invested in the State of Nebraska, I should say, fully a million and a half dollars in the construction of beet-sugar factories, and in the outlay of money incident to the growing of beets, their proper cultivation, and their conversion into sugar. I believe that if the Government had the power to pass that bounty act, this is not only a moral obligation but a legal contract.

Under our form of Government we prohibit the States from passing laws impairing the obligation of contracts, but we retain that power ourselves. The General Government retains that power. I suppose, as a matter of strict power, it may repudiate a contract. But when the Government offers to a citizen to extend certain legal protection or certain legal benefits to him for a definite length of time if he will invest his capital, I know no reason why the Government should not in morals, as well as in law, be bound by its offer. Then, the act of 1890 provide that—

The producer of said sugar to be entitled to said bounty shall have first filed prior to July 1st of each year with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue a notice of the place of production, with a general description of the machinery and methods to be employed by him, with an estimate of the amount of sugar proposed to be produced in the current or next ensuing year, including the number of maple trees to be tapped, and an application for a license to so produce, to be accompanied by a bond in a penalty, and with sureties to be approved by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, conditioned that he will faithfully observe all rules and regulations that shall be prescribed for such manufacture and production of sugar.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, upon receiving the application and bond hereinbefore provided for, shall issue to the applicant a license to produce sugar from sorghum, beets, or sugar cane grown within the United States, or from maple sap produced within the United States at the place and with the machinery and by the methods described in the application; but said license shall not extend beyond one year from the date thereof.

No bounty shall be paid to any person engaged in refining sugars which have been imported into the United States, or produced in the United States upon which the bounty herein provided for has already been paid or applied for, etc.

Under this law the beet-sugar factories in the State of Nebraska contracted in the fall of 1893 for the raising of their beets. My recollection is that the two factories have grown about 10,000 acres yearly of beets; possibly a little more, certainly not any less. They contract after the crop is raised, in the fall, when the beets are taken from the ground. They then renew their contracts with the farmers for the raising of the beets the next year. It is true that in 1893 they contracted to give the farmer $1 a ton more than they had given the previous year, and that, too, upon the strength of the provisions of the McKinley act by which they were to receive a bounty of 2 cents a pound.

I believe that when the Government made this offer, and when the Government issued a license to the grower of sugar beets and the grower of cane whenever he engaged in the production of that article, it became a binding obligation upon the Government.

While I am opposed to a system of bounties and a system of protection, I do not think that a great Government like this can afford to repudiate contracts which are made with its citizens. Therefore I am decidedly in favor of this amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair submits to the Senate the question, Is the pending amendment in order?

Mr. GORMAN. On that let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH]. I do not know how he would vote, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. DUBOIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD].

Mr. PETTIGREW (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. WHITE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP], but I have ascertained that he holds the same view with reference to this matter that I do, and I will accordingly vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MANDERSON. I will state that I have a telegram from the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP] requesting that he be paired in favor of the amendment.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon (after having voted in the negative). I desire to inquire whether the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted, the Chair is advised.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I should like to know if any Senator is able to speak for him in regard to this amendment. He is my general pair, and of course I desire to observe the pair if necessary.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. I am his colleague, but I can not answer.

Mr. CAFFERY. I know that the Senator from Wisconsin is in favor of the bounty amendment.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. How would he vote on this proposition?

Mr. CAFFERY. I am not prepared to say.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I will withdraw my vote for the present. If I were permitted to vote I should vote "nay."

Mr. MANDERSON. I have received a telegram from the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP] authorizing me to pair him on this proposition. The Senator from Montana [Mr. POWER] has kindly consented to pair with him.

Mr. POWER (after having voted in the negative). I withdraw my vote and announce my pair with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP].

The result was announced—yeas 49, nays 16; as follows:

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order is overruled. The question recurs upon agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN.]

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, I had intended to content myself with recording my vote against this which I conceive to be an unconstitutional appropriation of the public money. But since I, as a member of the Committee on Claims, voted against recommending the granting of this gratuity I have been the subject of some adverse criticism for the vote that I gave then, and I propose to give now some of the reasons which influenced me in my opposition to the measure.

When I entered the Senate of the United States I took and registered a solemn oath that I would support the Constitution of the United States. I felt it obligatory upon my conscience to keep that oath so far as I understood it and was able to do. In considering the question whether this bounty should be granted or not, in my judgment, the first question that presents itself to the mind of the legislator is the constitutionality of granting this subsidy, this bounty, this gratuity to the sugar growers and sugar producers of the United States; and whether in keeping with the Constitution, which is the underlying law of the land, which law underlies the social compact which forms our Government, we as legislators could enact a law which would grant this subsidy to the sugar producers of the country or grant any subsidy or gratuity to any private individual.

My deliberation on that question has conducted me to the conclusion that the act intended or attempted to be passed into a law on the 1st day of October, 1890, was unconstitutional; that the Congress of the United States had no constitutional power to enact such a law, and that it not only did not become a contract, but it did not become a law, and was the act of the legislators exactly as it would have been the act of any other like number of citizens of the country who had held out this hope or inducement or promise, or whatever it may be termed, to the sugar producers of the country.

In one of the newspapers, which has adversely criticised my action upon this measure, I find it admitted that the act undertaken to be made a law, known as the McKinley act of 1890, is unconstitutional, and that the position which I have taken upon this constitutional question is correct. I read a short extract from it.

Senator McLAURIN believes that bounties are unjust, nay, unconstitutional, and we most cordially agree with him in that opinion.

This is an extract from the New Orleans Daily States of February 18, 1895.

But I am not compelled to rely upon the opinion of the editors of newspapers; I am not compelled to rely upon critics who criticise my position on this bill, and adversely criticise the solidity of the position I have taken, that the undertaking to make a law granting a subsidy or a bounty did not constitute a law, and did not constitute a contract; but that it was a mere act unauthorized by the Constitution, and therefore void and of no effect. I say I am not prepared to rely on this; but we have the opinion of the court of appeals of the District of Columbia, the highest court of judicature in this District, composed of three learned and able jurists, conscientious and upright men, who have investigated this question from the standpoint of its constitutionality, and I want to say here that the decision of that court is not obiter dictum, but the question was directly presented to it by the case before it of The United States ex rel. The Miles Planting and Manufacturing Company, appellant. I shall read the opinion of the court, and I shall ask that it shall go into this debate in to-day's RECORD. The opinion was delivered by Mr. Justice Shepard, and is as follows:

Mr. Justice Shepard delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from a judgment dismissing a petition for a writ of mandamus. The petition was filed September 19, 1894, by the Miles Planting and Manufacturing Company, a corporation of the State of Louisiana, against John G. Carlisle, Secretary of the Treasury, and Joseph S. Miller, Commissioner of Internal Revenue of the United States.

Relator alleges that it is the owner of five different places, in the State of Louisiana, for the production of sugar; that under the inducement offered by the bounty provisions of the revenue act of October 1, 1890, commonly called the McKinley bill, it met all the requirements necessary to make itself a licensed producer of sugar thereunder; and that in compliance with the requirements of the law it gave the notice, filed the application, and executed a bond for $251,000 as required by the law, and on July 2, 1894, received the necessary licenses for the production of sugar at each of its said places for the current year.

The petition sets out the provisions of the said act, which provide that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe rules and regulations for the production of sugar, and, under the direction of the Secretary, shall exercise supervision and inspection of the licensed producers, and shall certify to the Secretary, after such supervision and inspection, the amount of money earned by each licensed producer who shall have complied with the regulations preliminary to payment under the appropriation made in the act.

It is further alleged, that the required rules and regulations were made and published August 18, 1892, and have never been altered or abolished; that in accordance with its licenses aforesaid, relator gave notice and made application for inspection and supervision, as prescribed at each of its said places of production, for the sugar-making season then about to begin; and that respondents refused to obey the law and denied the demand.

The prayer of the petition is for a rule to respondents to show cause why a peremptory writ of mandamus shall not issue, commanding them to carry out their said regulations and the law, by exercising supervision and inspection as therein directed and provided for.

By way of return to the rule to show cause the respondents filed an answer, in which they did not deny the facts alleged in the petition, but based their refusal to comply upon the grounds that the act required was not ministerial; that the law had been repealed by the revenue act of August 28, 1894, and that, if unrepealed, it was not a valid law.

Relator moved to quash the return as insufficient; but the court, holding to the contrary, overruled the motion and dismissed the petition.

1. The first question to be considered is: Is this a case (conceding the validity of the act in question) in which a mandamus can be ordered?

The circumstances under which an executive officer may be compelled to perform an official act, and the principles applicable thereto, have been considered by us in two cases recently decided. Seymour v. South Carolina, 2 App. Cas. D. C., 240 (22 Wash. L. Rep., 111); International Con. Co. v. Lamont, id., 552, the last of which has been affirmed on appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States (Dec. 10, 1894, 23 Wash. L. Rep., 1). Further discussion would add nothing new.

In the view that we have taken of the repealing clauses of the act of August 28, 1894, and their effect upon the claims of relator, we think it unnecessary to consume time in an examination of the details of the old law and the regulations made thereunder, with a view to determine whether the acts required of respondents call for the exercise of discretion, or are purely ministerial. If the act has been repealed, and the rights of the relator have fallen therewith, there remains no duty which the respondents could lawfully perform.

2. This brings us to the question whether the repealing clauses of the law now in force had the effect to at once repeal the bounty clauses of the act of October 1, 1890, and to take away all claims thereunder?

The repealing clause, specially directed to the sugar-bounty provisions of the old law, reads as follows:

"Paragraph 182. That so much of the act entitled 'An act to reduce revenue, equalize duties, and for other purposes,' approved October first, eighteen hundred and ninety, as provides for and authorizes the issue of licenses to produce sugar, and for the payment of a bounty to the producers of sugar from beets, sorghum, or sugar cane grown in the United States, or from maple sap produced within the United States, be, and the same is hereby, repealed; and hereafter it shall be unlawful to issue any license to produce sugar or to pay any bounty for the production of sugar of any kind under the said act."

This is not only a direct repeal of that part of the act, but also an express prohibition of any further payment of bounty.

It is contended on behalf of the appellant that the words following the repeal, "and hereafter it shall be unlawful to issue any license to produce sugar," must be held to show that "this repeal has reference only to licenses to be granted in the future and not to licenses granted and existing at the passage of the act."

The meaning of the word "hereafter" must be controlled by the apparent general intent. Considering the length of time that the bill was on its passage and the changes that were made from time to time in this repealing clause before its final passage, it is not strange that the phrase, as finally worded, should lack something of precision. But without recurring to the proceedings in the House and Senate or the debates therein, which are often unsafe guides to interpretation, we think it perfectly plain that the mere choice of this word and its collocation can not be given the effect contended for.

The repealing clause is one complete sentence, and the words quoted above are followed by these: "or to pay any bounty for the production of sugar of any kind under the said act." If it had been contemplated that the rights of holders of licenses taken out before the repeal should be respected and recognized as lawful, this intention would have been manifested also in an exception to the sweeping prohibition of the payment of any further bounties after that date.

It is an undoubted rule of construction that the special meaning or purpose that might, under some circumstances, be found to lurk in a single word or part of a sentence must yield to the plain intention disclosed by the whole.

The contention that by the use of the word hereafter the plain intent of the clause is to cut off the bounty only as to licenses thereafter issued seems far fetched and untenable. The clause making it unlawful to pay "any bounty" under the act then and there repealed could only have application to licenses taken out by parties under the old law while the passage of the new one was delayed. No new license could be issued, and consequently no payment of bounty could be made thereunder after the repeal of the old law; hence the express prohibition of payment could only apply to claims made under the licenses that had been previously issued.

It is further contended that the relator, by reason of its compliance with the law then in force, is not a mere licensee, but must be considered as a party to a contract who has acquired a vested right and property interest. Then, assuming this contractual relation, and the existence of a vested right, it is claimed that it is expressly protected and exempted from the operation of the repeal by the saving clause in paragraph 72 of the new law, as follows:

"Paragraph 72. All acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed; but the repeal of existing laws or modifications thereof embraced in this act shall not affect any act done, or any right accruing or accrued, or any suit or proceeding had or commenced in any civil cause before the said repeal or modifications; but all rights and liabilities under said laws shall continue and may be enforced in the same manner as if said repeal or modifications had not been made."

This clause is substantially like the repealing clauses of former tariff or revenue acts, and was not intended to embrace or to refer to the provisions of the act relating to the bounty. "These different parts of the act, in respect to their operation, have no legal connection whatever with each other. They are entirely separable in their nature, and, in law, are wholly independent of each other. One relates to the imposition of duties upon imported articles; the other to the appropriation of money from the Treasury for bounties on articles produced in this country." Field vs. Clark, 143 U. S., 696.

For the foregoing reason, it was proper, if not necessary, to enact separate repealing clauses adapted to the nature of these two separate and distinct objects; besides the revenue part of the law was not abrogated, but substituted merely by another for the same general purpose.

In view of the special repealing clause relating to the bounty provisions of the act, paragraph 72 must be referred to the provisions of the tariff act alone. The saying of rights and liabilities thereunder was rendered proper and necessary by the enormous volume of business done under the act and the difficulties and litigation attending upon its construction. An unconditional repeal of its provisions, thereby terminating rights and destroying liabilities accrued thereunder, would have been attended with great confusion and probable loss of revenue to the Government, as well as injustice to individuals.

Conceding the constitutionality of the bounty law, for the sake of argument, it is clear that the claim of petitioner by virtue of its licenses, even if it might be considered property as between third persons claiming the expectancy, constitutes but a step in the process of securing a mere bounty, or gratuity offered by one Congress which another had the undoubted right to recall. The authority for this view is overwhelming, and it is too plain to admit of question. Salt Co. vs. East Saginaw, 13 Wall., 373; Welch vs. Cook, 97 U. S., 541; Newton vs. Combs, 100 U. S., 548; United States vs. Teller, 107 U. S., 64; Penrie vs. Reis, 132 U. S., 464; Crenshaw vs. United States, 134 U. S., 99.

The claim under such an act is but a mere inchoate interest or right, at the best and no more a contractual or vested right than has uniformly been held with respect to the right of an informer, or an officer, in penalties and forfeitures under revenue or penal laws. United States vs. Morris, 10 Wheat., 246; Norris vs. Crocker, 13 How., 429; Dorheimer vs. United States, 7 Wall., 166.

Our conclusion, therefore, is that the repeal of the bounty provisions of the act of October 1, 1890, was immediate and complete, without excepting or protecting any such right as relator claims thereunder, and consequently there remains no duty with respect thereto that the respondents might or could lawfully perform.

3. The constitutionality of the bounty law has been raised by the respondents and fully argued. Whilst its decision might be evaded under our conclusion with respect to the repeal of the law, we think the question one that should be met and determined.

The situation is very different from that presented to the Supreme Court in Field vs. Clark. There the question was not distinctly involved in nor necessarily incidental to the matter in controversy. Congress had enacted the law, the Executive had approved it, and the executive officers recognized its validity and were engaged in its execution. The great pecuniary interests to be affected were not before the court and might have been injured without a hearing. Here the question is raised by the officers of the Government and its decision invited. The party at interest is the actor in the litigation, and began its suit with the knowledge that, if correct in its other contention, this question lay directly in the path of its prayer for relief.

The power of Congress to pay bounties to manufacturers or producers in order to encourage the manufacture or production of any article has never been passed upon by the courts. By the very nature of Federal taxation and appropriations of public money, questions respecting their validity are very difficult to be raised. There is no simple mode of challenge, as is the case in the States where the taxpayer, having a direct interest, can invoke relief through injunction, if need be.

We have already referred to the case of Field vs. Clark, and the manner in which the question there arose and the reasons for which it was not decided. Calder vs. Henderson, 2 U. S. App., 627, has been cited as upholding the power, but the question was not involved in the case. The question there was, simply, whether the inchoate right to the bounty of a licensee recognized by the law and the executive officers of the Government passed to his assignee for the benefit of his creditors, and it was held that it did. As between the parties it was held to be an expectancy which could be assigned as property, under the authority of Williams vs. Heard, 140 U. S., 529; Comegys vs. Vasse, 1 Pet., 193, and other cases.

The principle, however, which underlies the question, and upon which its solution depends, has, in our opinion, been time and again asserted and applied in the court of last resort in such cases, beginning with Calder vs. Bull, 3 Dall., 396. In that case, Mr. Justice Chase announced a sound doctrine as regards the construction of legislative powers in this country in vigorous language, from which we quote: "I can not subscribe to the omnipotence of a State legislature, or that it is absolute and without control, although its authority should not be expressly restrained by the constitution or fundamental law of the State. The people of the United States erected their constitutions or forms of government to establish justice, to promote the general welfare, to secure the blessings of liberty, and to protect their persons and property from violence. The purposes for which men enter into society will determine the nature and terms of the social compact; and as they are the foundation of the legislative power, they will decide what are the proper objects of it."

The nature and ends of legislative power will limit the exercise of it. * * * There are acts which the Federal or State legislature can not do, without exceeding authority. There are certain vital principles in our free republican Government which will determine and overrule an apparent and flagrant abuse of legislative power; acts to authorize manifest injustice by positive law; or to take away that security for personal liberty or private property, for the protection whereof the Government was established. An act of the legislature (for I can not call it a law) contrary to the great first principles of the social compact can not be considered a rightful exercise of legislative authority. The obligation of a law in governments established on express compact and on republican principles must be determined by the nature of the power on which it is founded."

The learned justice then proceeds to enumerate certain laws that might be enacted, and among them "a law that takes property from A and gives it to B," and says again: "The genius, the nature, and the spirit of our State governments amount to a prohibition of such acts of legislation; and the general principles of law and reason forbid them. * * * To maintain that our Federal or State legislatures possess such powers, if they had not been expressly restrained, would, in my opinion, be a political heresy altogether inadmissible in our free republican governments."

The impressive declaration of the limitations upon legislative power, pronounced in 1793, has lost none of its force or vitality through lapse of time, but has been substantially affirmed and reaffirmed in cases before the same high tribunal and others. (Loan Association vs. Topeka, 20 Wall., 655.) The point decided in that case was that an act of the legislature of Kansas authorizing and empowering cities and towns to encourage the establishment of manufacturing and such other enterprises as may tend to develop and improve such cities, either by direct appropriation from the general fund or by the issuance of bonds, was beyond the power of the legislature, and therefore void.

The truly great opinion of Mr. Justice Miller therein affirms the doctrine of Justice Chase in Calder vs. Bull, and advances it further in application to the great power of taxation. He says: "It must be conceded that there are rights in every free government beyond the control of the State. A government which recognizes no such rights, which holds the lives, the liberty, and the property of its citizens subject at all times to the absolute disposition and unlimited control of even the most democratic depositary of power, is after all but a despotism of the many, of the majority, if you choose to call it so, but it is nevertheless a despotism. The theory of our governments, State and National, is opposed to the deposit of unlimited power anywhere. The executive, the legislative and the judicial branches of these governments are all of limited and defined powers. There are limitations on such power which grow out of the essential nature of all free governments. Implied reservations of individual rights, without which the social compact could not exist, and which are respected by all governments entitled to the name. * * *

"To lay with one hand the power of the Government on the property of the citizen, and with the other to bestow it upon favored individuals to aid private enterprises and build up private fortunes, is none the less a robbery because it is done under the forms of law, and is called taxation. This is not legislation; it is a decree under legislative forms. Nor is it taxation. * * * We have established, we think, beyond cavil, that there can be no lawful tax which is not laid for a public purpose. It may not be easy to draw the line in all cases so as to decide what is a public purpose in this sense and what is not. * * *

But in the case before us, in which the towns are authorized to contribute aid by way of taxation to any class of manufacturers, there is no difficulty in holding that this is not such a public purpose as we have been considering.

"If it be said that a benefit results to the local public of a town by establishing manufactures, the same may be said of any other business or pursuit which employs capital or labor. The merchant, the mechanic, the innkeeper, the banker, the builder, the steamboat owner, are equally promoters of the public good and equally deserving the aid of citizens by forced contributions. No line can be drawn in favor of the manufacturer which would not open the coffers of the public Treasury to the importunities of two-thirds of the business men of the city or town."

The only dissent from the judgment and the opinion in that case was by Mr. Justice Clifford, who maintained the absolute power of the legislature of the State, save when restrained by the provisions of its own or of the Federal Constitution. The doctrine of the case has been sustained and followed by a unanimous court in two later cases, presenting substantially the same issues. (Parkersburg vs. Brown, 100 U. S., 487; Cole vs. La Grange, 113 U. S., 1.)

In the second of those cases, Mr. Justice Gray, speaking for the whole court, said: "The general grant of legislative power in the constitution of a State does not enable the legislature, in the exercise either of the right of eminent domain, or of the right of taxation, to take private property, without the owner's consent, for any but a public object. Nor can the legislature authorize counties, cities or towns to contract for private objects, debts which must be paid by taxes. It can not, therefore, authorize them to issue bonds to assist merchants or manufacturers, whether natural persons or corporations, in their private businesses. These limits of the legislative power are now too firmly established by judicial decisions to require extended arguments upon the subject." After citing Loan Association vs. Topoka, and Parkersburg vs. Brown, he adds: "The decisions in the courts of the States are to the same effect" (citing a number of them), and, "We have been referred to no opposing decision."

To the cases cited by Mr. Justice Gray, may be added the following, some of which were cited in Loan Association vs. Topoka: Opinions of the Judges, 58 Mo., 590; Curtis vs. Whipple, 24 Wis., 350; People vs. Salem, 20 Mich., 452; Hanson vs. Vernon, 27 Iowa, 26; Matter of Niagara Falls and Whirlpool R.R. Co., 108 N. Y., 376; Deal vs. Mississippi Co., 107 Mo., 464. The last case cited is directly in point here; the court holding therein that an act of the legislature authorizing the payment of bounties for the planting of trees upon private lands was an unconstitutional exercise of legislative power.

Lowell vs. Boston (111 Mass., 459), which was cited with express approval in both Loan Association vs. Topoka and Cole vs. La Grange, is one of the best considered cases upon the question of the power of the legislature to impose taxes in aid of private enterprises for the promotion of the general welfare. The act under consideration was enacted by the legislature of Massachusetts after the great Boston fire of 1872, and authorized the city to issue bonds to raise money to be lent to landowners for the purpose of rebuilding in the burned districts. In one sense in which this loan might be considered for the general welfare, and, in the same sense in which the subsidy to sugar producers is contended to be likewise, the purposes of the loan act were for the good not only of the city of Boston, but also of the State, and, in a measure, of all New England, of which Boston is the commercial metropolis.

This ground of support for the act was presented in a masterly manner, on the argument, by Mr. Benjamin R. Curtis, from whose brief we quote the following: "The primary object of the statute is not to benefit and aid private persons. Its purpose and ends are strictly of a public nature; to restore and increase the taxable property and resources of the State; to prevent and guard against the great evils and losses arising from so great and general a calamity, in embarrassing business, deranging finance, and seriously lessening the wealth and prosperity of a large and most important part of the whole people and interfering with their comfort, happiness, and progress."

To this argument Mr. Justice Wells, who delivered the opinion of the court, made the conclusive reply: "The power to levy taxes is founded on the right, duty, and responsibility to maintain and administer all the governmental functions of the State, and to provide for the general welfare. To justify any exercise of the power requires that the expenditure, which it is intended to meet, shall be for some public service or some object which concerns the public welfare. The promotion of the interests of individuals, either in respect of property or business, although it may result incidentally in the advancement of the public welfare, is in its essential character a private and not a public object. However certain and great the resulting good to the general public, it does not, by reason of its comparative importance, cease to be incidental."

"The incidental advantage to the public, or to the State, which results from the promotion of private interests and the prosperity of private enterprises or business, does not justify their aid by the use of public money raised by taxation or for which taxation may become necessary. It is the essential character of the direct object of the expenditure which must determine its validity as justifying a tax, and not the magnitude of the interests to be affected, nor the degree to which the general advantage of the community, and thus the public welfare may be ultimately benefited by their promotion. The principle of this distinction is fundamental. It underlies all government that is based upon reason rather than upon force."

In an analogous case Mr. Justice Brewer, speaking for the Supreme Court of Kansas, of which he was then a member, said: "Public aid to private purposes can not be secured by yoking them to a public purpose. And where the public and private purposes are attempted to be aided by a single concession the latter vitiate rather than the former uphold the grant." (Central Branch, U. P. R. R. Co. vs. Smith, 23 Kansas, 533.)

Nor was the decision of either of these cases made to turn upon a mere question of "municipal authority," but instead upon the broad question of "legislative power." As said by Wells, Justice: "The point of difficulty is not as to the distribution of the burden by allowing it to be imposed upon a limited district within the State, but as to the right of the legislature to impose or authorize any tax for the object contemplated by this statute."

The power here involved is one of taxation. The annual bounty for sugar production has necessarily come out of the revenues raised by general taxation for the support of the Government. The gross sum required each year had to be included in the estimates for annual expenses and considered in the imposition of taxes to raise the revenue to meet them. Call the subsidy offered by the law to the producers of sugar a contract, if you will; still it is necessarily one where "the right to contract must be limited by the right to tax, and if in the given case no tax can lawfully be levied to pay the debt, the contract itself is void for want of authority to make it. * * * The validity of a contract which can only be fulfilled by a resort to taxation depends on the power to levy the tax for that purpose." (Miller, J., 20 Wall., 660.)

In Field vs. Clark (143 U. S., 695) Mr. Justice Harlan, referring to the question therein raised as to the validity of the sugar bounty provisions of the act under consideration, said: "The question of constitutional power thus raised depends principally, if not altogether, upon the scope and effect of that clause of the Constitution giving Congress the power 'to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States.'"

To avoid any misunderstanding as to the scope of this decision, it is proper to add here that there are other delegations of power in the Constitution which expressly or impliedly permit the expenditure of the public moneys. Some of these have been mentioned by Mr. Justice Gray, in his opinion in Cole vs. La Grange (113 U. S.,) and others might be added, as, by general consent, arising under the war power, the powers to regulate commerce, coin money, establish post-offices and post roads etc. No one of these is involved in this case; and with their construction we have nothing to do.

The power to give the bounty to producers of sugar must, as we have seen, be referred to and determined by the general grant in the first clause of section 8 of article 1. That there is no pretense of any other authority for the grant is further shown by this proposition, quoted from the brief of Mr. Brent, of counsel for appellant: "The able men who enacted this bounty law never justified it upon the ground that a gratuity was intended to the licensees; but, realizing, with the statesmen of Europe, that the prosperity of the commonwealth would be advanced by an increased production of domestic sugar which, while giving an increased stimulus to agriculture, would, by avoiding the necessity of sending abroad a hundred millions in gold annually to pay for foreign sugar, give an increased stability to our national finances, determined, in pursuance of a national policy, analogous to that adopted in Germany and France, to stimulate the production of American sugar by offering to parties special inducements to invest capital and labor in the effort to develop the domestic sugar production in furtherance of such a national policy."

The power to levy taxes is one of the greatest, and to the citizen one of the most directly important, powers that can be exercised by any government. Within certain conceded boundaries it is absolute and unlimited save by the discretion of the lawmaking power. It may be used to cripple or even destroy an industry or a business. The only refuge from its inordinate exercise in this country is by the peaceful revolution of popular elections. In our judgment the true limitation of the power to impose taxes, conferred by the foregoing clause, is that the purpose must be public, that is to say, governmental.

"All definitions of taxation imply that it is to be imposed only for public purposes." (Cooley on Taxation, 67.)

"If there is any proposition about which there is an entire and uniform weight of judicial authority, it is that taxes are to be imposed for the use of the people of the State in the varied and manifold purposes of the Government, and not for private objects or the special benefit of individuals. Taxation originates from and is imposed by and for the State." Allen vs. Jay, 60 Mo., 128; Hanson vs. Vernon, 27 Iowa, 26, 47; Matter of Washington St., 99 Pa. St., 352, 363; Sharpless vs. Mayor, etc., 21 Pa. St., 147.

"Vast as is the power of the Government to levy taxes upon its citizens, there are nevertheless limitations upon it of a very distinct and positive character, which inhere in the very nature of the power itself. Some of these limitations are commonly declared in the written constitutions, but the declaration is rather from abundant caution than from any necessity, as the limitations are equally imperative whether thus declared or not." (Cooley on Taxation, 41.)

The authorities from which we have so freely quoted refer directly to the power to tax as exercised by the legislatures of the several States; but the doctrine which they establish is plainly applicable to the taxing power of Congress.

A commonly accepted doctrine with respect to the legislative powers of the States has been that they are general in their nature and to a degree absolute, except where restrained by the provisions of their own and the Federal Constitution, and the necessary implications therefrom. On the other hand, it has been uniformly held that the Government of the United States is one of "delegated, limited, and enumerated powers" (United States vs. Harris, 106 U. S., 636). In that case it was said: "Therefore every valid act of Congress must find in the Constitution some warrant for its passage. This is apparent by reference to the following provisions of the Constitution" (quoting sec. 1, Art. I, Art. X, Amendments).

Mr. Justice Story, in his Commentaries on the Constitution, says: "Whenever, therefore, a question arises concerning the constitutionality of a particular power, the first question is whether the power be expressed in the Constitution. If it be, the question is decided. If it be not expressed, the next inquiry must be whether it is properly an incident to an express power and necessary to its execution. If it be, then it may be exercised by Congress. If not, Congress can not exercise it."

This distinction between the taxing powers of the General and the State governments is well described by the late Mr. Justice Miller, in the following words: "The United States being a limited form of Government, one of the restrictions to which it is subject is in regard to its power to levy taxes. The States may levy them for a great many purposes for which Congress can not, because the States belong all the powers not delegated to Congress. Hence, while the Constitution of the United States has nowhere been amended by any limitations of its taxing power, there has scarcely been a State constitutional convention in half a century that has not imposed some restrictions upon the power of the State to levy taxes." (Lectures on Constitution, p. 247.)

If then, as we have seen from the cases cited, the legislature of a State has no implied power to grant subsidies or bounties to individuals, though, in a sense, the general welfare may be promoted thereby, a fortiori the Congress of the United States has no such power.

It would be an useless consumption of time to enter upon a discussion of the interpretation of the language contained in the first clause of section 8, article 1, of the Constitution; nor is it necessary to do so. Several theories have been indulged in that regard. Mr. Madison, in No. 41 of the Federalist, denounces the assumption that this clause "amounts to an unlimited commission to exercise every power which may be alleged to be necessary for the common defense or general welfare," and says:

"No stronger proof could be given of the distress under which these writers labor for objections than their stooping to such misconstruction." He evidently regarded it as a mere general expression and fraught with no special meaning as a substantive delegation of power. He says: "Nothing is more natural nor common than first to use a general phrase, and then to explain and qualify it by particulars;" and then refers to the fact that this language is "a copy from the Articles of Confederation."

It may be remarked here, too, that many of the State constitutions contain similar general declarations; notably in this the case with Massachusetts and Maine, in both of which it has been held, as we have seen, that bounties can not be given to individuals, in promotion of the general welfare. Let it be conceded, however, that the words, "to pay the debts and to provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States," are to be construed, according to the opinion of Mr. Justice Story, as a qualification of the preceding tax clause and as limiting "the taxing power to objects for the common defense and general welfare" (1 Story Const., 911); still the question remains, is the grant of a bounty to producers of sugar a constitutional exercise of the power of taxation as so understood?

We think the authorities cited above establish beyond question that the power of taxation, in all free governments like ours, is limited to public objects and purposes governmental in their nature. No amount of incidental public good or benefit will render valid taxation, or the appropriation of revenues to be derived therefrom, for a private purpose.

Although we have quoted liberally from authorities cited in support of these propositions, the importance of the question is such that we can not refrain from quoting from the opinions of the judges of the supreme court of Maine, in response to the inquiry of the legislature of that State, language which expresses our views perfectly:

"Taxation, by the very meaning of the word, is for public purposes, and for those the right of the Government is unlimited. * * * The general benefit of the community resulting from any description of well-directed labor is of the same character, whatever may be the branch of industry upon which it is expended. All useful laborers, no matter what the field of labor, serve the State by increasing the aggregate of its products—its wealth. There is nothing of a public nature any more entitling the manufacturer to public gifts than the sailor, the mechanic, the lumberman, or the farmer. Our Government is based upon equality of rights. All honest employments are honorable. The State can not rightfully discriminate among occupations, for a discrimination in favor of one branch of industry is a discrimination adverse to all other branches. The State is equally bound to protect all, giving no undue advantages or special and exclusive preferences to any." (53 Me., 593.) Again, it was said:

"But the subtle and sophistical argument of those who are seeking their own private advantage by the use of the public purse is, that the successful establishment of a manufacturing business, though the profits of it inure to private individuals, is indirectly a benefit to the community. But this is not an answer; it is simply a pretext for an invasion of the fundamental principle above stated." (Id., 609.)

If it may be for "the general welfare of the United States" to encourage the production of sugar by the grant of a bounty, it is hard to conceive why the producers of corn, wheat, cotton, wool, coal, iron, silver ore, etc., might not be paid a bounty also.

If Congress be conceded the power to grant subsidies from the public revenues to all objects it may deem to be for the general welfare, then it follows that this discretion, like all admitted powers of taxation is absolute. Such a doctrine would destroy the idea that this is a Government of "delegated, limited, and enumerated powers," render superfluous all the special delegations of power contained in the Constitution, and open the way for a flood of socialistic legislation, the specious plea for all of which has ever been "the general welfare." It is a doctrine that we can not subscribe to.

Still less are we able to subscribe to a doctrine that legislation may be enacted by Congress "in pursuance of a national policy analogous to that adopted by Germany and France," or any other government on the face of the earth. There is no inherent sovereignty in the general or in the State governments. The people are sovereign. Certain powers of sovereignty they have delegated with a free hand; others have been reserved. Legislation by the Assembly of France, the Reichstag of Imperial Germany, or the Parliament of Great Britain, where power is unlimited, furnishes no proper precedent for legislation in this country.

Our revolution began in a protest against the arbitrary power of legislation, especially with respect to taxation. The successful result of that revolution gave us our written constitutions, State and Federal, wherein the people, to guard against dangers to life, liberty, and property, reserved to themselves powers that formerly had been exercised by government.

"A written constitution is in every instance a limitation upon the powers of government in the hands of agents; for there never was written a republican constitution which delegated to functionaries all the latent powers which lie dormant in every nation, are boundless in extent, and incapable of definition."

Instead of furnishing analogies by which our national policy ought to be guided and the powers of our legislative bodies interpreted, the legislation of even the freest nations in the Old World serves better to illustrate the wisdom of our written constitutions and to warn against their violation either in letter or in spirit.

We have been referred to certain acts of Congress in the past as affording a practical construction of the Constitution in this regard, and furnishing a rule for our guidance. The rule is well established that, in case of doubt, the court will never declare a law unconstitutional. It is also well settled that long and frequent exercise of a power by Congress is entitled to the most respectful consideration and is not to be disregarded, except for cogent and most persuasive reasons. But at the same time, to have this great weight, the practical construction must have been long continued, repeated, and generally unquestioned, and it can not then be followed against "a conviction that such legislation is clearly incompatible with the supreme law of the land." (Field vs. Clark, 143 U. S., 649, 661; Merritt vs. Cameron, 137 U. S., 542, 552.)

It would extend this already too long opinion to a most unreasonable length to review the various acts and appropriations of Congress which are claimed to be in exercise of the same power invoked to support the sugar bounty act.

In his Commentaries on the Constitution (sec. 901), Mr. Justice Story refers to acts, of which the most important, and the nearest in approach to this act, are the several acts relating to drawbacks and bounties to persons engaged in the cod fisheries, beginning in 1790. He refers to the debates published by Elliot, and declares this a recognition of the power of Congress to give bounties. The history of these acts shows that the first was expressly enacted as a "drawback" of the duty upon the salt used in curing the fish. The full debates are reported in the Annals of the Second Congress (pp. 365, 461), and show that the second bill could hardly have been passed except upon the view, strenuously contended for, that the money appropriated was the equivalent of a drawback of the salt duty, as before, and acted substantially in that way. Upon this view Mr. Madison finally gave the bill his support.

All such acts, however, however worded or devised, have met with determined opposition and denial of power at all times; and it can not be said that they have ever received general consent or acquiescence. The fact that moneys have often been paid out under acts of doubtful or questionable validity can have no great weight under a system where the question, by reason of difficulties before alluded to, is so hard to be raised in an effective manner.

But if there had been a practice by Congress, uniform and generally acquiesced in, our opinion is so clearly against the validity of this act that we could not be controlled by it in the performance of our duty. No time, no acquiescence, no estoppel runs against the people under the protection of our written Constitution.

From what has been said, it follows that the judgment below must be in all things affirmed; and it is so ordered, with costs to the appellees.

Judgment affirmed.

Morris, J. A., concurs.

Then there is a short concurring opinion by Mr. Justice Alvey, who concurs so far as the affirmance of the judgment is concerned, but does not feel that he is called upon to decide the constitutionality of the measure.

I have thus been tedious in reading the entire opinion in order that it may go into the RECORD as an able and learned and in my judgment an unanswerable argument against the constitutionality of the bounty law. If it is unconstitutional, then it can not be a contract; it can not be a law; it is null and void as if it had never been upon the statute book.

The powers of Congress are limited. Congress has no right to enact a law unless it is within the bounds of the Constitution. Every member of the Senate and every member of the House of Representatives when he votes upon a measure to make it a law in the United States is an agent of the people, with a limited, delegated authority, and if he exceeds that authority his action is binding upon nobody; it becomes no law, and of that every man, at his peril, is bound to take notice. Every man is presumed to know the law; every man is presumed to know when a law is unconstitutional, and if he acts under it he acts at his peril. That is true between private citizens in their private affairs.

Why should it be different with the manufacturer of sugar in the State of Louisiana, in the State of California, in the State of Nebraska, or in any other State in the Union? Why should a law be applied to them different from the law that is applied to the humblest citizen in the land? Yet you may take the humblest and the most illiterate citizen in all this country, and if he goes into court with his case and relies upon an act of the legislature or an act of the Congress of the United States that is held by the court to be unconstitutional, he is charged with the knowledge of the unconstitutionality of it. If he has acted upon it, if he has acted upon the faith of it, it matters not how poor, how illiterate he is, he is charged with a knowledge of the law and of its unconstitutionality.

Why should a different rule be applied to the manufacturers of sugar in this country? Those men are supposed to be intelligent; they are supposed to be business men, because the law which granted a bounty to the sugar producers of this country took pains to provide that the man who did not produce over 500 pounds of sugar should receive no bounty. It was intended only for the large producers of sugar. It was intended only for the men who are business men. The very law of 1890 cut out the men who are in humble circumstances; it cut out the men who are not able to produce 500 pounds of sugar.

The pending amendment, which gives a bounty, a gratuity to the sugar producers of this country, provides that those who are not able to produce and those who have not produced 500 pounds of sugar shall receive no bounty, no subsidy, no gratuity. I have said that these men are charged with the knowledge of the law; they are charged with the knowledge of the fact that this intended effort on the part of the Congress of the United States to make a law granting a bounty, a subsidy, is unconstitutional. But whether that be so or not, as I view it I consider it is unconstitutional, and it being unconstitutional to make the law in 1890, because it was not then within the power of the United States to grant a bounty, it is now unconstitutional to grant a bounty.

There has been no change in the Constitution since then; there has been no change in the form of our Government since then; and if it were unconstitutional in 1890 to pass that act, if by reason of its unconstitutionality it could not become a law, then if we grant a bounty now for the very reason that it was unconstitutional then, our action would be in contravention of the Constitution now. For the very reason that Congress has no right to lay its hands upon one citizen and take his property and give it to another citizen, Congress had no right to grant a bounty. That is the language of the court; that is the language of reason; that is the language of logic; that is the language of our form and system of Government. If that was true, then if to-day or in this Congress we grant a bounty, a gratuity to the sugar producers of this country, we do the very thing that the court of appeals of the District of Columbia said was unconstitutional. We lay our hands upon the property of one citizen, taxing him to give it to another, which, in my judgment, is not right.

Then, again, it has been contended that the granting of a license to the sugar producer created a contract between the Government of the United States and the licensee, or the sugar producer, which was obligatory upon the Government. As well said by Mr. Shepard, and concurred in by Mr. Morris, and concurred in, so far as that is concerned, by Mr. Alvey, this was not the making of a contract, but the granting of the license was a mere step in the process of reaching the end aimed at by the sugar producer, which was the bounty or gratuity, or whatever it may be termed. It was no contract. No consideration was given to the Government.

Everything was to go to the producer, and this was a mere step in the process by which he secured his gratuity. So there is nothing in the position that the license created a contract between the Government and the sugar producer.

But it is said there is an equity because the Congress of the United States held out the promise, the hope to these people that the sugar bounty would be granted. I will address myself for a few minutes to the question of the equity. I see no equity. I can conceive of no equity that a man has to the tender of a gratuity because he has been the recipient of that gratuity for three or four years. The man who undertook to produce the sugar recognized, as the newspapers which have indulged in their criticisms, that the law was unconstitutional; that it was unjust; that it was unfair and inequitable; that it took the property of one man without giving him any consideration for it and gave it to another; that it levied taxes upon one citizen to give to another private citizen. Yet with the knowledge of that fact, these men went into the business for the purpose of getting the benefit of that which they conceived and recognized as being an unconstitutional law, to get the benefit of that which they conceived and recognized to be a mere injustice, because it is at any time an injustice to take my property and give it to another man. Yet they embarked in a business, in an industry, if you can so call it, under a law which took my property by taxation and gave it to them.

I say the man who does that, knowing the fact that the law can be repealed at any time, has no right to complain that he has taken this venture at his own risk. He has no right to complain that his risk has involved him not in a loss, but has involved him in the defeat of his hopes and expectations when he entered into the business.

So far as last year is concerned, it is said that these men had the right to expect that the law would be continued; that they had a right to expect that it would not be repealed for the last year; that they started in this business when the law stood upon the statute book, and that, therefore, they ought to have a bounty. They recognize the right of the Congress of the United States to repeal the law; they recognize the power of Congress to repeal the law; but they say that Congress had not repealed it as long as it stood upon the statute book, and that they would go on and presume that Congress would not repeal it. But these men knew when they entered upon the enterprise of producing a crop of sugar for the year 1894 that there had been an election in this country in which the sugar bounty was denounced, in which the people of the country pronounced against the sugar bounty, and by which a large majority of the people of this country said that the law should be repealed; and they ought to have acted accordingly.

Now, let us see. In the Democratic platform of 1892, which was supported by an overwhelming majority of the people of this country, we find the following:

We denounce the McKinley tariff law enacted by the Fifty-first Congress as the culminating atrocity of class legislation; we indorse the efforts made by the Democrats of the present Congress to modify its most oppressive features in the direction of free raw materials and cheaper manufactured goods that enter into general consumption, and we promise its repeal as one of the beneficent results that will follow the action of the people in intrusting power to the Democratic party.

Now, sir, it can not be that they relied upon the promise of Congress at the last session or upon the promises of any member of Congress at the last session, Senators or Representatives, that the law would not be repealed, because there was the party in power, continued in power by an overwhelming majority of the American people, that pledged itself to the repeal of the bounty provision. So it can not be contended that these men were deceived by the promises that were held out by any number of Senators or Representatives. They had the express declaration, they had the fiat, they had the decree of the American people that it ought to be repealed.

It is said that these people are in a distressed condition. If so I sympathize with them. Most of them are in my sister State. Many of them I know and they are my friends; and I would be glad to give them any aid; but the money in the Treasury of the United States is not my money. It is the property of the United States, taxed out of the people of this country for public purposes and not for the purpose of building up private fortunes, nor for the purpose of sustaining private fallen fortunes.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to have the Senator from Mississippi state to the Senate, upon which he places the greater stress as constitutional authority, the Chicago platform or the court from whose decision he has read?

Mr. McLAURIN. I will state to the Senator from Rhode Island that he ought to know as a lawyer that the Chicago platform is not a constitutional authority at all; that the Chicago platform is political authority and not constitutional authority.

Now, as I was going on to say, this is not my money. It is the money of the people, taxed out of the people by laws of Congress. Those laws had no right to tax the people of this country for anything except public purposes. They had no right to tax the people for money to give to private individuals to sustain private falling fortunes or to build up private fortunes.

Now, if this amendment is to pass, if this gratuity is to be given to these men because of their great distress, I want to say that all over the country, and especially in my section of country, there are a great many farmers in humble, moderate circumstances who are groaning under a load of debt. Their farms are mortgaged; their home, the shelter that is to protect their wives and children, is mortgaged; and those men see a great deal of financial embarrassment ahead of them. Would it not be equally as just, equally as equitable, to grant a subsidy, a bounty, a gratuity to those people to relieve them from their embarrassment? Yet when you undertake to relieve the sugar producers, who are principally and mainly composed of wealthy men, in a great many instances corporations, as was the corporation here of the Miles Planting and Manufacturing Company—I say when you undertake to relieve them and give them money to relieve them from their financial embarrassment you are relieving those who are rich, who entered upon this speculation to add to their immense fortunes, to accumulate greater fortunes.

And where do you get the money? You take a great deal of the money from the very people whom I have named in my very section of country and all over this country, and who are what you may call one-horse farmers. Whenever they buy a coat, a vest, a shirt, a pair of shoes, a hat; whenever they buy the implements with which they work, you tax them for the purpose of getting the money to give to these corporations. It is not only unconstitutional, but it is unjust, inequitable. Their distressed financial condition appeals to the equity, it appeals to the charity of the Senate as strongly as does the condition of the sugar planters and sugar producers of Louisiana and other States in the Union. Why should there be any discrimination against them? When you discriminate in favor of one class of citizens you discriminate necessarily against all other classes of citizens. You discriminate against the farmers who are engaged in the production of wheat, corn, oats, cotton, rye, and barley. You discriminate against the shoemaker, the blacksmith, the tanner, the merchant, and everybody else except the men to whom you give this gratuity.

I was appealed to by a banker from the city of New Orleans, who stated to me that he had $3,000,000 loaned out to the sugar producers; that he had loaned out millions to the large sugar producers, and if this bounty is not given those men can not pay the bank and it will involve them in ruin. Why should that banker be the recipient of the charity of the Union in preference to the man who labors day in and day out and eats his bread in the sweat of his face? Why should he be the recipient of the charity in preference to the man who works on the railroad or who works on the farm, the shoe shop, or blacksmith shop, or in the tailor shop, or in any other business in this country? There is no reason for it. There can be no good reason given for it.

Mr. President, I could give many other reasons why I oppose this amendment. There are other reasons that must present themselves to Senators. But I shall not take up the time of the Senate longer. I want to say that for the people of my sister State I have the kindest feeling. I have been kindly treated by them. I should like to do anything I could within constitutional limits that would not be an injustice to any other class of citizens in this country; but I can not vote to tax a man who rises in the early dawn and follows his plow until the dewy eve for the purpose of giving it to the man who has embarked in business under a supposition that an unjust law would be allowed to remain upon the statute books and he would receive the benefit of it in order to relieve him from the embarrassment which his own cupidity has involved him in.

I now, Mr. President, before I conclude, offer an amendment to the amendment, and I ask to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTIN in the chair). The amendment of the Senator from Mississippi will be read by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of the amendment the following proviso:

Provided, That the bounty shall be paid in silver coin; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall immediately cause to be coined of the silver bullion now in the Treasury a sufficient sum to pay said bounty.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I make the point of order against the amendment submitted by the Senator from Mississippi. It is not germane to the amendment pending, and is obnoxious to the sixteenth rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is compelled to sustain the point of order.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, the maple-sugar crop is produced entirely in the months of March and April. It can be produced at no other time. The crop of 1894 was entirely produced, inspected, and weighed by the proper officers of the Government, certificates given to the makers, and the amount entered upon the books of the Treasury months before the law was repealed. The books of the Treasury show precisely every dollar and cent that is due to a maker of maple sugar, and all that remains to complete the transaction is to send him a check for the amount. There is not a court in the land but what would render a judgment for the plaintiff on the showing of the defendant's books alone.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Vermont allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PROCTOR. Certainly.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senator from Vermont if there have been any extensive plants erected by reason of the bounty on maple sugar?

Mr. PROCTOR. There have been very extensive plants. Although they are not so expensive as the plants of cane and beet sugars, there are immensely more of them in number, and I think the percentage of the expense incurred in consequence of this bounty would count quite as large.

Mr. HARRIS. I am a little curious to know what sort of plant is necessary for converting maple sap into sugar.

Mr. PROCTOR. I shall be very happy to give the Senator, at a proper time, instruction in the art of making maple sugar, and verify it by concrete samples of the article.

Mr. HARRIS. I prefer the samples to the argument.

Mr. PROCTOR. If the views of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. McLAURIN] about the constitutionality of this question are correct, it seems to me he ought to go somewhat further and secure the repeal of a portion of section 8 of the first article of the Constitution, which says:

The Congress shall have power . . . to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States.

I believe it has been repeatedly decided by the Supreme Court that Congress is the sole judge of what is for the general welfare. I submit that he ought to go even further and introduce and secure the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution which will make its meaning plainer for those of us who are not quite so sensitive as the Senator is on constitutional points, and say, "It is hereby declared to be unconstitutional for governments or individuals to pay their honest debts." That would save us very much embarrassment here in conducting the public affairs, as well as be a great convenience to many of us individually. Nothing short of that, I am sure, will meet this case.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I trust, Mr. President, that the hour will admonish us of the necessity of making some progress with the bill. I do not propose to consume one minute of the time of the Senate in this discussion. I only rose to express the sincere hope that, having now talked enough, we may come to a vote.

Mr. McLAURIN. In answer to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR], I only desire to say that the very article to which he refers was pressed before the learned court in the decision which I read to the Senate, and they said that even under that there was no constitutional authority to grant this bounty. So I prefer to take that well-considered opinion of the supreme court of this District and of Chief Justice Chase in another case to the sarcastic allusion of the Senator from Vermont as to our honest debts. There is no lawyer in the Senate Chamber who will not say that if the act of 1890 was unconstitutional there was no debt created against the Government by it; that it was null, void, and of no force and effect upon the people of the country at all, and could not create a debt. There is no lawyer, even a tyro in the profession, but who would say if it was unconstitutional there was no debt made against the country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment. The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I trust that the amendment will not be adopted. The immense amount of money involved in the proposition, over $5,000,000—

Mr. BLACKBURN. I submit that after the Senator upon his own motion has ordered the yeas and nays and the roll call has been directed to proceed it is almost too late to debate.

Mr. HARRIS. Oh, no; it is not.

Mr. McLAURIN. Not until the first name has been called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks it is not too late, because the call had not been commenced. The Senator from Maryland will proceed.

Mr. GORMAN. No; I called for the yeas and nays so that we might have a vote upon the proposition when the time came to vote on it.

I have known propositions to be discussed for a week after the yeas and nays were ordered. But this amendment can not pass, I think, without a few words, at all events. I am not going to detain the Senate very long. The Senate will decide by a majority vote in this case whether the amendment will be adopted or not. I want to enter my protest, however, against the amendment being placed upon this appropriation bill. When this matter was under discussion during the pendency of the tariff bill I voted on every occasion in this body to practically include this provision; that is to say, to permit the duty to go into effect on the 1st day of January, so as to give the growers of sugar the benefit of the difference between 40 per cent ad valorem and the bounty of 2 cents a pound under the McKinley Act.

I voted for it, as did every other Senator on this side save three. It was done at a time to enable us to pass a great revenue measure. I voted for it, in addition to that, because I believed that there was a very strong case presented by the cane and the beet sugar interest. It was a radical proposition at that time to strike them off from 2 cents a pound to 40 per cent ad valorem.

I recognize to-day, as I did then, that they have a very strong claim, that it is one that will appeal to the justice and fairness of every man. But, Mr. President, the time has passed when it could be considered properly upon a bill for the revenue or for appropriations. The Congress decreed that it should not be provided for then. It comes now purely as a claim, and as a claim it ought to be considered upon its own merits. It ought to have been considered after a report from the Department of the Government having control of this matter and by careful consideration of the appropriate committee of this body, the Committee on Claims, and not upon an appropriation bill.

It is my firm conviction after a most careful and patient investigation for the last two or three months, with all the light that I can get upon this subject, that the provision of the law as it stands in the last tariff act has, in view of the evolution that has taken place in the manufacture of sugar throughout the world, placed the American industry in a most unfortunate position. I believe, sir, that with the bounties that are offered by other Governments it is impossible, with profit, for either the beet-sugar industry or the cane industry to live in this country five years. I do not believe that we can refine sugar five years from now except the higher grades of cut loaf.

If the Germans continue to produce as much as they have in the last year, I do not believe it will be possible for our beet-sugar industry to live in the Northwest. I regret it more than any other act that I have been a party to; that this great industry should be destroyed in this country. I think there is no parallel to the success which the Germans have had under their system, by which they not only manufacture all the sugar they need themselves but send it to England and America. In the current year, 1894-95, they have produced a million tons more than they did in the previous year. With our tax of 40 per cent upon the raw and one-eighth upon the refined and a tenth in addition, the price of their sugars refined, delivered in New York and Baltimore, is within a fraction of what the raw article can be produced for in this country.

I regret also, though it is but a slight interest compared to that in Louisiana and other States, that in my own State the interest is absolutely destroyed now. It has been impossible to rebuild and to keep that part of the commerce in Baltimore, and with it has gone, as it was bound to go, all the coffee trade of that great port.

Therefore, Mr. President, in opposing this measure here and now it is not because I do not think there is not merit in it; it is not because I do not think that if it was between private individuals it would not be such a claim as would appeal to the fair dealing and honesty of the man with whom the transaction was made; but I say, in view of all that has occurred, in view of the condition of the Treasury, in view of the manner in which we legislate upon these matters, this particular proposition should have come from a committee with a report from the Department and been presented to Congress as all other claims are presented and then settled upon its merits, and it should not be forced upon an appropriation bill where it has no proper place, and sent elsewhere where the Executive will have to pass upon it as an item included in a great appropriation bill, though he may not think it to be proper or politic to be paid at this time in view of the condition of the Treasury.

Mr. President, another provision which follows in this bill will soon be presented to the Senate, looking to the meeting of a deficiency which exists in the Treasury of the United States. I shall not go into that matter now, for it will come up later. But no man can doubt, when the facts and the figures are presented, that we are to-day, and have been for two years past, paying the current expenses of the Government from the bonds which have been sold, and that unless we make further provision to meet the current expenses of the Treasury by issuing other evidences of debt, there is not, and will not be during this fiscal year, money enough by $80,000,000 to meet the current expenses of the year.

Mr. President, that is the condition in which we are situated. I shall not detain the Senate longer. I merely wanted to utter my protest against putting this provision upon this appropriation bill.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I do not intend to discuss the question of the propriety of the pending amendment so far as its merits are concerned. The only question that occurs to me after the remarks of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] is whether this amendment is not as appropriate to the pending appropriation bill as is an amendment relating to supplying a deficiency in the revenues or to regulate the method of issuing bonds.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, is an amendment to the amendment in order?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk as an amendment to the pending amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Colorado to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the amendment:

There shall be purchased by the Secretary of the Treasury 4,000,000 ounces of silver per month for the period of eight months at the market price thereof in New York, and said silver shall from time to time be duly coined in silver dollars of standard weight and fineness.

Such purchases shall be made in furtherance of the contract heretofore entered into between the Government of the United States and the people of the United States.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I make the point of order on the amendment that it is general legislation, and not germane to the amendment to which it is offered as an amendment.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I suppose the Senator from Kentucky will permit me to say a word upon the amendment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The Senator has the right to do that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will hear the Senator.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I have but a word to say upon the amendment.

Mr. President, if an amendment of the character which has been declared to be in order, not reported by any committee of this body, is in order, then clearly, to my mind, any other amendment which seeks to make this Government pay its moral obligation to its people is equally in order upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. MANDERSON. Will my friend allow me to correct a misapprehension he seems to be under?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Certainly.

Mr. MANDERSON. The amendment which has been pending was reported to the Senate originally by the Committee on Claims, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and has been reported favorably by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Very well, Mr. President. My amendment has not been reported by the committee, but it is equally germane to the appropriation bill as is the amendment which has apparently stood the test of the point of order which has been raised against it.

If there ever was a contract on earth entered into in good faith it was the contract whereby the Government of the United States undertook to say to the people of the West that if they would undertake the mining of the gold and the silver, which must be the financial basis of the country, then the Government would coin their gold freely as offered at the mints and would purchase their silver at its market value; and at an extra session called by the President of the United States, without notice, that law, that contract was repealed by the Congress of the country, to the devastation, to the poverty, and to the suffering of a vast section of this country.

Mr. President, if there be equity in this sort of payment, if we have the right to come back to the United States, having once been its beneficiaries, and have the right to say to the Government, "You shall not rob us of our industry, you shall not take away our living from us, you shall not ruin our towns and destroy our industry without giving us compensation for it," then, certainly, no appeal can be made with greater force than this on behalf of the miners of the West.

We have heard all sorts of talk of the pity and the sorrow that the people who are opposed to silver feel for the miners of the West. If that be true, Mr. President, what have we done and wherein are we lacking that we can not be put upon the same footing as the sugar planters of Louisiana or the beet-sugar producers of Nebraska? If the one amendment is in order and if the one amendment is entitled to the sympathy of the American people—for the amendment is not put upon any basis but that of sympathy—then I say those who have mined silver from the earth and have built up great States and great industries are entitled equally to the sympathy of the people, for we produce that which no people ever before were punished for producing. We produce that which is invaluable to us in time of peace and absolutely essential in time of war; we produce that which should stand as the basis and the fabric of our Government, the coin recognized by the Constitution and by the law for a hundred years; and there can be no argument which will apply to one set of producers which does not apply with equal force to the other.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask for a ruling on the point of order, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kentucky makes the point of order against the pending amendment to his amendment. The Chair submits to the Senate the question, Is the proposed amendment in order?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH]. If he were here I should vote "yea."

Mr. DUBOIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. GALLINGER (when Mr. PRITCHARD's name was called). The junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD] requested me to announce that on all questions involving silver he desired to be paired in favor of the proposition in whatever form it might appear, and he stands so paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO].

Mr. WHITE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BURROWS. I am paired with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. CAREY (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL], but voted because I understood that, if present, he would vote the same way that I have voted.

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 50; as follows:

YEAS—18.

Bate,	Hansbrough,	Peffer,	Wolcott.
Brice,	McLaurin,	Pettigrew,
Cameron,	Mantle,	Teller,
Clark,	Mills,	Walsh,

NAYS—50.

Aldrich,	Davis,	Jones of Ark.	Proctor,
Allen,	Dixon,	Kyle,	Pugh,

Dolph,	Jones of Nev.	Ransom,
Dubois,	McPherson,	Shoup,
George,	Martin,	Smith,

So the amendment to the amendment was decided not to be in order.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in at the end of the pending amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Oregon to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the pending amendment:

Provided further, That there shall be paid to the sheep owners of the United States, to be distributed among them pro rata according to the amount of wool produced by each, an amount equal to 5 cents per pound on all domestic wool produced in the United States during the calendar year 1895 to compensate them for losses occasioned by the repeal of the duty on wool.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I make the same point of order against this amendment, that it has not been reported by a committee, either standing or select; and I object to debate.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I was about to make the suggestion that I hoped the Senator from Kentucky would not make the point of order against this very pertinent amendment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I insist on the point of order, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will hear the suggestion of the Senator from Oregon, with the permission of the Senate.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I object to any debate, Mr. President.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. On what ground?

Mr. BLACKBURN. On the ground that the point of order is not debatable, except by unanimous consent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order is made by the Senator from Kentucky—

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I hope the Senator will withdraw his point of order for a moment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will. I only want a vote.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Mr. President, when this subject was under consideration in the Committee on Claims, of which I am a member, I was of the opinion, as I am now, that on the amount of sugar actually produced in the United States prior to the 28th day of August, 1894, the producers were entitled to receive their bounty. I believe that is a legal right. I understand that, owing to some peculiar phraseology of the repealing clause of the act, the Secretary of the Treasury did not feel authorized to pay that bounty, and for that reason I am in favor of the first part of the amendment which proposes to appropriate $238,289.08; but when the amendment goes further, when the proposition is submitted to the effect that we shall pay for the sugar produced after the repeal, and for the reason that the sugar producers of this country have suffered by reason of the repeal affecting their interests in the future, then I think they occupy no better ground, no better footing, nor any different position, so far as the equities are concerned, than do any number of persons engaged in various kinds of industries in this country, whose interests were adversely affected by the repeal of the McKinley Act, and particularly and especially is this so in reference to the sheep owners of this country.

The sheep industry, Mr. President, was stricken down by the repealing clause of the new tariff act. The duty of 10, 11, or 12 cents per pound, or whatever it was, existing under the old law on foreign wool, was swept away, and the wool producers of this country were brought into direct competition with the wool and sheep growers of the Argentine, Asia, and of other wool-producing countries, the effect of which has been very largely, in the section of the country which I in part represent here, to reduce the price of wool. Wool which two years ago was selling for 12, 14, and 18 cents a pound is selling to-day for 5, 6, and 7 cents per pound, a direct loss occasioned by this legislation; and there is just as much equity, as it seems to me, in favor of the sheep owners and of the wool producers in this country who have suffered by that legislation as there is in favor of the sugar producers of this country.

I think the repeal of the sugar-bounty act was a great legislative outrage. It was an act which ought to have been prevented by representatives on this floor, particularly on the other side, from the sugar-producing State of Louisiana; it might have been prevented by them; it is unfortunate for the sugar producers of this country, and especially for those of Louisiana, that it was not prevented; and I sympathize as much as any Senator upon this floor with the sugar producers of Louisiana, of Nebraska, of California, and of the other sugar-producing States in this Union. But, Mr. President, while I sympathize with them, I sympathize also with the woolgrowers of the Pacific Coast, and especially with the woolgrowers of my own State, whose industry, as I have said, has been absolutely destroyed by this legislation. I should feel recreant to my duty to my constituents if I were to stand here to-day and vote to the sugar producers of this country an equity amounting away up into the millions—because if this legislation goes through it will amount, in my judgment, to not less than $8,000,000 out of the Treasury, and perhaps more—I say I should feel recreant to my duty to my constituents if I were to do this, and at the same time do nothing, or attempt to do nothing, for other classes of persons who have suffered equally by the infamous piece of legislation of 1894, by which so many of the great industries of this country were paralyzed and many of them stricken down entirely.

Mr. SQUIRE. How about lumber?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The Senator from Washington suggests the lumber interest. He might also mention the coal interest and the fruit interest of the Pacific Coast, the hop interest, and almost every agricultural interest in which the people of the Pacific Coast are interested, and which have been assailed by this repealing clause; yet we are to stand here and to make the sugar producers whole, while we are to suffer. For one, Mr. President, I shall not do it. However much I sympathize with our friends from Louisiana, I shall vote, if this amendment can be divided—and it is divisible, I suppose—as I stated originally, for the two hundred and odd thousand dollars to pay the bounty on sugar actually produced prior to the 28th day of August, 1894; but beyond that I shall not vote a farthing unless we include the sheep industry and other industries which have been stricken down by the tariff legislation of this Congress, each and all of which stand on just as broad equities, just as sound equities, as do the sugar producers of this country, in my humble judgment.

I thank the Senator from Kentucky for having permitted me to say this much.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Now I ask for a ruling of the Chair on the point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under the third clause of Rule XVI the Chair is compelled to sustain the point of order.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, I wish to enter my protest against the adoption of the amendment to pay this sugar bounty. I do not believe that there is any more moral obligation to pay this bounty than there is to reimburse all the people whose industries were destroyed by the passage of the Wilson tariff act. I can not see where any moral obligation exists more than exists, as the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] has said, to the sheep raisers.

The man who produced sugar went into the business because of the bounty offered, and he knew that each succeeding Congress had a right to repeal that law and take away the bounty. The man who went into the sheep industry because of the tariff which protected him against the competition of the woolgrower in Australia and South America had as much moral right to expect that tariff would be continued—for he would not have gone into the business if it had not been for the tariff—and yet he knew every succeeding Congress could repeal that law, and that he would be without a remedy.

Where is the implied obligation and where is the moral right? It seems to me they do not exist. But above all they do not exist in favor of the sugar producers of Louisiana. The representatives of the sugar producers of Louisiana upon this floor and the representatives of the sugar producers of Nebraska could by their votes have defeated the tariff bill and protected the industries which were destroyed throughout this country; and if they chose to break the contract, or what they claim to be a contract, it seems to me it is with the worst of grace for them to come here claiming compensation. They have destroyed the industries of the North by their act; and now they ask for themselves to be relieved from the consequences of their act, and especially ask the people of the North to reimburse them for the injury which they have done to themselves and done to us. Compensate the wool raiser of Dakota, whose flocks you have destroyed; pay the producer of barley, eggs, hay, butter, beans, before you pay the sugar producer who voted to produce all this ruin and disaster. It seems to me assurance and impudence could go no further. It seems to me that no such instance of impudence was ever before exhibited by any man or set of men. For my part I feel that I should outrage my conscience and outrage the rights of my constituents and put a premium upon impudence that would be intolerable should I support such a proposition.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I should say nothing upon this subject any further than I have already said it not for the peculiar conditions existing and the peculiar utterances of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW]. I do not propose to discuss the tariff question. I do not think it is germane to the subject now before the Senate. But the Senator from South Dakota is a very poor lawyer indeed, if not a very poor statesman as well, if he can not distinguish between a tariff and a bounty. I suppose that Senator goes upon the supposition that a tariff is levied with the primary purpose of protection. That is not true. No student of our institutions ever so rightfully claimed. The tariff is levied for the purpose of raising revenue with which to carry on the Government. It may be so adjusted as to protect certain industries or not to protect them; that is a question of policy. But there is no power, in my humble judgment, to levy a tax for protective purposes alone. I have endeavored conscientiously to ascertain if there was such a power, and I have been somewhat of a student of the history of this country.

Mr. President, with reference to the bounty, passing over the question of constitutional power to offer a bounty, which seems to have been exercised in this country from time to time by the subsidizing of our shipping at one time, and offering the payment of a bounty upon the export of farm products—here was a distinct proposition of the Government to certain of its citizens, that if they would engage in the production of domestic sugar they should have as a compensation from the Government for the development of that industry 2 cents a pound for a specific length of time.

Upon the strength of that and upon the strength of nothing else these men invested their capital and developed the industry. I care not what other Senators may say, it was a contract. What is a contract? It is an agreement between two or more persons competent to contract to do or not to do a lawful thing. There must be a consideration for it. A promise for a promise is held to be a good and valuable consideration throughout the civilized world. Here was a distinct proposition emanating from this Government, saying that if certain persons or citizens would embark in the enterprise of developing the industry of manufacturing sugar in this country they should for a specific length of time have a bounty from this Government to the amount of 2 cents a pound.

Did they not have a right to suppose that a great sovereign power like the United States would keep its promise? If it had been that the Government had not fixed a specific time for the bounty to run then the argument of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] that the parties stand charged with notice of the right of the Government to repeal the bounty whenever it saw fit would be an acceptable argument here. Here was an offer running over a specific length of time, fifteen years. While I am not an advocate of the doctrine of protection or an advocate of the policy of giving bounties, it is in my judgment as solemn a contract as this Government ever entered into. We can not escape the consequences of failing to fulfill the contract by the system of undertaking to load on this issue the question of the tariff and the consequences of the repeal of the tariff act. Every man conducts his business charged with notice that the Government may impose taxes upon his business, either direct or incidental, charged with notice that as a sovereignty it may repeal or modify its tax laws from time to time; and the distinction between an incidental protection, arising from a revenue law, and a distinct proposition to give so much money for the development of an industry is so plain in my judgment that a man though a fool need not err therein.

Mr. HOAR. I move, in line 27, page 2 of the amendment, to strike out the words "or sugar cane."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 27, page 2 of the amendment, strike out the words "or sugar cane," so as to read:

A bounty of eight-tenths of a cent per pound on the sugars actually manufactured and produced in the United States testing not less than 80° by the polariscope, from beets or sorghum, grown or produced within the United States.

Mr. HOAR. The word "or" should be inserted before the word "sorghum" if the amendment be adopted.

Mr. President, there is very great force in the claim which has been made by the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] in behalf of the class of citizens who have invested capital and have entered upon a mode of life for the establishment in this country of a great productive and most beneficent industry with the pledge of the Government that they should receive a bounty for a few years. Similar pledges have been given by the Government in past times to the raisers of salt, the fishermen, and to other branches of protective industry; and I hold with my honorable friend from Nebraska that the faith of the Government of the United States requires us to compensate persons who have entered upon this industry.

But where great communities act they may be represented by political agencies or representatives. If any single farmer in Nebraska, through his authorized agent, had put upon file his desire that the sugar bounty should be repealed, as to him the obligation on the part of the Government would no longer exist. Great political communities, great classes of industries, can not act by individual agencies. They must be understood to act by the men whom they send to this and the other Chamber to represent them. The sugar producers of the State of Louisiana, if in any way men can express a desire on a public question, desired the repeal of the bounty. The matter was fully discussed; public meetings were held. An eminent representative of that State vacated his seat in this Chamber and another person was sent to represent that State while this matter was pending and under discussion.

The gentleman originally appointed by the executive was soon after elected by the legislature of the State of Louisiana, and both of the representatives of Louisiana on the final vote, upon which a single vote would have stopped it, recorded their votes and that of Louisiana for the repeal of the sugar bounty. There can not be a more solemn, deliberate, binding action in political history than the action of the State of Louisiana, that so far as she was concerned, and so far as her people were concerned, not only were the people of the United States acquitted from any obligation of good faith in this matter, but that she did not desire as a matter of public policy that the sugar bounty for the previous year should be paid to the producers of sugar.

That is not true in regard to the producers of beet sugar in California or Nebraska or the Northwest, and therefore I shall cheerfully join with their representatives in giving my vote to pay those farmers a bounty. But the State of Louisiana has repealed it herself. A single vote would have stopped it—a single negative. One of her Senators voted against the bill, and on fuller deliberation and reflection changed his vote to an affirmative vote after the roll call had been concluded. Now, in the face of this opinion and desire of the sovereign State of Louisiana, am I to insist upon forcing on those unwilling sugar producers this sum of money which they have rejected and repudiated by every possible instrumentality by which they can act, by the most solemn expression of their opinion which they can utter?

Mr. President, I have heard somewhere the suggestion, which I am sure Louisiana will repudiate, that although she would have been glad to have the sugar bounty continue, yet so great was her desire to strike down the manufacturing industries of the section of country which I humbly in some small degree represent that she was willing to accomplish that result even at the price of the abolition of the sugar bounty for her own people. I do not, of course, for a moment undertake to express any confidence in that proposition.

Mr. GRAY. May I ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question right there?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. GRAY. I ask whether the fact that one of the Senators from Nebraska, a great beet-producing State, voted in favor of the repeal of the sugar bounty ought not to bring Nebraska within the scope of punishment which the Senator from Massachusetts would inflict upon Louisiana?

Mr. HOAR. I have not spoken of punishment. The word "punishment" has not escaped my lips.

Mr. GRAY. That was my word. I will withdraw it if it is objectionable.

Mr. HOAR. I was speaking of waiver—of desire, of vote, of urgent appeal to the people of the United States to stop paying the sugar bounty.

Mr. GRAY. But I understand the Senator's amendment proposes to pay a bounty upon the beet sugar of Nebraska.

Mr. HOAR. I do not understand that Nebraska was united or agreed upon the question. We can not treat Nebraska as having acted unless both of her Senators concurred.

Mr. GRAY. "One righteous man saved the city."

Mr. HOAR. But even in that case Nebraska has spoken since. As soon as her people could deal with the question she recorded her vote in opposition not only to this part of the act but to the entire policy of the tariff act of 1894. On the other hand Louisiana adheres; in our parliamentary language as to conferences, she not only adheres but insists. I do not want to have public meetings held in New Orleans; I do not want to have the freemen of that State, where every freeman utters his voice and casts his vote, gathering on the highway and the plantation to protest against this indignity to her and our opposition to her sovereign will.

Mr. President, for one I can not be a party to forcing this down the reluctant throats of the excellent people of the State of Louisiana. I should otherwise vote for this bounty with the greatest satisfaction. I am not prepared to go so far as my honorable friend from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL]. I am not prepared to say that because we have repealed the protective tariff and have brought the country to the pitch of misery which it has gone through, every American interest should be compensated by a grant from the Treasury. If we were to say that as to everybody who has suffered in purse or in business by the baleful operation of the political action of 1894 we must pay the producers of cotton, who have been selling their cotton for the last few months at 5 cents a pound.

I believe that the hard times, that the loss of prosperity in this country, that the injury to business occasioned by that reckless and foolish financial legislation of the Democratic majority here was a large factor in bringing cotton to 5 cents a pound, and that the Southern producer of cotton has reaped in his own person the disastrous consequences of that policy. But they are indirect; they are remote and not proximate consequences. If the Democratic party had been continued in power two years longer the sage at the other end of the Capitol and the sage at the other end of the avenue would have brought cotton to 3 cents a pound before they got through, and other industries would have been reduced in proportion.

But we can not go into that. We can not compensate the cotton growers of Texas for the folly of their Senator, or the cotton growers of South Carolina or Alabama for the follies of theirs. We can not compensate the railroads of the country, we can not compensate the mill owners of New England, we can not compensate the honest and industrious workmen of our manufacturing cities of the East or West. We can not compensate the silver miners of Colorado.

So, Mr. President, if this amendment to strike out the words shall be adopted, I hope I shall have the votes of the Senators from Louisiana. I shall be delighted then to join with the majority of the Senate in doing justice, and partial and imperfect justice, to the beet-sugar producers of California, Nebraska, and Kansas.

Mr. GORMAN and Mr. BLACKBURN. Question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] to the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. MILLS and Mr. GORMAN. Let us have the yeas and nays.

Mr. ALDRICH and Mr. BLACKBURN. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the amendment may be divided.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I made that request some time ago.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The first branch of the amendment will be read.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I make the point of order that the yeas and nays having been ordered on the committee amendment it can not be divided.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Oregon gave notice of a desire to have the amendment divided.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not care. I am willing to vote twice if we can only get a vote.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I made the request an hour ago that the amendment be divided.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The yeas and nays have been ordered; but I agree to a division of the question if we can have a vote.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The first branch of the amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. After line 5, page 65, insert:

Bounty on sugar: That there shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury to those producers and manufacturers of sugar in the United States from maple sap, beets, sorghum, or sugar cane grown or produced within the United States, who complied with the provisions of the bounty law as contained in Schedule E of the tariff act of October 1, 1890, a bounty of 2 cents a pound on all sugars testing not less than 90° by the polariscope, and 1½ cents a pound on all sugars testing less than 90 and not less than 80° by the polariscope, manufactured and produced by them previous to the 28th day of August, 1894, and upon which no bounty has previously been paid; and for this purpose the sum of $238,289.06 is hereby appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. GORMAN. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. DUBOIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES]. He was necessarily called from the Senate this evening.

Mr. McLAURIN (when Mr. GEORGE's name was called). My colleague [Mr. GEORGE] is detained from the Senate by reason of sickness. If he were present he would vote "nay."

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD]. If he were here I should vote "yea."

Mr. WHITE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP], but as I know that Senator holds the same view on this subject which I hold I will vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. COKE. I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH]. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Oregon to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] and vote "nay."

Mr. HILL. I have consented to pair with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP].

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I have a general pair with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS], who is absent, but I understand if he were here he would vote for this proposition, and therefore I vote "yea."

Mr. PASCO. My colleague [Mr. CALL] has been called from the Chamber. I transfer my pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD] to my colleague, and I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 46, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—46.

George,	Jones of Nev.	Shoup,

So the first branch of the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the second branch of the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PALMER. Let the amendment be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The second branch of the amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. After the first branch of the amendment just agreed to, insert:

That there shall be paid to those producers who complied with the provisions of the bounty law as contained in Schedule E of the tariff act of October 1, 1890, by filing the notice, application for license, and bond therein required, prior to July 1, 1894, and who would have been entitled to receive a license as provided for in said act, a bounty of eight-tenths of a cent per pound on the sugars actually manufactured and produced in the United States testing not less than 80° by the polariscope, from beets, sorghum, or sugar cane grown or produced within the United States during that part of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, comprised in the period commencing August 28, 1894, and ending June 30, 1895, both days inclusive; and for this purpose the sum of $5,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated: Provided, That no bounty shall be paid to any person engaged in refining sugars which have been imported into the United States, or produced in the United States, upon which the bounty herein provided has already been paid or applied for.

The bounty herein authorized to be paid shall be paid upon the presentation of such proof of manufacture and production as shall be required in each case by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and under such rules and regulations as shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

And for the payment of such bounty the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to draw warrants on the Treasurer of the United States for sums as shall be necessary, which sums shall be certified to him by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, by whom the bounty shall be disbursed, and no bounty shall be allowed or paid to any person as aforesaid upon any quantity of sugar less than 500 pounds.

For examination of claims and ascertaining the amount due and the prevention of fraudulent claims for said bounty, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is hereby authorized to employ two internal-revenue agents, in addition to those already provided for, and upon the same terms as to compensation.

That any person not entitled to the bounty herein provided for, who shall with intent to defraud apply for or receive the same, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall pay a fine not exceeding $5,000, or be imprisoned for a period not exceeding five years, or both, in the discretion of the court.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] and vote "nay."

Mr. DUBOIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired on this question with the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], who is necessarily detained from the Senate. I should vote "yea" and he would vote "nay."

Mr. HILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP].

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS]. If he were here I am told he would vote "yea." I should vote "nay" if I were at liberty to vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DIXON. On this question I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. I understand if present he would vote "yea." If I were permitted to vote I would vote "nay."

Mr. BURROWS. I am paired with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON], and therefore withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—36.

Aldrich,	Cullom,	McMillan,	Proctor,
Allen,	Daniel,	Manderson,	Pugh,
Allison,	Davis,	Mantle,	Quay,
Blackburn,	Gordon,	Martin,	Rosch,
Blanchard,	Gray,	Morgan,	Squire,

Call,	Hale,	Mitchell of Oreg.	Smith,
Dixon,	Higgins,	Mitchell of Wis.	Vilas,
Dolph,	Hill,	Murphy,	Voorhees,
Dubois,	Irby,	Pritchard,	Wilson of Iowa.
Faulkner,	Jones of Ark.	Ransom,

So the second branch of the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I give notice that I shall hope to finish the bill to-morrow. In pursuance of the agreement that was made the other day I will give way that this bill may be temporarily laid aside until to-morrow and that the night session beginning at 8 o'clock to-night may be devoted to unobjected cases on the Calendar, as was agreed upon.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask unanimous consent that at the night session when unobjected bills upon the Calendar are to be considered the roll of Senators be called alphabetically. It seems to me that that is the fair way.

Mr. GORMAN. We can settle that to-night.

Mr. HILL. I object to that arrangement at present. Let the night session take care of itself.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to inquire of the Chair if any arrangement about a night session has been made and, if so, what?

Mr. FAULKNER. It was a unanimous agreement.

Mr. HOAR. What is it?

Mr. FAULKNER. To meet at 8 o'clock and consider unobjected cases on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will have read the agreement.

The Secretary read as follows:

Mr. GORMAN. The agreement proposed is that on Tuesday next, from 8 o'clock in the evening, the Senate will consider unobjected cases on the Calendar, under Rule VIII, giving to each Senator an opportunity, as has always been the rule, to call up a bill, subject, however, to the consideration of an appropriation bill if it becomes necessary to consider one that night.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the answer to the parliamentary inquiry of the Senator from Massachusetts.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2243) in aid of the exposition to be held under the auspices of the Baltimore Centennial Association, and for other purposes.

RECESS.

Mr. GORMAN. I move that the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understand that the appropriation bill is not to be called up to-night.

Mr. GORMAN. Oh, no.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is not to be called up to-night.

Mr. HARRIS. Before the motion for a recess is stated may we not come to an agreement that the roll shall be called this evening as suggested, as an economy of time?

Mr. FAULKNER. Wait until we reassemble.

Mr. HARRIS. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. An objection was interposed to that request. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maryland that the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask unanimous consent, in the interest of economizing time, that the roll be called, commencing with the first name upon it, and that the Senator, as called, may, under the consent rule existing to-night, ask for the consideration of the bill he may indicate. Otherwise we shall have a scramble for the floor whenever a bill is disposed of.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, in the interest of economy of time, etc., I shall object to that arrangement.

Mr. HARRIS. Very well.

Mr. HILL. I desire to proceed under the order of business, and ask to be recognized.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President—

Mr. HILL. I will yield for a moment to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. CULLOM. I was about to call up a bill; that was all.

Mr. HILL. That is exactly what I was going to do, and therefore I decline to yield.

Mr. FAULKNER. I think before the Senator from New York goes on there ought to be a distinct understanding among all of us here this evening that we shall remain here until every Senator who has a bill to call up shall have an opportunity to call the bill up.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from West Virginia? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BATE. I ask that the agreement be read, so that we may understand it. Are only bills that are uncontested to be considered?

Mr. HARRIS. Unobjected bills.

Mr. GORMAN and Mr. FAULKNER. Bills unobjected to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senators have stated the agreement correctly. The Chair will have it read if the Senator from Tennessee desires.

Mr. BATE. No; that is sufficient.

Mr. HARRIS. One objection will carry a bill over.

Mr. HILL. I ask for the consideration of Order of Business 1059, Senate joint resolution 140.

Mr. PEPPER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will hear the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. PEPPER. Are we not to proceed according to the Calendar, taking up unobjected bills in their order?

Mr. GORMAN. Oh, no.

Mr. FAULKNER. Any Senator can call up a bill.

Mr. PEPPER. Is there to be a scramble for the floor?

Mr. CULLOM. I hope we shall go ahead under some rule.

Mr. GORMAN. I will state to the Senator from Kansas that I made the request, which was agreed to, that we would take up unobjected cases on the Calendar under the five-minute rule, under Rule VIII, and give an opportunity to each Senator to call up at least one bill.

Mr. PEPPER. Why not take them in their order?

Mr. GORMAN. We can not do it in that way.

Mr. PEPPER. That would prevent confusion.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to ask if pension bills are to be included in this assignment or if there is a special time arranged wherein pension bills can be disposed of?

Mr. GORMAN. We shall have to give a special time to them; but under this agreement it was the distinct understanding that each Senator was to call up whatever bill he desired, whether a pension bill or otherwise, and if unobjected to it should be considered under Rule VIII.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope there will be an opportunity to call up all unobjected pension bills before we get through.

Mr. GORMAN. Oh, yes.

Mr. FRYE. Let us go ahead and use the time we have.

LIEUT. F. D. ROCKENBACH.

Mr. HILL. I call up the joint resolution (S. R. 140) authorizing Second Lieut. F. D. Rockenbach, of the Tenth Cavalry, United States Army, to accept the position of commandant of cadets at the Virginia Military Academy, Lexington, Va.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DANIEL, the title was amended so as to read:

A joint resolution authorizing Second Lieut. F. D. Rockenbach, of the Tenth Cavalry, United States Army, to accept the position of commandant of cadets at the Virginia Military Academy, Lexington, Va.

ILLINOIS RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. CULLOM. I call up the bill (H. R. 8882) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Illinois River at or near the town of Hennepin. The bill came over from the House to-day.

Mr. GORMAN. I think I can appeal to the Senator from Illinois. Under the unanimous agreement each Senator was to call up one bill. I repeat the request of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] that the roll may be called and each Senator call up a bill when his name is called.

Mr. CULLOM. I have no objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. HILL. I feel constrained to object to that request for reasons which will be apparent before we proceed very long.

Mr. HARRIS. Then I hope that but one Senator will be recognized during the evening session.

Mr. FRYE. That is understood.

Mr. HARRIS. So that each Senator may have his opportunity to call up a bill.

Mr. FAULKNER. That is the unanimous agreement.

Mr. HARRIS. Very well; it is the agreement already.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8882) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Illinois River at or near the town of Hennepin.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT SUBURBAN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. DANIEL. I ask the Senate to consider the bill (H. R. 6816) to amend the charter of the District of Columbia Suburban Railway Company.

Mr. QUAY. I regret exceedingly to say to the Senator from Virginia that I feel it to be my duty to object to the consideration of that bill.

Mr. HARRIS. We can not hear the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. QUAY. I rose to object to the consideration of the bill called up by the Senator from Virginia because some of my constituents who are interested asked me to resist its passage. I regret exceedingly that I am compelled to do so.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection to the consideration of the bill.

MEASUREMENT OF VESSELS.

Mr. FRYE. I call up the bill (S. 2790) to amend section 1 of chapter 398 of the laws of 1882, entitled "An act to provide for deductions from the gross tonnage of vessels of the United States."

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 2, line 14, before the word "first," to strike out "July," and insert "April;" so as to read:

SEC. 2. That this act shall not be construed to require the remeasurement of any American vessel duly measured before April 1, 1885; but upon application by the owner of any such vessel collectors of customs shall cause such vessel, or the spaces to be deducted, to be measured according to the provisions of this act, and if a new register is not issued the statement of such remeasurement shall be attached by an appendix to the outstanding register or enrollment with a certificate of the collector of customs that the original estimate of tonnage is amended pursuant to this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, line 7, before the date "1895," to strike out "July" and insert "April;" so as to read:

SEC. 5. That this act shall take effect on the 1st day of April, 1895.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORT HAYS MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2799) granting to the State of Kansas the abandoned Fort Hays Military Reservation in said State, for the purpose of establishing western branches of the Kansas Agricultural College and of the Kansas State Normal Institute thereon, and for a public park.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH W. SNYDER.

Mr. TURPIE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7028) to pension Joseph W. Snyder, crippled son of a soldier of the war of 1812.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Joseph W. Snyder, the aged and crippled son of Jacob Snyder, deceased, late a private in Captain Roger's company of Pennsylvania militia, in the war of 1812, and to pay him a pension of $8 a month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROCK CREEK RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8337) relative to Rock Creek Railway Company of the District of Columbia.

Mr. HILL. I am constrained to object to that bill.

Mr. FAULKNER. I appeal to the Senator from New York not to object to the consideration of the bill. It is not connected in any way with and does not affect anything, I am satisfied, to which he has reference, and its passage is very important to carry out the policy we have established here in reference to these roads.

Mr. HILL. There is another policy to be established here which is just as important as this. I am constrained to object to the consideration of the bill, and do so in the interests of fair play.

Mr. FAULKNER. That does not apply to me.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the bill goes over.

IMPROVEMENT OF OUTER BAR OF BRUNSWICK, GA.

Mr. GORDON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2721) to amend the river and harbor act of August 7, 1894, providing for improving the outer bar of Brunswick, Ga.

Mr. HARRIS. I think that is too important a bill to be considered under the rule under which we are proceeding at this time.

Mr. GORDON. I hope my friend from Tennessee will not make an objection to this bill. It has been favorably reported from the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HARRIS. That may be, but it involves the expenditure of large amounts of money, and also involves important considerations; and we are acting under the five-minute rule.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the bill goes over.

GAINESVILLE, McALESTER AND ST. LOUIS RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. MILLS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5062) to grant the Gainesville, McAlester and St. Louis Railway Company the right to build two branch lines and to grant the right of way therefor through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments, in section 1, line 14, after the word "company," to strike out "east of the Washita River," and insert "at or near the point where said main line crosses Blue River;" in line 19, after the word "Arkansas," to insert "at or near the town of Ultima Thule, Ark.," and at the end of line 23, after the name "Kansas," to insert "at or near the town of Sedan, Kans.," so as to make the section read:

That the Gainesville, McAlester and St. Louis Railway Company, a corporation created under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Texas, be, and is hereby, invested and empowered with right of locating, operating, using, and maintaining two branch lines of railway, together with telegraph and telephone lines, from the main line, granted to said company by the act of Congress approved March 1, A. D. 1893, entitled "An act to grant the Gainesville, McAlester and St. Louis Railway Company a right of way through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes;" both of said branch lines to begin at a point to be selected by the said company at or near the point where said main line crosses Blue River, one to run in an easterly direction by the most practicable route through the Indian Territory, down the valley of Red River to a point on the west line of the State of Arkansas, at or near the town of Ultima Thule, Ark., and the other to run in a northerly direction by the most practicable route through the Indian Territory to a point on the south line of the State of Kansas, at or near the town of Sedan, Kans.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MARYLAND AND WASHINGTON RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. GIBSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8638) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Maryland and Washington Railway Company," approved August 1, 1892, and for other purposes.

Mr. HILL. Let that bill be laid aside for the present, Mr. President. I want to examine it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the bill will go over.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH AT BETHEL SPRINGS, TENN.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration at this time of the bill (H. R. 725) for the relief of the trustees of the Presbyterian Church of Bethel Springs, Tenn.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the trustees of the Presbyterian Church in Bethel Springs, Tenn., $400, being for the use and occupation of the church by the Army of the United States during the late war.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES A. EDWARDS.

Mr. HUNTON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 2066) for the relief of Charles A. Edwards.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It requires the Postmaster-General to enter $200 as a credit on the account of Charles A. Edwards, late the postmaster at Prattville, in the State of Alabama, with the Post-Office Department, the same being the amount of money received by Edwards as postmaster and transmitted by him to the postmaster at Montgomery, and which was lost in transit without fault on his part.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TENNESSEE RIVER BRIDGE NEAR SHEFFIELD, ALA.

Mr. PUGH. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8189) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Tennessee River at or near Sheffield, Ala.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SETTLEMENT BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND ARKANSAS.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2902) to approve a compromise and settlement between the United States and the State of Arkansas.

Mr. CHANDLER. I object to the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is objected to, and goes over under the rule.

RAILROADS IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. BERRY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6956) to grant to railroad companies in the Indian Territory additional powers to secure right of way, depot grounds, etc.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments, in section 1, line 4, after the word "use," to insert "such;" after the word "ground," at the end of the same line, to insert "as may be necessary for railway purposes;" in line 7, after the word "Interior," to insert "that such additional ground is necessary for railway purposes and," and in line 10, after the word "promoted," to insert "thereby;" so as to make the section read:

That any railroad company operating a railroad in the Indian Territory may acquire the right to use such additional ground as may be necessary for railway purposes at stations now existing or for the establishment of new stations or depots by making it appear to the Secretary of the Interior that such additional ground is necessary for railway purposes and that the convenience of the people and the public interests will be promoted thereby.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. PALMER. I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 5645) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Mississippi River to the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri, from some suitable point between the north line of St. Clair County, Ill., and the southwest line of said county.

Mr. ALLISON and Mr. McLAURIN. I object.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator from Illinois that the bill is objected to.

Mr. PALMER. Would it be in order for me to make a single statement?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. By unanimous consent the Senator from Illinois will proceed.

Mr. PALMER. Inasmuch as the Senators from Missouri and the Senators from Illinois favor the bill, I should really like to know what the Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from Iowa have to do with it.

Mr. McLAURIN. I will state to the Senator from Illinois that I care nothing about it; but my colleague [Mr. GEORGE] desires to object to the bill, and he is sick and unable to be here this evening. For that reason I objected.

Mr. ALLISON. I will respond to my good friend from Illinois by saying that when the bill is under consideration I shall state my objection to it.

Mr. PALMER. I wish to ask whether I am entitled to a second choice? [Laughter.]

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Chair will recognize the Senator from Illinois.

JOHN A. LYNCH.

Mr. PALMER. I have a bill which I desire to call up. I am sure my friend from Iowa will not object to it. It is the bill (S. 502) for the relief of John A. Lynch.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 6, after the words "the sum of," to strike out "two" and insert "one;" in line 7, after the word "thousand," to strike out "four" and insert "one;" in the same line, before the word "dollars," to strike out "sixty-six" and insert "thirty-seven," and in the same line to strike out "forty-nine" and insert "ninety-six;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in accordance with the findings of the Court of Claims the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to pay to John A. Lynch, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,137.99, in full and complete satisfaction for services rendered and expenses incurred and defrayed by him, the said John A. Lynch, to and for the United States at Cincinnati, in the State of Ohio, in the years 1861 and 1862.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INSIGNIA AND NAME OF THE RED CROSS.

Mr. GRAY. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5580) to protect the insignia and the name of Red Cross.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That from and after the passage of this act it shall be unlawful for any person or association of persons within the jurisdiction of the United States of America to wear or display the sign of the Red Cross above described, or any colorable imitation of said insignia, without permission from the American National Red Cross (a duly authorized and recognized body incorporated under the laws for the District of Columbia and corresponding to the central committee described in the last preceding paragraph of the preamble) for the purpose of collecting, soliciting, or receiving money or material, or who shall by the use of said symbol or name of the American National Red Cross do or attempt to do similar work to the American National Red Cross without permission from said organization, shall be guilty of misdemeanor and shall be liable to a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $500, or imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months, or both, for each and every offense. The fine so collected shall be paid to the American National Red Cross.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The committee reported an amendment to strike out the last clause of the preamble, as follows:

Now, therefore, for the purpose of extending the same protection to this international and universal insignia in the United States of America that is extended to it by other nations.

And insert:

Now, therefore, for the purpose of extending protection to this international and universal insignia in the United States of America.

The amendment was agreed to.

The preamble as amended was agreed to.

Mr. GRAY. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. MORGAN, Mr. GRAY, and Mr. FRYE were appointed.

HENRY A. WEBB.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 2428) for the relief of Henry A. Webb.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was reported from the Committee on Finance, with an amendment, in line 10, after the word "also," to strike out "bonds" and insert "bond;" in line 11, after the word "numbered," to strike out "fifty-four hundred and ninety-five;" in line 12, before the word "four," to strike out "inclusive;" in line 13, before the word "also," to strike out "each;" in line 14, after the word "and," to strike out "thirty-three to" and insert "thirty-six and;" in line 15, after the word "seven," to strike out "inclusive;" in line 17, before the word "inclusive," to strike out "fifty-three" and insert "fifty;" in line 18, and after the word "thousand," to strike out "seven hundred and fifty" and insert "one hundred;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to redeem in favor of Henry A. Webb, of Providence, R. I., the following-described bonds of the United States, issued under acts of Congress approved July 17, 1861, and August 5, 1861, namely: Bonds numbered 30049 to 30051, inclusive, for $500 each; also bond numbered 5497, for $100; also bonds numbered 18436 and 18437, for $100 each; also bonds numbered 4345 to 4360, inclusive, for $50 each, amounting in all to $2,100, with interest for sixteen and one-half years on said bonds numbered 30049 to 30051, inclusive, 5497, 18436, 18437, and 4345 to 4360, inclusive, from January 1, 1865, to July 1, 1881, the said Henry A. Webb claiming that he owned said bonds on February 11, 1866, when it is alleged they were stolen from him and have never been recovered by him: Provided, That before the redemption of said bonds the said Henry A. Webb or some one in his behalf shall execute or cause to be executed and deposit with the Secretary of the Treasury a bond of indemnity, with good and sufficient sureties, subject to the approval of said Secretary, to secure the United States against loss or damage in consequence of the redemption of said bonds.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES PHELAN.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 6870) for the relief of James Phelan, internal-revenue collector at Detroit, Mich. It is a short bill.

Mr. FRYE. What is the Calendar number?

Mr. WOLCOTT. It has no Calendar number.

Mr. McMILLAN. It is a bill that came over from the other House to-day.

Mr. GORMAN. What is the Calendar number?

Mr. McMILLAN. It is not on the Calendar.

Mr. HILL. How is the bill to be taken up if it is not on the Calendar?

Mr. ALDRICH. It is on the Calendar, but it has no Calendar number. I reported it from the Committee on Finance to-day.

Mr. McMILLAN. It is a short bill and amounts to nothing.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to James Phelan, United States collector of internal revenue at Detroit, Mich., $600.05, the amount stolen from the vault in the internal-revenue office on the night of April 13, 1894.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRIGHTWOOD RAILWAY COMPANY OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4479) to amend the charter of the Brightwood Railway Company of the District of Columbia.

Mr. HILL. This is an important bill, and I shall have to object to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection.

MONONGAHELA RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. QUAY. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8880) to authorize the Pittsburg, Monongahela and Wheeling Railroad Company to construct a bridge over the Monongahela River.

Mr. GALLINGER. I asked unanimous consent a moment ago for the consideration of a bill unanimously reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia. There is no reason why it should have been objected to, but it was; and I object to the consideration of the present bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection.

Mr. QUAY. I did not object to the bill the Senator from New Hampshire called up.

INSPECTION OF BOILERS.

Mr. PLATT. I ask to call up House bill 4475.

Mr. QUAY. It seems to me business may as well cease at once if every bill is to be objected to according to the declaration of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. According to the declaration of the Senator from New York.

Mr. PLATT. I hope I shall not be punished.

Mr. QUAY. You will be.

Mr. PLATT. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4475) to amend section 4434 of Title LIII of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to make a statement occupying two minutes.

Mr. PLATT. Let me have this bill passed first.

Mr. FRYE. Let the bill pass first.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent to make a statement. Is there objection?

Mr. FAULKNER. The Senator from New Hampshire has a right to make a statement under the five-minute rule.

Mr. PLATT. Let the bill be read through.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I object to the bill being read until the Senator from New Hampshire makes his statement.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire? The Chair hears none.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Committee on the District of Columbia have given very careful consideration to the bill to charter the Suburban Railway Company. A motion was made in committee at a recent meeting to report that bill. That motion was voted down, but out of courtesy the committee allowed the bill to be placed upon the Calendar without recommendation. The Senator from New York, I understand, is interested in that bill. He has asked for unanimous consent to consider a bill that was objected to by one-half of the members of the Committee on the District of Columbia. We could not possibly give consent for the consideration of a bill of that character. Because that bill was objected to, the Senator from New York has objected to every other bill relating to street railways in the District of Columbia.

Mr. President, if that is to be the rule we may just as well stop right here and now. I propose to have fair play, and that is all I ask. I do not propose that any Senator coming in here and asking unanimous consent to consider a bill that could not get a majority vote in committee shall obstruct the passage of bills that were unanimously reported by the committee, and I object to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President—

Mr. HARRIS. I beg permission to say a word.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator give way and allow me to say a word?

Mr. HARRIS. I would have been through by this time if the Senator had not interrupted me. The word I want to say is that I am in full sympathy with the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire; but though I am, it does not justify either the Senator from New Hampshire or myself in thwarting the purposes of other Senators. The course of the Senator from New York is, in my judgment, not to be approved. [Laughter.]

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I do not know that I have endeavored to regulate my conduct so as to meet the approval of the Senator from Tennessee. I have not endeavored to do so in the past and I shall not in the future.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator will allow me to say—

Mr. HILL. I decline to yield.

Mr. HARRIS. He has signally failed if he has endeavored.

Mr. HILL. The Senator can pursue his course and I will pursue my own. I know my rights and he knows his.

A word as to the statement of the Senator from New Hampshire. In the first place, I have not asked unanimous consent for the consideration of the Suburban Railway Company bill this evening. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], whose bill it is, asked unanimous consent. It was met with objection.

Mr. QUAY. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. QUAY. Before the Senate assembled this evening I mentioned to the Senator from New York and the Senator from Virginia that I should by force of circumstances be compelled to object to that bill and they were not taken by surprise on the floor by the objection.

Mr. HILL. There were several gentlemen who had notified me that they were going to make the same objection.

Mr. QUAY. I did not know that.

Mr. HILL. The Senator from Pennsylvania was the last one who so notified me. It is the bill to which I called the attention of the Senate some two weeks ago, which was not reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia. This evening was set apart for the consideration of these bills. The bill was entitled to consideration the same as any other bill. If, by reason of objections which were developed to it, it could not be disposed of according to the rules, it could, of course, have gone over. But there was an effort made to prevent its consideration at all. An effort was made by several Senators undoubtedly to object to it, and not so much, as I think, because they are opposed to the features of the bill, but because they have other bills that they have some sort of interest in. I suppose the Senator does not mean to say that I have any interest in the Suburban Railway bill except the interest of some friends of mine, as I stated. That is all.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course, Mr. President, I do not mean to say that; but I think the Senator ought to withdraw his insinuation that possibly we have an interest beyond that in some other bills.

Mr. HILL. I only—

Mr. GALLINGER. I will be frank with the Senator.

Mr. HILL. I know nothing about the Senator's interest, and I do not suppose he has any.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is all right.

Mr. QUAY. I will say so far as I am concerned that I have no interest and care nothing about any railroad bills on this floor.

Mr. HILL. The Senator very frankly stated to me that the Philadelphia syndicate are the persons for whom he made objection to the bill.

Mr. QUAY. I did not.

Mr. HILL. And not because the bill affected them, but because it took away certain franchises which they desired to get. That was the milk in the cocoanut, and that accounted for it.

Mr. QUAY. I did not mention the Philadelphia syndicate. That is a phrase coined by the Senator.

Mr. HILL. No, because it was very well known. The Senator will not now deny but that it was the Philadelphia syndicate for whom he spoke. Of course he will not. He is a frank man.

Mr. President, that there are some bills which interfere with the franchise of that bill and they are to be pushed forward is very clear. So far as I can discriminate in these bills I propose to do so. I have already stated to two or three Senators if I could be convinced that their bills did not conflict with that bill I had no reason to object to them. Any other bill here that does not affect that measure, or where parties have not endeavored to obstruct that bill, I have no objection to being pushed ahead; but I insist upon it, as I insisted two weeks ago and shall insist to the end, that the Suburban Railway bill shall be fairly treated as well as other bills. I think I know that the best way to get fair treatment is to insist that all bills shall be treated alike and considered alike.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me a moment?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator says he would not object to a bill if it did not conflict with his measure. The bill I ask consideration for is to extend the Brightwood Railroad, a suburban road which lost $18,000 last year. That amount of money was taken out of the pockets of its stockholders. It is simply to build a little loop for the benefit of that road. It has nothing to do whatever—

Mr. HILL. I do not know about the loop.

Mr. GORMAN. I rise to a point of order. I suggest that we are acting under the five-minute rule by unanimous consent.

Mr. BATE. We are under the five-minute rule. I was going to call for the enforcement of the rule. Some of the rest of us have not had a showing as yet.

Mr. HILL. I am not anxious to take up time, if the Senator has any other bill. But we will consider the bills to which I refer when that bill is considered, and not before.

Mr. GALLINGER. Having made the statement I have and put myself fairly before the Senate, and I think having exposed the animus of the Senator from New York, I withdraw my objection to the bill of the Senator from Pennsylvania, as well as to that of the Senator from Connecticut. I will let the bills pass if the Senate chooses to pass them.

Mr. QUAY. Then the bill I called up is now before the Senate. Mr. FRYE. The bill called up by my colleague is the one under consideration.

Mr. PLATT. It is a bill of a public character.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I object to any further statement until the bill is concluded.

Mr. FRYE and Mr. GORMAN. Let the bill be read.

The Secretary read the bill (H. R. 4475) to amend section 4434 of Title LII of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to ask the Senator from Connecticut having charge of the bill if this modification of section 4434 of the Revised Statutes goes into effect immediately?

Mr. PLATT. It goes into effect upon the passage of the act.

Mr. ALLISON. It seems to be a radical change of section 4434, and as it seems to affect the river navigation as well as navigation upon the ocean and the lakes—

Mr. PLATT. It only reduces the thickness of boilers. I do not see how that can affect—

Mr. FRYE. It does not affect any existing boiler in the slightest degree. It only provides for the inspection of boilers hereafter.

Mr. ALLISON. I think I should be permitted to ask a question about it, having some interest in the navigation of the Mississippi River.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MONONGAHELA RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. QUAY. I now renew my request that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8880) to authorize the Pittsburgh, Monongahela and Wheeling Railroad Company to construct a bridge over the Monongahela River.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT SUBURBAN RAILWAY.

Mr. DANIEL. I now ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6816) to amend the charter of the District of Columbia Suburban Railway Company.

Mr. CHANDLER. I object to the consideration of that bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection.

Mr. WHITE. I ask the Senate to take up—

Mr. CHANDLER. I withdraw my objection in order to permit the Senator from Virginia to make a statement.

Mr. DANIEL. I desire to make a brief statement about this bill, as it has become a matter of controversy between gentlemen upon the floor.

The Suburban Railway Company was chartered in 1892. It proceeded to organize and has spent upon the enterprise some $11,000. It had the hearty approbation of the gentlemen of the District of Columbia Committee and was reported without objection. The panic was such that they could not succeed in carrying out their enterprise. There was monetary embarrassment with them and all over the country. They have asked at the hands of Congress what nearly every railroad company in the District of Columbia has asked, an extension of their charter. They have been assailed and have been fought at nearly every stage by those interested in a great street railway syndicate, who are attempting to buy up and monopolize, as far as possible, the street railways of Washington, and whose power to influence and the various ways in which it may be exercised has been such that up to the present time, although this bill has been before the District of Columbia Committee for over a year, it has never had the opportunity of a fair hearing in the Senate. It has passed the other House, but has not been reported here.

I did not object to the railway bills which other gentlemen brought up, because I was assured by them that they did not belong to nor were they allied with those who were fighting this bill. But for that fact I would have objected to their bills, and I propose whenever I have the opportunity to object to the bills of those who, in my judgment, whatever may be the judgment of other gentlemen, have made an unjust opposition to a public enterprise, and who have denied to it a right which has been granted sometimes over and over again to other street railways in this District, and which some of them are asking now.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, as a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia I have favored reporting in favor of this bill. The committee was equally divided as to whether it should be favorably or adversely reported; and but for the course of the Senator from New York and the Senator from Virginia tonight in objecting to railroad bills in the District, where the committee was absolutely unanimous, I should stand here and urge the passage of this bill.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the Senator yield a moment?

Mr. HARRIS. I will.

Mr. DANIEL. Does the Senator undertake to say that the Senator from Virginia has objected to any other bill?

Mr. HARRIS. I do not undertake to say that the Senator from Virginia has, but I have been informed two or three times that the Senator from New York and the Senator from Virginia were resolved that no street railroad bill should be taken up until the Suburban Railway bill was considered.

Mr. DANIEL. I am not responsible for the Senator's information, but the fact is I did not.

Mr. HARRIS. Very well, I will exclude the Senator from Virginia; but the Senator from New York has shown it by his works. I object.

Mr. GORMAN and Mr. WHITE addressed the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Maryland. His name is next on the list.

ROCK CREEK RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8337) relative to the Rock Creek Railway Company of the District of Columbia.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAND IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 7834) for the relief of the bona fide purchasers of land in section 36, township 1 north, range 9 west (San Bernardino meridian), in the State of California.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

KANSAS CITY, PITTSBURG AND GULF RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. VEST. I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 8900) to amend section 9 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the Kansas City, Pittsburg and Gulf Railroad Company to construct and operate a railroad, telegraph, and telephone line through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes."

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY E. HAMILTON.

Mr. BATE. I ask to call up the bill (H. R. 6417) to pension Mary E. Hamilton, widow of David Hamilton, soldier in Indian war of 1818.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay a pension of $12 per month to Mrs. Mary E. Hamilton, of Williamson County, Tenn., she being the widow of David Hamilton, who served in the Indian war of 1818.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ACCOUNT BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND FLORIDA.

Mr. PASCO. I ask that the bill (S. 1286) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to settle the mutual account between the United States and the State of Florida, heretofore examined and stated by said Secretary, under the authority of the Congress, and for other purposes, be now considered.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILOXI AND BACK BAY BRIDGE COMPANY.

Mr. McLAURIN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8459) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Biloxi and Back Bay Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge over that portion of the bay of Biloxi, in the State of Mississippi, known as Back Bay."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MOUNT VERNON BARRACKS MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration at this time of the bill (H. R. 8690) granting the Mount Vernon Barracks Military Reservation to the State of Alabama for public uses.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JENNIE M. HUNT.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 817) for the relief of Jennie M. Hunt.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Jennie M. Hunt $2,040, being the difference between the salary appropriated to be paid to her as a clerk at $1,000 per annum in the office of the Postmaster-General, during the fiscal years ending the 30th day of June 1885, 1886, 1887, 1888, 1889, and 1890, and the salary that was paid to her during those years at the rate of $730 per annum as a clerk in the Dead-Letter Office of the Post-Office Department.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WASHINGTON AND MARLBORO ELECTRIC RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8698) to authorize the Washington and Marlboro Electric Railway Company of Maryland to extend its lines into and within the District of Columbia.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

Mr. HILL. I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill what motive power is provided when the railroad enters the city of Washington?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Horsepower, I think, is used. The road comes from away off in Anacostia, on the outskirts of the town, to Fifteenth street southeast until it gets up to Florida avenue, and then goes up Florida avenue to Seventh street northwest.

Mr. HILL. Horsepower is to be used in the city, I understand. From the hasty reading of the bill at the desk I was not able to ascertain as to that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia will be stated.

Mr. WOLCOTT. If the Chair will permit me, I desire to say that I was mistaken in my reply to the Senator from New York. It is provided that the company may use horses until they reach the city and then underground electric wires are to be used.

Mr. HILL. Can the Senator point out the section?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I will show it to the Senator.

The amendments reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia were, in section 1, line 22, after the word "by," to strike out "trestle or other," and insert "a steel or iron truss;" in line 23, after the word "bridge," to strike out "for the exclusive use of street railways, to be constructed on plans," and insert "resting on masonry piers built parallel to the direction of the current, with pile or other secure and approved foundations, and with spans not less than those of the Pennsylvania avenue bridge, and with a wide drawspan over the channel. The plans of said bridge shall be;" in line 29, after the word "approved," to insert "in writing;" in the same line, after the word "and," to insert "the bridge shall be;" in line 30, after the word "above," to strike out "said river and;" in line 32, after the words "not to," to strike out "unreasonably obstruct the navigation of said river nor;" in line 35, before the word "street," to strike out "Fourteenth" and insert "Fifteenth;" in line 37, before the word "street," to strike out "Fourteenth" and insert "Fifteenth;" after the word "east," at the end of the same line, to strike out "or other route as the said Commissioners may designate, to or near the intersection of Maryland," and insert "to Florida;" in line 39, after the word "avenue," to strike out "and H street northeast;" and in line 40, after the word "northeast," to insert "thence northwesterly on Florida avenue to Seventh street northwest;" so as to make the section read:

That the Washington and Marlboro Electric Railway Company, incorporated by an act of the general assembly of Maryland entitled "An act to incorporate the Washington and Marlboro Electric Railway Company," etc., approved on the 8th day of April, 1890, is hereby authorized to construct and lay down a street railway, with the necessary switches, turn-outs, and other mechanical devices, in the District of Columbia, and run cars thereon through and along the following routes:

Beginning at and on the southeasterly boundary line of the District of Columbia where the line of railway of said company within the State of Maryland shall reach the same, and running thence by Suitland road, Bowen road, and Branch avenue, or other practicable route which may be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, to connect with Pennsylvania avenue extended; thence by and with said avenue to and across the tracks of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad on Railroad avenue; thence along Railroad avenue to Naylor road and by the same to the Anacostia River; thence across the Anacostia River by a steel or iron truss bridge resting on masonry piers built parallel to the direction of the current, with pile or other secure and approved foundations, and with spans not less than those of the Pennsylvania avenue bridge, and with a wide drawspan over the channel. The plans of said bridge shall be approved in writing by the Secretary of War, and the bridge shall be built by said company over and above the tracks of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad in such manner and at such height as not to interfere with the use of said railroad; and thence to the intersection of Pennsylvania avenue and Fifteenth street southeast by a route to be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia; thence north on Fifteenth street east to Florida avenue; thence northwesterly on Florida avenue to Seventh street northwest; also, when the proposed extension of Pennsylvania avenue shall have been completed to Bowen road, then the route of said railroad may be extended from the intersection of Branch avenue therewith to Bowen road, and by further practicable route as may be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to the boundary line of the said District at or near the Suitland road: Provided, That such extension of the road shall be made within one year after the opening of Pennsylvania avenue to the Bowen road. These routes may be modified or extended at the will of Congress, and the said railway company shall comply with such modifications or extensions.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and ask for a committee of conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. HARRIS, Mr. FAULKNER, and Mr. McMILLAN were appointed.

ALEXANDER M. LAUGHLIN.

Mr. KYLE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8884) granting a pension to Alexander M. Laughlin, which is not upon the Calendar, but which passed the other House and came over to-day.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Alexander M. Laughlin, who was a private in the company of Capt. George B. Willis, Fortieth Regiment, Fourth Brigade, First Division of the Illinois State Militia, and who served as such in the Indian war of 1832, known as the Black Hawk war, and pay to him a pension of $12 per month.

Mr. CHANDLER. Has this bill been reported from the Committee on Pensions of the Senate?

Mr. KYLE. It has passed the House of Representatives and been passed upon favorably by the Committee on Pensions here also.

Mr. CULLOM. The bill is for the benefit of a man 80 years old.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROTECTION OF FOREST RESERVATIONS.

Mr. TELLER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 119) to protect public forest reservations.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported by the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That all public lands heretofore set apart and reserved by the President of the United States under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1891, or that may hereafter be set aside and reserved as public forest reservations, shall be, as far as practicable, controlled and administered in accordance with the provisions of this act.

SEC. 2. That no public forest reservations shall be established except to improve and protect the forest within the reservation or for the purpose of securing favorable conditions of water flow and to insure a continuous supply of timber for the people of the States wherein such forest reservations are located; but it is not the purpose of this act to authorize the inclusion within such forest reservations lands more valuable for the mineral thereon or for agricultural purposes than for timber.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior shall make provisions for the protection against fire and depredations of the public forest and forest reservations set aside, or that may be set aside, under the said act of March 3, 1891, and he may make such rules and regulations and establish such service as will insure the objects of such reservations, namely, to regulate their occupancy and use, and to preserve the forest from destruction. And any violation of the provisions of this act or such rules and regulations shall be punishable as is provided for in the act of June 4, 1888, amending section 5388 of the Revised Statutes of the United States: Provided, That for the sole purpose of preserving the living and growing timber on forest reservations and to fully and better protect the same, the Secretary of the Interior, under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe, may eliminate therefrom so much only of the dead or matured trees thereon as may be necessary to preserve the remaining timber, and to carry out the purpose of this section the Secretary of the Interior shall carefully designate, appraise, and advertise for sale by proper description said dead or matured trees for not less than sixty days in a newspaper of general circulation published within the State or Territory nearest to the reservation, and also in a newspaper in the county in which the timber is situated, if any is published, offering for sale at not less than the appraised value, in limited quantities to each purchaser, the said dead or matured timber, payments therefor to be made to the receiver of the local land office of the district wherein said timber is situated, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe. The proceeds of all such sales shall be accounted for by the receiver of such land office in a separate account, and shall be covered into the Treasury as a special fund, to be expended in the care and management of said reservations under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, or as Congress may provide. Such timber before being sold shall be marked and designated, and shall not be cut or removed from such reservation except under the immediate personal supervision of some person appointed for that purpose who shall not be interested in the purchase or removal of such timber nor in the employ of the parties so purchasing or removing such timber, and he shall make report in writing to the receiver of the land office in which such reservation shall be located: And provided further, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to prevent the Secretary of the Interior from permitting, under regulations to be prescribed by him, the use of timber and stone free of charge to bona fide settlers, miners, residents, and prospectors for minerals, for firewood, for fencing, building, mining, or prospecting purposes. And nothing herein shall be construed to exclude the settlers residing within the boundaries of such reservation, or in the immediate vicinity thereof, from pasturing their cattle on the said reservations, nor shall anything herein prohibit the egress or ingress of actual settlers residing within the boundaries of such reservations, or from crossing the same to get to their property or homes, or from constructing such wagon roads as may be necessary to reach their homes and property, nor shall anything herein prohibit any persons from entering upon such forest reserves: Provided, That they comply with the statutes covering such forest reservations.

SEC. 4. That whenever it shall be shown to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that any timber on such public lands as are not fit for cultivation, and are not within any forest reservation, may be cut and removed without injury to the public interest, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to sell the same and apply the proceeds in the manner heretofore prescribed in this act: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may grant permits free of cost to cut and use timber for the construction of bridges, schoolhouses, or other structures for public use in the vicinity of such timber, and that bona fide residents on the public lands and prospectors for minerals may be permitted to take timber from the public lands, under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, for firewood, fencing, or building purposes upon their claims, but not for sale or speculation: And provided further, That no timber on public lands shall be cut and removed or disposed of except in accordance with the provisions of this act.

SEC. 5. That any bona fide entry man, who has heretofore made proper filing upon land, or has obtained a patent, and who has, by the proclamation of the President, been included within any forest reservation of the United States, or any such entry man who may hereafter be included within a forest reservation, may, if he so desires, relinquish the same to the Government, and in lieu thereof may select and have patented to him, free of charge, a tract of land of like area whereover there are public lands open for settlement.

That any bona fide settler whose lands have been or may hereafter be included within a forest reservation may apply to the Secretary of the Interior to have his lands and improvements appraised, and on such application the Secretary of the Interior shall cause said lands and improvements to be appraised and the value thereof determined; and if the settler accepts the finding of such appraiser and shall so notify the Secretary of the Interior within six months after notice of such appraisement, the Secretary of the Interior shall include the amount so returned by such appraiser in his estimate of his Department for the ensuing year, and the settler shall be paid for his land and improvements in accordance with such appraisement.

The settlers residing within the boundaries of such forest reservations or in the vicinity thereof may maintain schools and churches within such reservation, and for that purpose may occupy any of the said forest reservation not exceeding two acres for each schoolhouse and one acre for a church.

The State wherein such forest reservations are situated shall have civil and criminal jurisdiction over persons within such reservations. Nothing herein shall be construed to prohibit the use of any and all water on such reservations for domestic use or for the purpose of irrigation under the laws of the State wherein such forest reserves are situated.

SEC. 6. That upon the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior, with the approval of the President, after sixty days' notice published in two papers of general circulation in the State wherein any forest reservation is situated, and nearest to said reservation, any public lands embraced within the limits of any forest reservation which, after due examination by personal inspection of a competent person appointed for that purpose by the Secretary of the Interior, shall be found better adapted for mining or for agricultural purposes than forest uses may be restored to the public domain; and any lands in any forest reservation the mineral character of which has been or may be shown in accordance with the existing mining laws of the United States and the rules and regulations applying thereto shall be restored to mineral location and entry: Provided also, That prospectors and mineral claimants shall have access to such forest reservations for the purpose of prospecting, locating, and developing the mineral resources thereof.

SEC. 7. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TELLER. I move that the Senate ask for a committee of conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. ALLEN, Mr. KYLE, and Mr. TELLER were appointed.

PORT M'PHERSON MILITARY RESERVATION, NEBR.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1482) to open to settlement and provide for the disposal of the public lands of Fort McPherson Military Reservation, in the State of Nebraska, and for other purposes.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, in section 1, line 5, after the word "Reservation," to insert "and the lands in the reservation in Sheridan County, Nebr., known as Camp Sheridan Military Reservation;" so as to read:

That the public lands now remaining and undisposed of within the reservation in Lincoln County, Nebr., known as Fort McPherson Military Reservation, and the lands in the reservation in Sheridan County, Nebr., known as Camp Sheridan Military Reservation, as well as all public lands withdrawn from settlement and attached thereto, by Presidential proclamation or otherwise, are hereby made subject to disposal under the homestead laws of the United States only.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to open to settlement and provide for the disposal of the public lands at Fort McPherson and Camp Sheridan Military reservations, in the State of Nebraska, and for other purposes."

PUNISHMENT OF MURDER AND OTHER CRIMES.

Mr. VILAS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5836) to define the crimes of murder in the first and second degrees, manslaughter, rape, mutiny, and desertion, to provide punishment therefor, and to abolish the death penalty for other crimes.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. VILAS. Inasmuch as the report of the committee setting out the amendments is in the nature of a substitute, I ask that the bill be read as amended to save time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection that course will be pursued.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

The first amendment was to strike out section 1, as follows:

That whoever, within any fort, arsenal, dockyard, magazine, or any other place or district of country under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, or upon the high seas or any arm of the sea, or in any river, haven, creek, basin, or bay within the admiralty jurisdiction of the United States and out of the jurisdiction of any particular State, by administering poison, or causing the same to be done, or by lying in wait, or by any other kind of willful, deliberate, malicious, and premeditated killing, or in the perpetration of, or in the attempt to perpetrate any rape, arson, robbery, or burglary kills any human being, is guilty of murder in the first degree, and upon conviction shall suffer death.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 2, as follows:

SEC. 2. That whoever, within any of the places named or upon or in any of the waters mentioned in the preceding section, purposely and maliciously, but without premeditation, kills any human being, is guilty of murder in the second degree, and upon conviction thereof shall be imprisoned at hard labor during life, or for such shorter term as the court may in its discretion affix, not less than five years.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 3, as follows:

SEC. 3. That whoever, within any of the places or upon or in any of the waters mentioned in the first section, unlawfully kills any human being without malice, express or implied, either voluntary upon sudden heat, or involuntarily, but in the commission of an unlawful act, is guilty of manslaughter, and upon conviction thereof shall be imprisoned at hard labor for twenty years, or such shorter term as the court may in its discretion affix, not less than two years.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 4, as follows:

SEC. 4. That whoever within any of the places, or upon or in any of the waters mentioned in the first section, shall ravish and carnally know any female is guilty of rape, and upon conviction shall suffer death.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to change the numbering of section 5 to section 1, and in line 2 of that section, before the word "crime," to strike out "a" and insert "the;" in the same line, after the word "crime," to strike out "for which the punishment provided by this act is death" and insert "of murder or of rape under sections 5339 or 5345, Revised Statutes;" so as to make the section read:

SECTION 1. That in all cases where the accused is found guilty of the crime of murder or of rape under sections 5339 or 5345, Revised Statutes, the jury may qualify their verdict by adding thereto "without capital punishment;" and whenever the jury shall return a verdict qualified as aforesaid the person convicted shall be sentenced to imprisonment at hard labor for life.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 6, as follows:

SEC. 6. That whoever, after having been regularly enlisted and mustered into the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, and during the time of his service, deserts to the enemy in time of war shall be guilty of desertion, and upon conviction by a military or naval court shall suffer death on approval of the proceedings and findings of such court by the President of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 7, as follows:

SEC. 7. That whoever, after having been regularly enlisted and mustered into the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, and during his term of service, shall instigate or lead in any aggravated mutiny is guilty of mutiny, and upon conviction thereof by a military or naval court shall suffer death, on approval of the proceedings and findings of such court by the President of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 8, as follows:

SEC. 8. That a military or naval court-martial may adjudge the punishment of imprisonment for life at hard labor in any case where it is authorized to adjudge the punishment of death.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to change the numbering of section 9 to section 2, and in line 1, after the word "That," to strike out "except offenses mentioned in sections 1342, 1624, 5339, and 5345, Revised Statutes, when;" in line 5, before the word "convicting," to insert "is;" in line 7, after the words "United States," to strike out "other than those of murder, manslaughter, rape, desertion, and mutiny" and insert "he;" in line 9, after the word "life," to strike out "or for such shorter time as the court in its discretion may affix;" in line 10, before the word "any," to insert "when;" in line 11, before the word "convicted," to insert "is;" in line 12, after the word "or," to strike out "such other" and insert "a lesser;" in the same line, after the word "punishment," to strike out "as" and insert "in the discretion of;" in line 13, after the word "court," to strike out "may in its discretion direct;" and in line 14, after the word "life," to strike out "or for such shorter term as the court may in its discretion affix;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That except offenses mentioned in sections 1342, 1624, 5339, and 5345, Revised Statutes, when a person is convicted of any offense to which the punishment of death is now specifically affixed by the laws of the United States, he shall be sentenced to imprisonment at hard labor for life, and when any person is convicted of an offense to which the punishment of death, or a lesser punishment, in the discretion of the court, is affixed, the maximum punishment shall be imprisonment at hard labor for life.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to change the numbering of "section 10" to "section 3," and in line 3, after the words "United States," to strike out "other than those of murder, manslaughter, rape, desertion, and mutiny" and insert "except in sections 1342, 1624, 5339, and 5345, Revised Statutes;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That the punishment of death prescribed for any offense specified by the statutes of the United States, except in sections 1342, 1624, 5339, and 5345, Revised Statutes, is hereby abolished, and all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to change the numbering of "section 11" to "section 4," and in line 8, after the word "section," to strike out "five" and insert "one," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That nothing herein contained shall apply to or in any way affect any proceeding or indictment now found or pending or that may be found for any offense committed before the passage of this act, and all offenses committed before the passage of this act shall be punished under the laws then in force: Provided, That juries may return qualified verdicts in such cases according to the provisions of section 1 of this act, and the sentences shall be imposed as therein provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 12, as follows:

SEC. 12. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to know from what committee this bill is reported.

Mr. VILAS. This is a bill which has been passed by the House of Representatives and very carefully considered by the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate.

Mr. CULLOM. It is a very important bill.

Mr. VILAS. It is an important bill, but it is one which has been very much urged by General Curtis, of New York. The Senator knows the history of that matter. The bill has been very carefully considered. I trust there will be no objection to its consideration.

Mr. CULLOM. I wish the Senator in charge of the bill would explain it within his five minutes.

Mr. VILAS. In one word. Let me first, however, propose an amendment, which is merely verbal. On the second page, in the renumbering of the sections, "Sec. 1" should be omitted, a number not being necessary there, because the first section immediately follows the enacting clause of the bill. I move that that amendment be made.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VILAS. In the second line, on page 4, section 2, as the bill is now printed, after the words "thirteen hundred and forty-two," there should be inserted "thirteen hundred and forty-three," referring to a section of the Revised Statutes. I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VILAS. This bill simply provides that, except for offenses provided for in the Articles of War and the Articles of the Navy, except in the case of spies in time of war or rebellion and except murder and rape, the death penalty shall be abolished and imprisonment for life substituted therefor, and in case of murder and rape it shall be competent for the jury to find a qualified verdict of murder, adding to the verdict of guilty the words "without capital punishment," in which case imprisonment for life shall be the extreme penalty.

Mr. MANDERSON. What about the crime of treason?

Mr. VILAS. The crime of treason is practically unknown in the United States.

Mr. HAWLEY. No, sir.

Mr. MANDERSON. I do not know about that.

Mr. VILAS. That is to say by judgment of the court, trial, and conviction.

Mr. HAWLEY. What is the punishment?

Mr. VILAS. The bill does not except the crime of treason. It leaves that to imprisonment for life.

Mr. HAWLEY. What is the punishment now?

Mr. VILAS. It would change it in that respect.

Mr. MANDERSON. Does not the Senator from Wisconsin think the crime of treason, which certainly is a possible crime in any country, carries in its train about all the crimes of the Decalogue?

Mr. VILAS. That was my own view and argument, and I shall make no objection if anybody chooses to insert it—

Mr. MANDERSON. I think it should be inserted.

Mr. VILAS. If it is desired to insert the exception of the crime of treason.

Mr. CULLOM. It seems to me that for the Senate to pass a bill like the pending one, involving nearly all the more serious crimes and changing the law in a large degree, is rather a strain upon what is proper for an occasion like this, when we are proceeding under the five-minute rule.

Mr. VILAS. Will the Senator from Illinois permit me for a moment?

Mr. CULLOM. Certainly.

Mr. VILAS. The bill has been considered in the House of Representatives. It is the result of an immense deal of labor on the part of a man who has acted as a philanthropist and humanitarian—

Mr. CULLOM. I am aware of that.

Mr. VILAS. And who after great labor has secured the passage of the bill by the House of Representatives. It has been carefully considered in the Committee of the Judiciary by a special subcommittee, and it was considered and reported by the full committee.

Mr. CULLOM. When did the bill come to the Senate?

Mr. VILAS. On January 12, 1895.

Mr. FRYE. Did the Judiciary Committee agree to the bill?

Mr. VILAS. There was no dissent in the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator from Wisconsin states that the Judiciary Committee gave the bill thorough consideration and unanimously agreed in its favor I shall make no objection to it; but it does seem to me that it is a very important bill to pass at this time of night, when it is understood that we are considering bills by unanimous consent.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I will state, if the Senator from Illinois will allow me, that, being a House bill, it was referred to a subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee, and it received very thorough examination by the subcommittee. I was not a member of the subcommittee. They reported to the full committee, and it was discussed on more than one occasion at considerable length and agreed to unanimously.

Mr. HAWLEY. I hope the Senator from Wisconsin will—

Mr. TURPIE. I think this legislation proposes too serious a change of existing law to be passed without full discussion in the Senate, and I object to the further consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana objects to the further consideration of the bill.

CAPITAL RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to consider at this time the bill (H. R. 8714) to incorporate the Capital Railway Company.

Mr. ALDRICH. I object to the bill. I think we have passed enough railroad bills for one night.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection.

ST. LOUIS RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. WASHBURN. I ask unanimous consent to take from the table House bill 8327 for present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the bill (H. R. 8327) to authorize the Wisconsin and New Duluth Bridge Company to construct a bridge over the St. Louis River between the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota.

Mr. WASHBURN. I will state that a bill corresponding precisely in terms to this bill has been approved by the Committee on Commerce, and was reported from that committee and is now on the Calendar. I propose to ask the Senate to pass the House bill in lieu of the Senate bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WASHBURN. I move that the bill (S. 2728) to authorize the Wisconsin and New Duluth Bridge Company to construct a bridge over the St. Louis River between the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

THOMAS B. REED.

Mr. CAMERON. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3150) for the relief of Thomas B. Reed.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to refer to the Court of Claims the claim of Thomas B. Reed, who served as sergeant, first sergeant, and first lieutenant Fifth Pennsylvania Reserve Corps, and captain Two hundred and fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers of the United States Army in the late war of the rebellion, for a balance of wages earned by him in the suppression of the rebellion and during his entire time of service in the Army, and not paid to him.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DUES TO ARMY OFFICERS.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2297) to provide for the restatement, readjustment, settlement, and payment of dues to army officers in certain cases.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was, in line 6, to insert the words "Colonel Edmund B. Alexander."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 37, to insert "Col. Thomas L. Young, Gen. William W. Lowe, and Capt. William Fletcher."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I offer an amendment to the bill.

Mr. GORMAN. I am compelled to object to the further consideration of the bill. It is a matter involving too much money—a half million dollars or more.

Mr. DAVIS. I trust the Senator from Maryland will not object until I have a moment to explain the character of the bill.

Mr. GORMAN. Of course I withdraw the objection.

Mr. DAVIS. I presume it seldom happens that a bill is reported to this body which has been examined in so many aspects and in so many ways and with so much care by various tribunals and committees as the one now under consideration. It involves the claim of various old army officers for the additional rations for every five years of service. The bill which has just passed on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] is just such a bill for the relief of an individual who is not included in the pending bill.

The question has been one of litigation for many years, and has been settled by the Supreme Court of the United States in the Watson case in every conceivable aspect in which it can be considered. It has been settled the same way by the Court of Claims. In the Pullman case, during the last Congress, the Military Committee, after an exhaustive examination of the law of the case, reported a bill favorably upon the lines of the present bill.

With the matter being settled in that way by the courts, by the action of this body, by the action of Congress, it has been deemed better, in view of the pressure upon the Military Affairs Committee by all of these gentlemen for their relief, to allow the Treasury Department to adjudicate those claims if they fall within the classes of men who are entitled to pay for longevity rations for each five years' service. It has been settled by the Supreme Court, the Court of Claims, this body; the House of Representatives has just passed a bill to the same effect, and there is no reason why the labor of the Military Affairs Committee should not be alleviated by the passage of the pending bill.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Minnesota kindly state about what amount is involved in the bill?

Mr. DAVIS. I should say perhaps $400,000.

Mr. GORMAN. More than that.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota another question. If those officers are entitled to this longevity pay, why do they not get it now?

Mr. DAVIS. Simply because of the operation of one of those instances of bureaucratic perversity that no man can explain.

Mr. CHANDLER. Is not the statute of limitations—

Mr. DAVIS. There is no statute of limitations about it. General Grant got his pay of this kind as a West Point cadet, General

Rosecrans got his, General Kilpatrick got his, and then the Comptroller of the Treasury shut down. Then these individual suits of Watson and others were instituted, and as fast as these men can go through the Court of Claims and the Supreme Court they get their money. It is a claim as well settled as our claim to our salary; it has been adjudicated by the Supreme Court of the United States, and then the Government, through its subordinate officers, stands it off in the way I have described.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Does the bill profess to include by name all the officers entitled to this longevity pay?

Mr. DAVIS. I should feel inclined to say it substantially includes them all. I will not say all.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The Senator is not absolutely certain about it?

Mr. DAVIS. No, sir; but substantially and materially. They are men who have served a long period of years, so that each five years brings them additional pay in the way of rations.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Suppose it should turn out that there are others not named in the bill; they would not be entitled to the benefits of the bill?

Mr. DAVIS. No, sir; not of this bill. They would get special relief.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Could there not be a general clause put in the bill, then, to cover all similar cases?

Mr. DAVIS. I shall be content with the bill as it is.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The Senator from Minnesota might be content. The question is whether those who are not named would be content.

Mr. DAVIS. Perhaps not; but as the manager of the bill I do not ask an amendment in that respect. There are some reasons why I do not ask it.

Mr. MANDERSON. There are other officers named in the amendments proposed to be offered to the bill.

Mr. DAVIS. They are included in the amendment which I have offered.

Mr. MANDERSON. There are two or three in addition which will substantially include all who are in this situation.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I know nothing about the matter, and the reason I make the inquiry is that some time ago I received letters in relation to it, and the matter entirely slipped my mind until now. One letter that I remember was from an army officer now located in the Senator's State.

Mr. DAVIS. If there are any cases of that kind the bill can be amended in the other House. It is a Senate bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. For what period of time will the accounts of these officers be restated and readjusted?

Mr. DAVIS. Take the case of Captain Fletcher, the oldest captain in the Army, who entered the service in 1844—

Mr. CHANDLER. It readjusts his pay during the whole period?

Mr. DAVIS. It does not readjust it at all. It gives him what has been wrongfully withheld.

Mr. CHANDLER. It does readjust his pay. The Senator keeps repeating that the officers are entitled to it.

Mr. DAVIS. I repeat the statement so as to enable the Senator from New Hampshire to understand it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am very dull—

Mr. DAVIS. I see the Senator is.

Mr. CHANDLER. And I am trying to understand as well as I can what the Senator from Minnesota states so lucidly. If the Senator from Minnesota does not want me to ask questions I shall not ask any.

Mr. DAVIS. I will answer as best I can any question the Senator cares to ask.

Mr. CHANDLER. I object to the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection.

Mr. DAVIS. Does the Senator from New Hampshire object to the bill?

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes, sir.

MRS. MARY TASSIN.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 2664) to increase the pension of Mrs. Mary Tassin.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The Committee on Pensions report an amendment, in line 4, to strike out the word "fifty" and insert "twenty-five."

The SECRETARY. In line 4 it is proposed to strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty-five;" so as to make the bill read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to increase to the sum of $25 per month the pension of Mrs. Mary Tassin, widow of Augustus G. Tassin, late first lieutenant Twelfth Regiment United States Infantry; said pension to be in lieu of pension numbered 322242.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TIMBER AND STONE LANDS.

Mr. CAREY. I ask unanimous consent to call up at this time the bill (H. R. 7259) for the relief of certain settlers who have entered lands under the timber and stone act, etc.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senator from Wyoming if the bill has been reported from the Committee on Public Lands?

Mr. CAREY. It is a bill which has been reported unanimously by the Committee on Public Lands. The Government does not now offer any of such lands at public sale. The bill merely provides that lands which were offered at private sale and not sold shall be subject to the timber and stone law. It removes the restriction.

Mr. HARRIS. The bill was unanimously reported?

Mr. CAREY. Yes, sir; and it is approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EMMET CRAWFORD.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask the Senate to consider the bill (S. 1074) for the relief of the estate of Emmet Crawford, deceased, late captain of the Third Regiment, United States Cavalry.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 7, to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "five," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the administrator of the estate of the late Emmet Crawford, captain, Third United States Cavalry, deceased, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000; the said Crawford having been killed by Mexican soldiers in the Republic of Mexico while acting there under the orders of his military superiors, under treaty stipulations between the Governments of Mexico and the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HELMUTH F. SÖCKEL.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2090) to remove the charge of desertion and grant an honorable discharge to Helmuth F. Söckel.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of War to remove the charge of desertion now standing against the record of Helmuth F. Söckel, late private Company C, Sixteenth Regiment Connecticut Volunteers, and grant an honorable discharge.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GLENMORE DISTILLING COMPANY, OF KENTUCKY.

Mr. LINDSAY. I ask to call up the bill (H. R. 8572) for the relief of Glenmore Distilling Company, of Daviess County, Ky.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to Glenmore Distilling Company, of Daviess County, Ky., $5,180, paid for stamps for distilled spirits on the 6th day of April, 1893, which spirits were destroyed by fire before the stamps were received at the distillery.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT OAKLAND, CAL.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 2754) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Oakland, in the State of California.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to acquire a site and erect thereon a suitable building for the use of the Government offices in the city of Oakland, Cal., the cost of the site and building not to exceed $250,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CALVARY CATHEDRAL, SIOUX FALLS, S. DAK.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 934) for the relief of the Chapter of Calvary Cathedral, Sioux Falls, S. Dak.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to the treasurer of the Chapter of Calvary Cathedral, in the city of Sioux Falls, S. Dak., $2,430, being the amount due for two quarters ending respectively December 30, 1891, and March 30, 1892, for board and tuition for Indian pupils at the Hope Indian Boarding School at Springfield, S. Dak., as per contract duly executed with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS CORIGAN.

Mr. ALLISON. I call up the bill (H. R. 5260) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Corigan.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place on the invalid pension roll of the United States the name of Thomas Corigan, late a member of Company B of the Eighty-eighth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of $50 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FIRST STATE BANK OF MOUND CITY, ILL.

Mr. DUBOIS. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 8246) for the relief of the First State Bank of Mound City, Ill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to refund to the First State Bank of Mound City, Ill., $592.17, being the amount of pension check issued by I. Clements, as pension agent at Chicago, Ill., bearing date July 26, 1890, and payable to the order of Ida Hudson (now Ida Carter), and which was cashed by the First State Bank of Mound City, Ill., and was after the time of payment supposed to bear the forged indorsement of the payee, and which indorsement has since been ascertained to be genuine.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARYLAND AND WASHINGTON RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. GIBSON. I renew my request to call up the bill (H. R. 8638) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Maryland and Washington Railway Company," approved August 1, 1892, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, I do not rise to make opposition to the bill, but I do rise to ask a question about it, which is suggested by what I find in the report of the Committee of the District of Columbia in favor of Senate bill 2361, which I understand is the same as this, this being the House bill. The Senate report says:

The bill under consideration as amended changes the original act by leaving out the provision prohibiting consolidation with any other company, or the sale of the franchise before the completion of the road, and by prescribing at length the steps to be taken in the condemnation proceedings for the acquirement of the necessary land, which is not done in the act.

I find that the original charter of this company, which was passed in 1892, provides—

That it shall be unlawful for the company hereby incorporated to consolidate with any other railroad company now in existence, or which may hereafter be chartered, and any such consolidation shall of itself operate as a forfeiture of this charter.

Here is a corporation seeking enlarged privileges from Congress. I have no objection to it, and I do not rise either to embarrass my friend in the advocacy of the measure which he has called up or to make any except a bona fide inquiry on the subject. It has attracted my attention as a specific change made by the Committee on the District of Columbia, and I should like to know why it is that in this charter they have left out the provisions heretofore contained in the law prohibiting consolidation.

There has been objection made, I will say while I am upon my feet, to a bill of which I have the honor to be the patron, and if I knew what were the objections to it I would have endeavored to have answered them. I think it is an act of friendship rather than one of criticism or impediment to state what may be the objections to the measures which are before the Senate, that all of us may have a fair opportunity to remedy the objection if it be a just one, or in a brief time, if we may, without unduly detaining the Senate, overcome the objections and pass the measure.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. DANIEL. With pleasure.

Mr. HARRIS. I objected to the bill that the Senator asked to have considered. I stated, I thought distinctly, the reason why. I favored in committee the favorable report of the bill the Senator from Virginia asked to have considered, but there had been objection on the floor. As I stated then, but the Senator from Virginia corrected me, I was informed that the Senator from New York and the Senator from Virginia had resolved to allow no District of Columbia railroad bills to pass until the bill that they desired to have considered should pass.

From the standpoint of one who favored the passage of the bill the Senator from Virginia was urging (and I am ready still to favor it) I was not willing to allow those gentlemen to thwart the passage of bills where the District Committee was absolutely unanimous in reporting them favorably. If the bills we have favorably and unanimously reported can be considered, I was in committee, as I am now, in favor of passing the bill the Senator from Virginia desires to have passed.

Mr. DANIEL. It was not to the Senator's objection that I was alluding, but there were anterior objections.

Mr. HARRIS. Very well; I objected and thwarted the Senator in the bill he was proposing to have considered.

Mr. DANIEL. There was an objection already pending when the Senator made his objection.

Mr. HARRIS. I was not aware of that.

Mr. DANIEL. It was made by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], who kindly yielded in courtesy to me to make an explanation. My desire was to know what was the objection to the bill, that, if it was not a sufficient one, it might be voted down.

Mr. FAULKNER. In answer to the Senator from Virginia in reference to the striking out of the clause in the original charter, I will state that the bill allows a consolidation for this reason: The road only comes about three-quarters of a mile within the District of Columbia—a very short distance. It is really the road between here and Baltimore. They have a Maryland charter. The same parties really have this charter, and there must be a consolidation in reference to the road throughout. That was the purpose in leaving out that provision.

Mr. DANIEL. It was not with a view of a general consolidation of the railroads of the District?

Mr. FAULKNER. Not at all. It was simply with reference to the connection of the road between here and Baltimore.

Mr. DANIEL. Now, would the Senator be willing to put in the amendment to this bill—I do not wish to delay or embarrass my friend from Maryland about it—that would authorize that consolidation in any other case? Would he be willing to do that?

Mr. GORMAN. The bill would have to go back to the other House with the amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. What is the bill before the Senate?

Mr. DANIEL. I shall not object to the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is still in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOUISA C. CONWELL.

Mr. PEPPER. I ask leave to call up the bill (H. R. 4935) granting a pension to Louisa C. Conwell.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place on the pension roll, at the rate of $12 per month, the name of Louisa C. Conwell, of Burlingame, Osage County, Kans., mother of the late James M. Conwell, late of Company E, Eleventh Regiment Kansas Volunteer Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HARBOR REGULATIONS FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. PROCTOR. I ask that the bill (S. 1503) to establish harbor regulations for the District of Columbia be taken up.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AUGUSTUS G. KELLOGG.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1905) for the relief of Augustus G. Kellogg.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, in line 10, after the words "United States," to insert "to date from the passage of this act;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to place Commander Augustus G. Kellogg upon the list of officers of the Navy who have been retired on account of incapacity resulting from long and faithful service, from wounds or injuries received in the line of duty, or from sickness and exposure therein, as provided for in section 1593 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to date from the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALE OF MILK IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 8331) to regulate the sale of milk in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

Mr. FAULKNER. The first amendment I desire to have made is on page 2, line 17. I move to strike out all of section 1, after the word "officer," in that line, and insert:

Whenever the milk supply from said dairy or dairy farm is exposed to infection by Asiatic cholera, anthrax, diphtheria, erysipelas, scarlet fever, smallpox, splenic fever, tuberculosis, typhoid fever, typhus fever, or yellow fever, so as to render its distribution dangerous to public health.

Mr. HILL. Would it be proper to add any other kind of fever at that point? [Laughter.]

Mr. GALLINGER. Those are all the kinds we could think of.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FAULKNER. There is another committee amendment in section 2 which I desire agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 2, line 14, before the word "be," it is proposed to insert "shall," and after the word "be" to insert "with knowledge of its impurity;" and in line 18, after the word "Columbia," to insert "approved by District of Columbia Commissioners;" so as so read:

That no person shall bring or send into the District of Columbia for sale any milk without a permit so to do from the health officer of said District; application for said permit shall be made in writing, upon a form prescribed by said health officer, and shall be accompanied by such detailed description of the dairy farm or dairy where said milk is produced or stored as said health officer may require, and by a sworn statement as to the physical condition of the cattle supplying said milk. If after examination of said application said health officer is satisfied that said milk will be brought into the District of Columbia for sale or consumption without danger to public health, he shall issue, without charge to the applicant, a permit so to do, on condition that none but pure and unadulterated milk shall be, with knowledge of its impurity, brought into said District; that in the management of said dairy or dairy farm said applicant shall be governed by the regulations of the health officer of the District of Columbia, approved by District of Columbia Commissioners, issued for dairies and dairy farms in said District, when said regulations do not conflict with the law of the State in which said dairy or dairy farm is located, and that said dairy or dairy farm may be inspected at any time without notice by the health officer of the District of Columbia or his duly appointed representative, etc.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask the Senator if it would not be better, in line 18, to transpose the words of the amendment so as to read: "Approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia."

Mr. FAULKNER. Yes; let those words be transposed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be so modified, in the absence of objection. The question is on the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. FAULKNER. I now send to the desk an amendment to section 2.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 2, line 26, it is proposed, after the words "health officer," to strike out "when, in his judgment, found after such analysis as is provided for in the first section, milk from said dairy or dairy farm is dangerous to public health," and insert "whenever the milk supply from said dairy or dairy farm is exposed to infection by Asiatic cholera, anthrax, diphtheria, erysipelas, scarlet fever, smallpox, splenic fever, tuberculosis, typhoid fever, typhus fever, or yellow fever, so as to render its distribution dangerous to public health."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on the District of Columbia was, in section 3, line 1, after the word "has," to insert "knowingly," and, in line 7, after the word "shall," to insert "knowingly;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That no person suffering from, or who has knowingly within a period specified by the health officer of the District of Columbia, been exposed to diphtheria, scarlet fever, erysipelas, smallpox, anthrax, or other dangerous contagious disease, shall work or assist in or about any dairy or dairy farm; no proprietor, manager, or superintendent of any dairy or dairy farm within the District of Columbia shall knowingly permit any person suffering, or exposed as aforesaid, to work or assist in or about said dairy or dairy farm.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, line 1, after the word "shall," to insert "knowingly," and in line 4, after the word "cows," to strike out "that for the most part are kept tied up in stables, or;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 6. That no person shall knowingly offer or have for sale in the District of Columbia any unwholesome, watered, or adulterated milk, or milk known as swill milk, or milk from cows that are fed on swill, garbage, or other like substance, nor any butter or cheese made from any such milk.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 7, after the word "shall," to insert "knowingly;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 7. That no person shall knowingly offer or have for sale any milk containing more than 88 per cent of watery fluid and less than 12 per cent of total milk solids, of which at least 3 per cent shall be of fat.
